I have no doubt as to the fair attitude of the rank and file of the soldiers, but there is danger that a number of individuals and smaller groups claiming to speak for the veteran will prejudice public sentiment not only against themselves but against those as well who are free from blame. This is something that should be guarded against, not only in the interest of the sol-diers but also in the interest of the country as a whole.

What we must seek for and what we must find, as nearly as possible, is a proper basis upon which to establish justice and fair dealing. In many cases the Government has no doubt been fair dealing. wronged, and in many other cases injustice has been suffered by individual veterans. To weed out the wrong and to establish the right is not an easy task, but I have faith that there is a general disposition to be just and that the near future will bear out this faith. Injustice will not be tolerated, but, in spite of all we can do, perfection cannot be reached. We must be patient, reasonable and fair. Let us not speak words in haste and anger which able, and fair. Let us not speak words in haste and anger which may give us cause for regret in days to come.

Much dissatisfaction has been expressed by soldiers over the Economy Act, and in some instances the administration has been charged with a disposition to be cruel and unjust to service men. I feel satisfied that our President intends to see that justice is

The best interests of the service man himself require that Government support should be given only to those who are deserving. The service man is interested in weeding out fraud wherever it is found, because every case of fraud results in public opposition and public prejudice, to the injury of those who really are deserving and worthy of help.

The best thing the service man can do for his own good is to help the Government in its efforts to separate worthy and deserving cases from those which are not deserving. That is what the ing cases from those which are not deserving. That is what the Government is now trying to do, as I understand it. When that has been done, public sentiment will fall in behind any reasonable claim made by veterans, and we shall then have the good feeling and good will that should exist.

Memorial Day should serve to remind us of our obligations to those who are still with us. It should serve to bring us together on a basis of better understanding and more enduring friendship.

I said in this radio speech what I have often said to veterans at meetings at which I have been invited to speak.

My attitude has not changed. I have stood and still stand for a full measure of justice to all deserving service men, and I believe that veterans who seek to punish friends, who conscientiously endeavor to perform their duty, make a great mistake. The public will stand by those who are fair and reasonable in their attitude and in the performance of their

In the administration of veterans' affairs we have had cases of great injustice to deserving men and their families. In dealing with millions, it is difficult to avoid such mistakes. But mistakes should be corrected as soon as they are discovered. The aim should always be to do justice. All veterans are entitled to that, and in that the public will back them.

LOWERING OF THE GOLD CONTENT OF THE UNITED STATES DOLLAR AND ITS EFFECT ON TRADE RELATIONS

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to refer to the following addresses recorded in the Congressional Record January 20, 1934, pages 970 to 976; January 24, 1934, pages 1292 to 1299; March 22, 1934, pages 5053 to 5066. The remarks that I am now making complete the tabulation referred to in my January 20 and March 22 addresses. I now insert a statement showing to what extent the devaluation of the United States dollar will improve Canadian trade balances with the United States of America.

The devaluation of the American dollar, under the provisions of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, will benefit substantially Canada's trade balances with the United States of America.

On the assumption that the volume and prices of our merchandise exports to the United States during the year 1934 through 1941 will be limited to approximately the same volume and prices that obtained during the year 1926 through 1933, and that our export trade to the United States will follow the same trend backward from 1933 to 1926. Canada's merchandise balances in the United States will be on the credit side in lieu of being on the debit side as heretofore. During the fiscal years ending March 31, 1926, through 1933, Canada's debit balances in the United States were as follows:

1927	206, 830, 860
1928	221, 200, 258
1929	345, 612, 454
1930	$309, 722, 460
1931	The State of the S
1933	88, 401, 287

By inverting the year 1933 for the year 1934, the year 1932 for 1935, the year 1931 for 1936, the year 1930 for 1937, the year 1929 for 1938, the year 1928 for 1939, the year 1927 for 1940, the year 1926 for 1941, the money consequences of the devaluation of the American dollar will be that the above debit merchandise balances from 1926 through 1933 will be converted into credit merchandise from 1926 through 1933 will be converted into credit merchandise balances in favor of Canada.

For example, take the year 1932; our exports that year were $245,671.587 and our imports were $351,985,446. The debit balance against Canada was $106,313,859. Under the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 the American dollar is fixed at 0.590620 percent of its former fixed weight in terms of gold prices. It follows, therefore, that if Canada will export merchandise to the United States and to all her dependencies to the extent of $245,671,587 in the year 1935, this latter sum will become $415,955,414 in American paper dollars. The difference between $415,955,414 and $245,671,587 represents a gross profit of $170,283,827 in American paper currency. By deducting from $170,283,827 the debit balance of $106,313,859, there will remain a net credit balance of $63,969,968 in favor of Canada.

In other words, if our exports become $415,955,414 in American $106,313,859, there will remain a net credit balance of $63,969,968 in favor of Canada.

In other words, if our exports become $415,955,414 in American depreciated currency, and the value of our imports from the United States amount to $351,985,446, representing dollars having a fixed value of 0.590620 percent, as fixed by the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, it is obvious mathematically that Canada will have a net merchandise credit balance of $63,969,968 in American paper currency—that is to say, $37,781,941 in American gold bullion.

The following tabulation shows the amounts of gross profit that will accrue to Canada each year, the net credit balances in American paper currency, and the equivalent of these American paper dollars in American gold bullion. These gold-bullion credits are the absolute property of our producers and exporters. If our producers and exporters withdraw these gold-credit balances from the United States and deposit them with our Canadian banks, there is no valid and legal reason why the Government of Canada should confiscate this gold and pay the owners thereof at the rate of $20.67, when gold may be arbitrarily fixed in value at, say, $35 per fine ounce. The profits between these two prices is the absolute property of the producers and/or exporters of Canada. Canada.

place between the United States and Great Britain and her colonies evidenced by the tightening of world trade by trade agreements and the changing monetary policies of the United States, Great Britain, and other nations make pertinent the relationships particularly between Canada and the United States. American capital invested in Canada is responsible for the high standard of living in Canada. It is pertinent for Americans to know that Canada is the only to study and understand this statement thoroughly.

The changing relations in trade and finance now taking | country in which American capital dominates the labor element. It is well for us to remember also that all American investments in the Latin American Republics are subservient to the domination which the British hold over the laboring classes in these countries. I am placing in the RECORD at this point a tabulated statement of the wages and salaries paid during the year 1930, which is an average year of Canada's pay rolls, by each category of industry in which foreign capital is invested. It is well for American investors

You will observe in this statement that the United States, on a percentage basis of all foreign capital invested in the whole of the Dominion of Canada, contributes a general average of 30 to 51 percent as against Great Britain's 19 to 33 percent.

The importance of these tabulations will be immediately apparent because they prove conclusively that the labor element holds the key to the determination to the financial and economic situation which will necessarily arise in the not distant future between Canada and the United States. This is particularly true if the Bennett-Chamberlain oligarchy should carry out their contemplated plans. And we must not lose sight in this connection of the statement made on the floor of the House of Commons in London by Neville Chamberlain in connection with the President's proposal to devalue the gold dollar. He said:

According to the information we have, the depreciation of the dollar has not yet seriously affected British trade. I am carefully watching the situation in all its aspects and consideration will be given from time to time whether any action is necessary; and if so, what? A tariff increase is not the only device the Government has in mind if and when action becomes necessary to offset depreciation of the dollar. There are still provisions of the Ottawa agreements that have not yet been made use of but that might be invoked to allow various parts of the British Empire to take joint action to protect themselves against the rest of the world in matters of trade. It is not in the interests of the nation that any publicity be given to the House of Commons in regard to the operations of the exchange-stabilization fund.

Mr. Chamberlain had well in mind the bill that the British House of Commons passed on May 30, 1933, known as the "agricultural marketing bill." Under the provisions of this bill all the food supplies of Great Britain were put under the control of five food dictators. These "economic generals" are absolute deciding factors in regard to the importation of all foodstuffs and raw materials into Great Britain. This gives Great Britain, if she so desires, the opportunity to direct any market whence foodstuffs and raw materials come. Competition between nations thus becomes crushed. The result is that prices can be kept down at levels which will enable Great Britain to live on while those nations which do not come within the circle of her economic areas will be left to suffer further depression and deflation.

Through the operation of her exchange-equalization fund the British Government is given the right to control all exchanges of all the debtors of Great Britain. This power enables Great Britain to stifle the export trade of all her oversea debtors. Such an example of the operation of this power is that Brazil and Argentina have not been able quite recently to satisfy the exchange requirements of American exporters' consignments of goods to either of these two countries among many other countries where the same sort of conditions prevail.

The present Prime Minister of Canada, who is in favor with Neville Chamberlain, and his other cohorts at 10 Downing Street, know perfectly well that Great Britain has no intention of stabilizing the pound sterling, nor of even suggesting the revaluation of the gold content of the pound sterling. The actions which have been taken by the legislators in Canada and Great Britain in the recent past indicate preparedness on the part of Great Britain for a long, drawnout economic battle. I refer particularly to the imposition in Canada by Great Britain of a central bank and the control of all exchanges and the marketing act for Canada patterned after the British act.

The powers that have been given to the President by the two sessions of Congress, which have just closed, give him almost absolute authority to deal with the international-trade situation, and through the exchange-stabilization fund authority to deal with the exchange situation. It means much to the American people as to how the President deals with this situation when he meets clever statesmen of the type of Chamberlain and Bennett.

THE RECORD OF THE SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS UNEQUALED FOR THE ENACTMENT OF IMPORTANT LEGISLATION BY ANY CONGRESS IN TIME OF WAR OR PEACE

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-third Congress is about to adjourn sine die, after 266 days in session, the shortest Congress, except one, on record, but only after having passed greater and more far-reaching and more important legislation than ever was enacted by any Congress or any parliamentary body in the world.

To summarize even briefly the work of this Congress is a tremendous task, but I do desire to point to some of the outstanding legislation which has been enacted in the Nation's legislative branch during the past 15 months.

When our great and beloved President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, took office on March 4, 1933, the country was at the lowest ebb of the depression through which it had gone for nearly 4 years. It was then estimated that 13,000,000 of our workers were unemployed, and at that moment every banking institution in the country was closed. The President thereupon immediately called a special session of the Seventy-third Congress, which continued in session until June 16, 1933.

THE SPECIAL SESSION Emergency banking act

On March 9, 1933, this act was proposed, passed, and signed within the short space of 7 hours. It gave the President power to close all national banks and to reopen them under license. It also reempowered the Secretary of the Treasury to require the return to the Treasury of all gold and gold certificates held by anybody.

The economy act

This bill to carry out the pledges of the platform adopted at the Democratic National Convention in Chicago was enacted on March 20, 1933, and resulted in a saving of $1,000,000,000 of the ordinary expenses of the Government.

Prohibition

The year 1933 saw the complete repeal of national prohibition. On March 22, 1933, Congress legalized beer, and in the fall the other beverages became legal by reason of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Civilian Conservation Corps

On March 31, 1933, an act was approved setting up reforestation camps to employ 325,000 young men. This major relief has been considered by most people one of the greatest relief measures adopted to reduce unemployment and at the same time afford healthy and worth-while work for the youth of the country.

Agricultural Adjustment Administration

On May 12, 1933, this act was approved, the purpose of which was to increase the prices of farm commodities and stock through allocation of production and withdrawing land from ant loss.

production. It also provided for the refinancing of farm mortgages at  $4\frac{1}{2}$  percent in the amount of \$2,000,000,000 with interest on the bond issues guaranteed by the Government. The act also provided for the issuance of Federal Reserve credits in the amount of \$3,000,000,000 and gave the President power to alter the monetary system.

The Gold Standard

By an act of June 5, 1933, the Government went off the gold standard as to all Government and private obligations. This was a far-reaching enactment, but made necessary by the monetary policies of other nations and was intended to and did result in the increase of commodity prices.

Securities Act

On May 27, 1933, the President approved this act requiring registration with the Federal Trade Commission of all stock and bond issues proposed to be sold in interstate commerce. The act has worked beneficially to protect the investing public from false and fraudulent misrepresentations which had cost billions of dollars in the previous few years.

Muscle Shoals

After about 15 years of various attempts on the part of the Federal Government to put to work this great enterprise, which had cost our people about $150,000,000, an act was passed authorizing the Government to proceed with the development of this great Tennessee Valley project, which has already resulted in the reduction of the cost of electricity to the people of that great territory, and its results will be felt throughout the country.

Home Owners' Loan Act

One of the greatest and most beneficially successful pieces of legislation ever enacted by any parliamentary body was this act which was approved April 27, 1933. It provided for the loan of $2,000,000,000 to the people of the country, who were pressed with mortgages on their homes. The success of this legislation is acknowledged by everybody.

Railroad reorganization

In this special session of the Seventy-third Congress, on June 16, 1933, the President approved an act permitting the reorganization and consolidation of railroads so that the public might benefit by reduced rates and better transportation.

National Recovery Act

On June 16, 1933, the President approved the National Industrial Recovery Act, the most far-reaching piece of legislation ever adopted in this country or any other country in the world. This act was made necessary because of the condition of business throughout the country and the unfair practices of many businesses which took advantage of the depression to chisel. It was intended through the adoption of codes in the various industries to provide for fair practices, to increase wages, and to shorten hours of work, thereby spreading employment. One of its great achievements has been immediately to abolish child labor, for the elimination of which the States and the National Government have struggled for many years. This act also authorized the use of $3,300,000,000 for works of a public nature. most of which has already been allocated by the Public Works Administration. Of this amount $400,000,000 was set aside for highway construction, which has afforded employment to hundreds of thousands of the unemployed. The act also provided for the regulation of the petroleum industry, so that no producers would have an advantage over others.

Insurance of deposits in banks

On June 16, 1933, this act was approved, which insured deposits in all national banks and all other banks which desired to take advantage of the system up to $2,500. This measure was intended to and has resulted in restoring confidence in our banks, so that during the past year bank failures have been very few compared with the thousands of failures during the previous year. This act also provided for the elimination of bank affiliates which had sold bonds and stock issues to its customers with a tremendous resultant loss.

Farm Credit Act

On June 16, 1933, a law became effective to provide loans to the farmers for the production and marketing of their crops. Hundreds of thousands of farmers have been benefited by the provisions of this legislation.

Aid to Insurance Companies and Banks

Following the enactment of legislation to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase the preferred stock of banks, the President, on June 10, 1933, authorized that same Corporation to use $50,000,000 to purchase the preferred stock of insurance companies, many of the large companies having failed with great loss to the public. This act also authorized loans to State workmen's compensation funds to provide for payments to injured employees.

Emergency Relief

On May 12, 1933, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to use $500,000,000 of its funds for emergency relief, which has been distributed throughout the country and has tided over families which had no other source of income.

" Kick-back"

On June 13, 1933, Congress passed a law making it unlawful for any contractor on public works to demand that any employee give back any part of his wages.

National Employment System

On June 6, 1933, the President approved an act establishing national employment agencies in cooperation with the States. The administration of this act has done much to relieve unemployment.

The foregoing are the major enactments of the first or special session of the Seventy-third Congress. Most of those enactments were designed as emergency measures to meet the depressed condition in which the country was when the administration took office. That practically all of them have worked out for the benefit of those intended to be helped, no one can deny.

THE REGULAR SESSION

Under the twentieth or "lame duck" amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which became effective on June 5, 1934, Congress for the first time met on January 3 of this year instead of on the first Monday in December, as heretofore. Hereafter Congress will meet on January 3 of each year following the election in the preceding November of all Representatives and one-third of the Senators. Under the new amendment such Members of Congress will not be prevented from actually participating in legislation until 13 months after their election, as heretofore, and the Members of Congress who were defeated in November will not continue to participate in the National Government until the following March.

Principal as well as interest guaranteed by the Government on Farm-loan Bonds and Home-loan Bonds

On January 31, 1934, an act was approved guaranteeing the principal of the farm-loan mortgage bonds, and on April 27, 1934, the principal of home owners' loan bonds were approved. These two acts provided an investment market for these two issues of billions of dollars of Government bonds, which thereby became guaranteed by the Government, both as to principal and interest. These two acts have contributed greatly to the solution of the problem of the farm owner and the home owner with mortgages on their properties.

Air Mail

Early in this year such a scandalous situation existed as to the existence of monopolies in contracts to carry the mails by airplanes and fraudulent practices in obtaining these contracts that Postmaster General James A. Farley, after lengthy hearings before a Senate committee, canceled all the air-mail contracts. On March 27, 1934, the President approved a temporary measure authorizing the Postmaster General to make short-term contracts for carrying the mail by air, and on June 12, 1934, an act was passed authorizing the Postmaster General to make 1-year contracts for the same purpose. In this act the air-mail postage rates were reduced, and the contracts, when awarded, afforded a saving of millions of dollars to the Government, which had heretofore been illegally given to a few favorite contractors.

Sugar

In order to protect the American beet-sugar industry, an act was approved on May 9, 1934, including sugar beets and sugarcane as agricultural commodities under the Agriculture Act and apportioning the domestic production as to the importations. This legislation should do much to encourage this domestic industry which has been in an unfavorable position in competing with foreign sugar producers.

Cattle

On May 25, 1934, an act was approved authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to use $150,000,000 to destroy diseased cattle, purchase cattle to be distributed for relief purposes, and to improve the cattle industry throughout the country. This legislation has had a very beneficial result not only to the beef-cattle farmers but to the people in distress throughout the country for lack of meat products.

Bankhead Cotton Bill

This act approved April 21, 1934, is an attempt to reduce the production of cotton in the country to about 10,000,000 bales a year by compulsory reduction of acreage as compared with the voluntary reduction which has been in existence during the past year and which has not proved universally successful because of the chiseling by some of the producers of cotton. This act provides for a tax on overproduction, which should deter those who are not patriotic enough to join in the general program to aid the farmer.

The Kerr Tobacco Bill

There is now pending before the President for his signature a bill which applies the same principle to tobacco that the Bankhead bill applied to cotton, and the Tobacco Act should go a long way to help the 400,000 tobacco farmers of the country.

Taxation

The Revenue Act of 1934 approved May 10, 1934, was enacted principally to plug up the loopholes in the existing tax law, which permitted evasion of taxation, remarkable instances of which were brought out during an investigation by a Senate committee. On the average person the act places no additional burden, and it eliminates several nuisance taxes. It increased estate taxes, provided for a limited publicity of income-tax returns, and prohibited consolidated returns by corporations.

Revaluation of the Dollar

An act approved January 30, 1934, authorized the President to revalue the gold dollar at from 50 to 60 percent of its then value. This has been done, and the gold dollar is now worth about 60 cents as compared with its previous value. The purpose of this act was to meet the international situation as to money and to help raise commodity prices. As far as our domestic situation is concerned and for all purposes of exchange within our own country the dollar is still worth 100 cents and should give no cause for concern to any of our people. The bill also provides for a stabilization fund of $2,000,000,000 to be used to maintain the value of the dollar at the price fixed by the Executive.

Silver

The very vigorous and widespread demand for the monetization of silver was answered by Congress in passing the Silver Purchase Act, which is now before the President for his signature. This act would compel the Treasury to maintain one-fourth of its reserve against outstanding paper money in silver and authorizes the purchase of silver at fixed prices and in a way so that none of the recent speculators in silver can profit.

Bankruptcy Acts

The distress in which business, large and small, corporations, municipalities, farmers, and other individuals found themselves persuaded Congress to enact legislation enlarging the provisions of the National Bankruptcy Act. On May 24, 1934, an act was approved authorizing municipalities to go into bankruptcy during a period of 2 years to straighten out the situation as to their indebtedness.

On June 7, 1934, an act was passed permitting corporations to reorganize under more liberal provisions than those provided by the Bankruptcy Act then in force.

There is now pending before the President for his signature the so-called "Frazier-Lemke Bankruptcy Act" pertaining to farmers, which permits them to go into bankruptcy and make an agreement with their creditors or upon failure to be able to do this, the act permits the farmer to remain on his farm for a period of 5 years, upon paying a rental fixed by the court, and gives him first preference to redeem his farm upon paying the appraised value.

Crime bills

A number of bills were enacted by Congress at the request of the President and the Attorney General, many of which have been to date approved by the President, designed to meet racketeering and kidnaping and crime conditions in more than one State or between the States, where the States themselves with their limited authority were helpless adequately to pursue or prosecute the offenders. The desperate career of Dillinger and other outlaws gave rise to the necessity for these measures.

Stock-Exchange Control Act

After a score or more of years of demand of our people for some control over the stock exchanges of our country, the President approved on June 6, 1934, the National Securities Exchange Act, a bill to regulate the stock exchanges so that the investing public might not again be defrauded of the billions which it has lost in the last few years. This is one of the most far-reaching pieces of legislation enacted at this session, and should go a long way to cure the many evils of the stock exchanges and at the same time should work to their benefit.

The Communications Act

The President has before him now for signature an act to regulate telegraph, telephone, cable, and radio. The regulation of these methods of communication was intrusted to several commissions. This bill also contains provisions as to broadcasting which should prevent the discrimination which has existed in some instances between the various broadcasting stations.

Tariff

While no general tariff legislation was even considered at this session of Congress, it was thought necessary, in view of the loss of our many billions of dollars in foreign trade, to authorize the President to enter into trade agreements with foreign nations so that our foreign trade might be restored, and business and employment thereby increased. This act was approved June 12, 1934, and should go a long way to better our foreign-trade relations with the other nations of the world.

Deposit insurance law

The President has before him for his signature an act increasing the amount to $5,000 that deposits in banks may be insured, as compared with the limit of $2,500 contained in the act of 1933. This bill should help further to restore the confidence of our people in their banks.

Direct loans to industry

One of the weaknesses of the proper functioning of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with billions to lend for the benefit of business and industry, has been that it was not authorized, under the law, to loan directly to any business or industry, but could loan only through a bank, a mortgage company, or an insurance company. There has been a demand for over a year that this law be amended so that the business man, who has been denied relief through his bank or mortgage company, might obtain needed working capital and thus employ more men. The bill to accomplish this is now before the President and should be of great benefit to business and industry throughout the country and increase employment.

The National Housing Act

This was one of the most important measures passed during the 73rd Congress and is before the President now for his signature. Its purpose is to supplement the Home Owners' Loan Act and to induce institutions and people with money to lend it for the repair of homes and on mortgages. The act provides for the Government insuring such loans up to 80 percent, and increases the amount allocated to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation by $1,000,000,000. The act also provides for aid to building-and-loan associations by the Government purchasing their shares and certificates. One of the big features of the act is the establishment of National Mortgage Associations which will purchase mortgages insured by the Government and thus relieve the situation in the several States in reference to failure of mortgage and title companies.

Philippine Islands

On March 24, 1934, an act was approved finally providing for the complete independence of the Philippines within 10 years, with provisions to protect those islands from foreign interference and providing for limited importations of their products free from duty until the expiration of the 10-year period. This was a fulfillment of the pledges in the Democratic Party platforms for over 30 years—to grant independence to the Philippines and to stand against imperialism.

Labor disputes bill

The President has before him for signature, and will undoubtedly sign, the Joint Resolution passed in the closing hours of the session, permitting him to set up boards to settle labor disputes and to enforce their regulations. Although this measure may not contain all the teeth which organized labor desired and which was included in a bill pending before Congress for some time, the resolution should go a long way toward preventing and adjusting labor disputes until Congress can enact more thorough legislation. The bill protects the right of labor to strike in justification of its grievances.

Railroad Pension Act

This bill was passed in the closing session of Congress and readjusts the pensions of railroad employees, making more equitable provisions for the retirement of the 1.100.000 railroad workers.

Railroad Labor Act

This bill, which was likewise passed in the closing days of Congress, amends the existing Railroad Labor Act to take care of many situations which have arisen since that act became a law in 1926. It provides for boards to adjust disputes between the railroads and their employees and prohibits the railroads from interfering with or organizing unions or forcing employees to join or not to join any company union or any one of the 21 standard railroad-labor organizations. The "yellow-dog" contract is prohibited, and the employee is left to determine what, if any, organization he will join.

New ships for the Navy

The act approved March 27, 1934, authorized the President to order the construction of plane carriers, destroyers, and submarines, so that our Navy might maintain its parity with the other nations under the naval treaties. Acts were also passed May 29, 1934, improving the condition of the Marine Corps personnel and regulating promotion in the Navy.

Johnson Debt Default Act

This act prohibits the sale in this country of securities originating within those nations which are still in default to us on their war debts.

Treaties

The Senate ratified several treaties with other nations. On May 24, 1934, the treaty adopted at the Pan American Conference at Montevideo, providing that there should be no restriction based on sex or nationality, was ratified. On May 31, 1934, the Senate abrogated the existing treaty with Cuba of May 22, 1923, including the Platt amendment, and provided for more amicable relations with that Republic. On June 15, 1934, the Senate approved the treaty made at Geneva in reference to the international shipment of arms and ammunition, the treaty signed at Rio de Janeiro providing for settlement of disputes and controversies without war, if possible, and the treaty signed at Montevideo pertaining to the freedom of states in their own affairs.

Equal rights for women

On May 24, 1934, an act was approved giving to children born abroad of an American woman the same rights to citizenship as to children born abroad to an American man.

Crop Loan Act

An act was approved April 7, 1934, amending the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include additional basic commodities—beef, dairy cattle, peanuts, rye, barley, flax, and sorghum—within the benefits of that act and appropriated $200,000,000 to finance surplus reduction, that amount to be replaced by processing taxes. This act also appropriated $50,000,000 to reimburse farmers for tubercular cattle destroyed by the Government.

Permanent Appropriations Act

The President has before him for his signature an act which provides that practically all appropriations shall be subject annually to the approval of the Bureau of the Budget and Congress, rather than continue as permanent appropriations. This act should materially reduce the cost of Government.

Independent Offices Appropriation Act

On March 28, 1934, this act was passed over the President's veto. It restored the pay of Government employees by 5 percent as of February 1, 1934, and an additional 5 percent on July 1, 1934, and authorized the President to restore the remaining 5 percent when he determined the cost of living justified it. This act also increased the benefits to be paid to veterans of the World War and the Spanish-American War by about $200,000,000 and corrected many instances of inequality and injustices which had developed in the administration of the Economy Act of 1933.

Civil Works Administration

On February 15, 1934, an act was approved appropriating $950,000,000 for the continuance of the civil-works program and direct relief.

Reconstruction Finance Corporation

By an act approved June 20, 1934, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to borrow an additional $850,000,000, to be used for loans, and by an act approved March 26, 1934, the Corporation was authorized to foster export trading.

Aid to vocational education

By an act approved May 21, 1934, $3,000,000 was appropriated to aid vocational education both in the agricultural and urban sections of the country.

Wild-life conservation

On March 10, 1934, two bills were approved to protect wild life throughout the country and provide for fish and game sanctuaries.

Investigations

During the recess of Congress committees of the House of Representatives will investigate the following matters, among others:

Taxation, including evasions, new sources of revenue, and a more equitable distribution of taxes.

Foreign propaganda directed against the safety of our Government from Nazi, Communistic, or other sources.

Real-estate bondholders reorganization committees and their dealings with the investments of millions of our citizens

Oil, its production, prices, surpluses, and means of control. Election expenses in the coming congressional campaign. Tin, its source of supply and its control abroad as affecting our industries and national defense.

Receivership practices in Federal courts.

The foregoing is a mere summary of what the writer considers the most important legislative measures passed in the Seventy-third Congress. Other Members of Congress and persons outside may well consider other measures of equal or greater importance or may regret that the Congress did not enact, or the President approve, other proposals to aid the farmer, or the home owner, or the Indians, or business, or the railroads, or labor, or the oil or mining industries, and so forth.

Just before Congress adjourned the President sent to Congress one of the greatest messages ever sent by any country's Chief Executive, in which he set forth a definite plan he has in mind to take up in the next Congress, a program of legislation especially of a social character, such as old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, shorter hours of labor, and similar proposals, which were not thoroughly enough prepared or capable of being considered during the Seventy-third Congress. That the President's heart is behind such social legislation has been apparent in his entire public service.

There are, of course, some of our citizens who complain of some of the laws we passed or of the method of administration of some of those measures. That is but natural. No law could possibly satisfy every individual in this country. One can imagine that Dillinger does not endorse the crime bills. Laws are passed to provide the greatest good for the greatest number, and in the process it is almost inevitable that someone be hurt.

The Seventy-third Congress, however, set a record for passing laws to help the vast majority of our citizens in every section of the Nation. The worker, the farmer, the home owner, the consumer, the producer, the business man, the investor, and other large groups were always in the minds of the Nation's legislators.

It is estimated that as a result of the acts of the present Democratic administration since it took office on March 4, 1933, 4,000,000 workers have been given employment. This recovery in employment may not be apparent in every city or town or in every trade, but taking the Nation as a whole the results cannot be denied. The prices paid to the farmers for their products have risen, bank failures are practically negligible, and business has generally improved, as all statistics or indexes will show. In the Hoover administration "prosperity" was always "just around the corner", but when you turned the corner it was always around the next corner, so that instead of ever catching up with it we were plunged into 4 years of the greatest distress and misery this Nation or any other nation has ever experienced.

It can at least be said of the present Democratic administration, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, that while the unnatural and unhealthy prosperity of 1928 may not be just around the corner, we have got several jumps ahead of Old Man Depression. We are around the corner ahead of him, and he will not catch us again.

Of course, it has cost the Federal Government many billions of dollars to get us so far out of the depression. It is also true that never before in peace time have such huge sums been expended by a government. We call it peace time, but we have been waging a war. It is a war against the ravages of social and economic enemies, the casualties in which have been greater than those of any war of guns. To date we have the enemy well on the run.

Our Commander in Chief has the confidence of every man. woman, and child in our army of 130,000,000 recruits. Naturally a war like that costs money, and the present and the future taxpayer must meet the cost. Congress and the Executive are always aware of this and careful to make the burden as light as possible. But the taxpayer should always remember that he does not pull out of the air or pick off trees the money with which he pays his taxes. That money comes from the humblest and the poorest people in our country. If those people are left in a destitute condition, the taxpayer has no income or profits with which to pay his taxes, and such a condition unremedied would reduce Mr. Taxpayer to the same low station as the helpless ones in our land. In the last analysis, every cent expended by our Government comes out of and from every single human being in our population.

During the coming campaign much may be said by the Republican Party concerning the huge expenditures by the Government. While those expenditures are huge, they are about $3,000,000,000 less than the President estimated at the beginning of the year would be necessary. Our National Budget has been balanced as to ordinary and current expenditures, a condition that did not exist for 5 years under Republican administration. It is our extraordinary and long-term expenditures for relief that have added to our national debt, which is still less than during the World War. A national debt of twenty-five or thirty billions of dollars, as compared to the value of the vast resources and wealth of our country, should not cause any untold alarm even among our business men or bankers. The average individual is in debt to a greater proportion.

This great stride toward recovery has been accomplished under Democratic leadership in both branches of the Congress. Much that has been said or will be said during the coming campaign about the Republican minority cooperation is not the fact. Whenever the Republicans did cooperate they did so reluctantly and with their fingers crossed, hoping the worst would happen to our best intentions. There was political sniping and filibustering against the proposals of the administration. Heads of departments. appointed by the President, were constantly attacked, ridiculed, and even their patriotism questioned by the Republican minority. That is the kind of cooperation the administration received from the Republican Party. Luckily, the Democratic majorities in the House and Senate were so overwhelming that the administration measures could be enacted in spite of any Republican opposition. The American people should maintain those Democratic majorities by their votes in the coming congressional election if they want the program of recovery, so well on its way, continued under the unparalleled leadership of our President.

AS I VIEW IT-THE WORK OF THE SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, it is fitting and proper that at the close of a session, each Congressman is given the opportunity to extend his remarks and print the same in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is an opportunity accepted by those supporting the administration as well as those in opposition. It gives the citizens a chance to read and consider presentations summarizing, from various viewpoints, the most interesting economic, social, and political legislation of the Congress. I accept the opportunity and cherish the hope that the views of a farmer-Congressman of eastern Oregon will add, in some slight degree, to the fund of information furnished, and more especially do I hope that this review will prove helpful to those of my constituents who have closely followed the activities of this Congress during its two sessions, the special session of March to June 1933 and the regular session of January to June 1934.

CONDITIONS FACED BY THE ADMINISTRATION

March 4, 1933, marked an epoch in our history, possibly in world history. "I warrant, an I should live a thousand years, I never should forget it." Every bank in the United States closed; practically every industry facing financial ruin; most farmers financially wrecked and hopeless; wheat 25 cents a bushel, corn 10 cents, cotton 6 cents; gold going into hiding by the millions. The greatest economic machine that the ingenuity of man had ever developed was on the point of complete breakdown. The situation might well be compared to a battlefield where every division had suffered defeat, and panic had seized both officers and men, when, late in the afternoon, a man came onto that field of confusion and took command. His first orders were to close officially all banks, many of which had previously been closed by the States; to conserve his ammunition, the gold, by refusing to allow it to leave the country; to call a council of war of his advisers, the Congress, to assemble in special session at the earliest possible date.

FIRST STEPS TOWARD RECOVERY AND CHANGE

I remember very clearly how I watched the first bill I had ever seen pass Congress. There were no copies, it had not been printed, there was no roll call. It was the banking bill, giving the bankers powers for which they had clamored for a century, the passage of which could be excused only on the ground of emergency. Then came the economy bill, cutting too deeply, too hastily drawn, and later, wisely amended. Order was restored in the economic world and it began again to function.

The most notable acts of this special session, which was called for emergency legislation, may be briefly summarized: The Banking Act; Agricultural Adjustment Act; Farm Mortgage Act; Home Loan Act; National Recovery Act (public works and industrial recovery); Securities Act; insurance of bank deposits; creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority as a great experimental power project; appropriation of large sums for the relief of the unemployed and the definite acceptance of the responsibility for their welfare. All these acts were the outcome of the recognition of abuses which had caused the crash, or of realization of the immediate necessity of saving farms, homes, the business structure, and the credit system.

I have, in committee and on the floor of the House, gone along with the administration, not as a blind follower but voting with the President to uphold his hands in the hour of distress, even when I would have personally chosen a different course. I sometimes yielded my personal convictions for what I considered to be a unified effort for the public good, demanding the support of all who understood the emergency. Only twice did I depart from this policy—once to redeem a pledge best redeemed now for economic recovery, and once to make amends for wrongs wrought through the emergency enactment of the Economy Act.

As a member of the exclusive Agricultural Committee, I sat at the table when the domestic allotment plan of farm relief was decided upon, and helped in framing the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Farm Mortgage Act, and all those other measures which have so beneficially affected the farmer. Many times my farmer instinct rebelled against the method chosen, and I presented, as forcefully as possible, the farm point of view, often being overridden and yielding in order to accomplish all possible, sometimes winning important points from a practical standpoint. Citizens should never forget that, under our form of government, all legislation is a matter of compromise. Very few acts go through as first drawn, and very seldom does a Member get just what he wants. All have to give and take.

In general, success has crowned the recovery efforts of the administration, and we have a semblance of prosperity in most business and occupations, with real prosperity in many places, giving hope and courage to all. Wheat and corn are worth, to the farmer, almost three times what they were in March 1933. No one claims that miracles have been wrought, but, at least, order and hope have been restored and a way has been determined upon.

THE NEW POINT OF VIEW

All are beginning to realize that this is not a "depression" but, indeed, a new era, comparable in a way to the time, four centuries ago, when the people of western Europe commenced to sail the seas. They discovered that the oceans were highways instead of barriers, and the entire world outlook was changed-economic, business, social, and religious. We are living in one of the most interesting periods of history when an outworn system is being subjected to essential and wholesome change and renovation in the interests of justice and humanity. We should not lose sight of the fact that, practically up to the birth of our country, it was a hungry world, illy clad and housed, with few machines to aid human hands and multiply their power. Each farm home was practically self-sustaining, raising its own wool, spinning its own cloth, curing its own meat, living independently of the business world, and conducting the world's industries inside the homes. Ours developed as a farm civilization, with 90 percent of our people engaged in agriculture when our institutions of government were being discussed and formulated. In a hundred years all this has changed, and we are today highly industrialized, with each individual and each group dependent on the others. As long as we had new, open, raw land, we could find place and hope for the land-hungry of our growing population. We enjoyed the world's markets for our excess production of farm and factory. It is all different now. The 15 millions of unemployed who were seeking jobs in March 1933 were largely the result of the substitution of the machine for human hands. Ancient civilizations were built on human slavery—ours is built on machines. The transition | legislative history—the Stock Exchange Act, the revision period was the time of our great growth and development, when we were moving toward the culmination of our economic catastrophe, freely predicted by close students of the system which was never planned for justice and human welfare but came about from our great natural wealth and its ruthless exploitation. We cannot abandon the machines and return to primitive society, neither must we allow the wheels to wreck us because we do not control them and distribute their products with some degree of equity.

ACHIEVEMENTS WORTH NOTING AND THE GOAL

One of the finest achievements of this administration has been the C.C.C. camps. Each year these camps have taken out of the ranks of the unemployed more than a quarter of a million young men and given them a new view of life, the happy frame of mind of the man with a job, the certainty of food, clothing, work, and wages the larger part of which are earmarked for otherwise destitute ones at home in the crowded cities where jobs cannot be had. It has cost about $1,000 for each boy enrolled, but it has been worth the money. Fully 1,000,000 people have been beneficially affected each year by this effort.

Never before has there been in Washington an administration sufficiently courageous and far-seeing to begin the development of the greatest hydro-electric-power river of America—the Columbia. The hundred millions of dollars earmarked for the development of the power resources of this mighty stream have made possible a project the story of which will ring through history and will mark the President as one of the great forward-looking men of the world.

Whatever may finally become of the N.R.A. is of small moment compared to its service in the education afforded the business men of our country. Our industrial and business system, which was never before consciously organized, unified, and harmonized, has been set forth as it is and in many respects, modeled into the thing it should be. Lessons have been learned that can never be forgotten. Child labor has been shown up as the ugly and senseless and cruel thing it has always been, and we have learned the way to deal with it and eliminate it.

Never has there been in such high and powerful position an Executive more considerate of the rights of those who have only the labor of their hands to contribute to the common welfare. The Congress has to its credit the two acts affecting railway labor and standing as examples of what must come for all industry—the Railway Pension Act and the amendments to the Railway Labor Act, both of which had my ardent support. The social legislation which is being formulated for early attention next session as part of the administrative program definitely provides for oldage pensions and unemployment insurance, without which our system cannot function with justice and happiness. I have, in Oregon, long advocated both these measures, and shall, in Congress, give them my strongest support. It is also the program to perfect and work out, on a satisfactory basis, the difficult matter of an act on industrial disputes and their arbitration, as begun by the Congress just closed. The 6-hour day and the 30-hour week remain for settlement in a session which will, almost certainly, be devoted largely to labor legislation, money, the lowering of interest rates. taxation and revenue, and the railway acts now being studied by the Coordinator. The next Congress will also seal the fate of most of the emergency legislation including the N.R.A. and the A.A.A.

The problem of the unemployed is still only partially solved, but the Government has accepted the responsibility and will meet it. This most intricate and far-reaching problem will require for its solution the keenest minds, the most unselfish statesmanship, and the highest degree of true patriotism. Work and decent wages for the unemployed will do more to solve the farm problem than all the allotment plans and production-control programs ever dreamed of.

In the realm of business, and for the interests of the average man, we have in the last session passed a series of protective and regulatory acts without precedent in our

of the Securities Act, the Industrial Loan Act which makes capital available for small industries and for business, the Housing Act, supplementing the Home Loan Act of the special session and intended to help the home owner and stimulate industrial activity. Undoubtedly there have been many mistakes made by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, but can you imagine the condition of the country without it? The intention of Congress and the administration was to relieve distressed home owners, but those entrusted with the operation of the system have frequently been guilty of maladministration and inefficiency and have sometimes betrayed the trust. I have been making investigation of every case of injustice and delay brought to my attention and shall join with those who seek to improve the system so it will be really beneficial, and to punish all officials, high or low, who have been negligent or guilty of wrongdoing.

I would summarize the outstanding acts of the regular session of the Seventy-third Congress, just concluded, as follows: The Gold Reserve Act, the Silver Purchase Act, the Reciprocal Tariff Act, the Stock Exchange Act, revision of the Securities Act, Industrial Loan Act, Housing Act, Labor Disputes Act, Railway Pension Act, Cotton Control Act, Sugar Control Act-Taylor Grazing Act, from a western standpoint, must be added.

MONEY AND CREDIT

The President had the courage and decisiveness to abandon the gold standard and advance the price of gold, devaluating the dollar for the purpose of raising commodity prices. Gold was ordered out of hiding and taken over by the Government. I do not believe the time has yet arrived when we can abandon gold and silver as basic money. The gold ounce is still the world's yardstick for measuring value and paying balances between nations. It will probably so remain for generations to come. I think the sensible thing to do is to recognize silver as basic money and freely to coin it at our mints, as it was coined for almost a century of our national life. Of course, it would cheapen money and raise the value of commodities. That is what must be done if even a reasonable portion of the debts are ever to be paidindividual, municipal, national. It is believed by many that the silver act passed by the Seventy-third Congress will be a stepping stone to a still wider use of this valuable metal as a part of our metallic money base. Those who believe in the importance of higher commodity prices are hopeful that the inclusion in our money base of silver to the amount of 25 percent, as now provided by law, will prove most helpful in advancing general prosperity. Had the advice of Bryan been followed in 1913, when the Reserve Bank was established, guaranty of all deposits in national banks would have been included, and we would not have had such bank disaster as that which wrought havoc. Deposits in banks are today guaranteed by this Government through an insurance method and we have no bank failures. Confidence in the solvency of the banks has been restored. I have publicly and constantly advocated this system of bank-deposit guaranty since 1908, and am happy to have had a hand in making it possible under the law. I supported the act increasing the amount of guaranty from $2,500 to $5,000.

The money question will be again before the Congress. I shall stand for the opening of mints for the free and unrestricted coinage of silver at a ratio of not greater than 16 to 1. For convenience, the silver should be stored in bars and currency issued against it. I do not wish to see this Government issue irredeemable paper currency. All admit that a currency with a 40-percent metal base would be safe. I believe the Government should cease issuing bonds and issue currency up to the full 2½ times the metal on hand. It would increase commodity prices and stop burdensome accumulation of interest which now adds so much to governmental operating cost. My speech of May 17, 1934, in the RECORD and reprinted at my expense discusses this matter fully.

The amendment to the act creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation extending loans to industries will be most beneficial, as it is almost impossible, now, to secure credit for the operation of small industries and business concerns.

TAXATION AND REVENUE

The Seventy-third Congress has not only made history, but it has enacted more far-reaching legislation than any other Congress ever assembled. The keynote for every act has been the hope of benefit to the common man. It is no time to announce that the battle has been won. The fact is that entrenched privilege has retreated in only a few places and is ready to renew the battle for special privileges for the favored few, indeed, there is ample evidence that the battle is now raging in the contest for seats in the next Congress, and money is being freely spent to restore the old order to power.

The Seventy-fourth Congress will assemble next January confronted with a startling deficit. For every dollar of current revenue there is now an expenditure of $2.50. The Budget must be balanced and we must not place on the shoulders of future generations a burden they cannot bear, as the future will bring its own pressing needs. The fight that looms before the country next winter is the struggle over the manner of raising this revenue. Shall it be by a sales tax on necessities, raising billions from those who have least with which to pay, or, shall the money come largely from those who enjoy great fortunes gained by special privilege, and from great inheritances? Among those who think about public questions we hear much talk about the manner of redistribution of wealth. We will hear more about this in the future. For my views on this, and on the best method of raising the necessary revenue, I refer those interested to my speech in Congress on February 20, 1934, printed in the Congressional Record and reprinted, at my own expense, in leaflet form for free distribution to all who wish it.

Should my commission be renewed, to represent in Congress the Second District of Oregon, I shall continue my efforts to balance the Budget as outlined in that speech. I shall not participate in the crime of urging any sales tax, alike in principle whether State or national, and an infamous attempt to secure tax evasion for the rich by piling the burden on those who struggle for existence. I look toward a reorganization of our economic system which will give to all citizens some share of wealth which will enable them to participate in the privilege of helping to bear a just share of the costs of Government. I shall work with those who are fighting to eliminate tax-exempt bonds of State and Nation.

FARM FINANCE

During the closing hours of the last session, a law was passed giving farmers a virtual moratorium of 6 years on farm foreclosures, through amendment to the farm bankruptcy bill. This will give more help to hard-pressed farmers than any other act of the session, and will practically eliminate deficiency judgments. During the days of the great Woodrow Wilson this Government stepped in between the farm debtor and his creditor, commencing to lend on farm lands and property at greatly reduced interest. Conditions in the banking world have made it necessary for our Government greatly to extend its lending activities, as other sources of credit for business and farming have failed to function. Our farm loan system is crude, slow, and inadequate, but what would have become of us without it? I have long advocated a Government lending agency in each county, making every form of loan on land, crop, and chattel. I have strongly opposed the taking of 5 percent from every loan to be used as a guarantee fund to help secure the debts of borrowing neighbors. Most of this 5 percent will be lost, making expenses and interest unbearably high, and putting the burden of losses on those least able to bear it. I supported, in committee hearings, this past session, before those controlling the activities of the Farm Credit Administration. the Carpenter resolution calling for thorough congressional investigation of the operation of that system with its confusion, delays, and apparent injustices in appraisals and otherwise. We have made only a beginning in farm credit. We cannot tolerate the continuance of the slow and blundering operations and the high interest charges now imposed.

One of the most constantly discussed bills before the last Congress was the Frazier farm mortgage bill fixing interest at 11/2 percent annually, with a like amount to apply each year on the principal. It provides that, if bonds cannot be sold to provide money at this rate, currency is to be issued by the Government, to be legal tender and to be paid the farmer who gives the mortgage. This currency is secured by the land and is to be paid off and retired at the rate of 1½ percent each year. I think the bill should pass in an amended form, and I was one who signed the petition to compel discussion before the House in an effort toward passage. Farm relief can never be an actuality until there is legislation bringing interest on money within reasonable limitation. I shall ever work aggressively toward this end. I also desire to place the control and administration of the system in the hands of farmers and those in sympathy with the farm outlook.

MORE ACTS OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

The Stock Exchange Act and the amendments to the grain futures bill, defeated in the Senate, were bold attempts to control these gambling activities so as to retain the good many believe they do by affording a ready market for stocks and a price for all grain. I belong to the school of thought that believes we do not need these institutions for so-called "hedging." If it were within my power, I would so control their activities that the farmer would not lose most of the benefits that should be his by reason of short crops. I am sure that both the act passed and the bill defeated would be found valuable in greatly curtailing the activities of parasites on industry and agriculture.

The passage of the Taylor bill followed a 10-year effort to control the public domain of 173,000,000 acres which still belong to the United States. This valuable grass area is now nearly ruined by uncontrolled over-grazing. Under this new law, which I helped pass and for which I spoke on the floor, districts will be formed, a small fee collected, and the range parcelled out so as to protect prior rights. It will prevent making a desert out of this vast area, larger than Oregon.

I very much doubted the ultimate value of the cotton, sugar, and tobacco control acts. The cotton and tobacco acts seek to control by heavily taxing production beyond the allotment fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture. I very reluctantly voted for these measures, but, as they were desired by the representatives of the districts affected by them, I went along, giving them the right to try out a system of controlled production. I fear the result of this experiment so far from our traditions.

The list of basic commodities on which processing taxes may be imposed for the payment of curtailment bounties was increased by six items, including cattle, and thus extending some relief to this hard-pressed industry.

Congress sought also to help solve the problem of the farm surplus by selling more abroad, and, for this purpose, enacted the Reciprocal Tariff Act giving the President bargaining powers to facilitate the negotiation of agreements which will develop foreign markets for our goods. I believe he will use this power to help the farmer.

I have, in three speeches in Congress, gone carefully into the questions here briefly mentioned, and will send to any inquirer any one or all those discussions reprinted at my expense—Financing farm mortgages, Crop-production loans, and Presidential power to make trade agreements.

HELP FOR FARMERS NOT LIMITED TO ENACTMENT OF LAWS

The work of a Representative is not altogether concerned with measures of national importance on the floor of the House or in committee. An active man participates in the passage of important legislation and he fights for those measures helpful to his State and district. Much of his time is spent in consultation with officials in the administrative departments of Government securing more favorable rulings, explaining local situations, and intervening on behalf of his constituents who have now so many points of contact with the Government. Acquaintance with those in the departments and intimate knowledge of the affairs of the State and district have enabled me to help in matters of appropriations and rulings which have meant much to the farmers of my district. I appeared before the Budget officials and in committee for various appropriations including the Hermiston Experiment Station, extension service and educational bills, and most important to eastern Oregon, the appropriation for control and destruction of predatory animals. I helped to organize western Congressmen for this fight and was one of the final committee of three Representatives which secured approval of the Budget Commission of this important appropriation.

To my astonishment, I discovered an order of the Grain Grading Board had been made lowering by a third the toleration of smut in wheat. This would have cost the farmers of the Northwest thousands of dollars. After a hard and bitter fight, and organization through my efforts of representatives of all wheat districts affected by this ruling, it was rescinded and the toleration restored practically to its former figure.

The processing tax on jute was a matter of much concern as it increased the prices of jute bags used by farmers. It took the united efforts of many men from the Northwest in Senate and House and months of argument and discussion to bring about the remission of this tax, and an act of Congress to make it apply to the floor stocks on hand for this year. I was very active in this fight.

It also took months of effort, aided by some of the excellent weekly papers of my district, to secure an order making possible the use of local, State-inspected meat in the C.C.C. camps and the outlawing of the Argentine canned meats. This will mean much to Oregon this year.

Farmers were also benefited by my fight on the floor for the passage of the bill which makes it possible to have a joint truck and water rate on the Snake and Columbia Rivers, putting these rivers in the same class as the Mississippi as to transportation privileges. The Congressional Record has recorded this and my other efforts for our people.

Applications for money for public works are carefully looked after by the Congressmen who present arguments, secure information, and explain the need for important projects such as waterworks, sewers, and public buildings. This is a time when most communities and many people have some sort of relations with government and the right sort of Representative can be most helpful in Washington.

I was fortunate in securing the friendly cooperation of my colleagues in the House, so I had a successful experience in passing my bills relating to forests, irrigation, The Dalles bridge, and some very just and long-deferred claims.

I have been constant in attendance at all sessions of the House and at meetings of the very important Committee on Agriculture of which I am fortunate to be a member. I have participated in discussion in the House and have made five prepared speeches devoted to discussion of problems of agriculture, money, and taxation. Following the custom of Congress, I have had these speeches reprinted at my expense for distribution among those whom I represent. I have appreciated the opportunity for service and have voted in the public interests.

If my record of public service meets with the approval of my constituents, as I hope it will, I shall return to Washington next January with renewed courage and energy to fight for those things which are essential to our welfare. I shall continue to stress the importance of farm prosperity as essential to recovery in business and industry.

GOVERNMENT COMPETITION WITH PRIVATE INDUSTRY—THE CONDITION AND THE REMEDY

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to review some phases of the work regarding Government competition with private industry. It is greatly to be regretted that the Seventy-third Congress adjourned without undertaking to remedy the conditions of unfair competition of Government establishments with private enterprise and to establish an accurate and practical method of determining the comparative cost of public and private operation in the same field. This is the more deplorable because the Congress had received from a committee of its own appointment the evidence of the nature and extent and the injurious effects of Government competition with private business, and has voted billions of dollars for an infinite variety of Government operations without establishing a definite and uniform method of determining the costs of these vast undertakings. The need for this no one denies. It is delayed or prevented only by those who, while loudly asserting that government can perform many functions more cheaply than private enterprise, obstruct every effort to set up the means of making an accurate comparison. It is not only the right but the duty of Congress to control with scrupulous care the detail of appropriation, for upon it devolves the perilous obligation of taking from the American people, through taxation, the unparalleled sums essential to support the stupendous program of public expenditure and either balance the Budget or impair the national credit.

We have no source from which to obtain public revenue save the pockets of our people. We have no way to secure income save through our own effort. What, then, shall be the condition if the Government, created solely for political purposes, enters the economic field and not only competes unfairly with the citizen, whose servant it is and from whose income it is supported, but also makes the very burden which the Government imposes upon it a handicap by which to take from him the opportunity to provide the needs of his Government at fair prices and undertakes to supply those needs out of its own establishments by keeping no record of their extravagant cost?

I desire as briefly as I may to recall to my colleagues the investigation of Government competition with private business, the findings made, the remedies proposed, the circumstances which led to the neglect of opportunity to apply them and the imperious need to remedy this condition.

Pursuant to House Resolution No. 235 adopted by the Seventy-second Congress, first session, there was appointed by the Speaker, on May 31, 1932, a special committee—

For the purpose of investigating Government competition with private industry and all other questions in relation thereto that would aid the Congress in any necessary remedial legislation.

The work of the committee attracted national attention. It extended over a period of 8 months. Public hearings were held in Washington, Kansas City, St. Louis, Lawton, South Bend, Memphis New Orleans, New York, and Chicago. Some 625 witnesses, representing over 225 forms of competitive business activity, were heard, resulting in a record of 37 typewritten volumes of testimony and 6 additional volumes of exhibits and formal statements.

The committee consisted of Hon. Joseph B. Shannon, chairman, Hon. E. E. Cox, Hon. Samuel B. Pettengill, Hon. William H. Stafford, and Hon. Robert F. Rich.

The committee takes a pardonable pride in the fact that its exhaustive inquiry was executed at an expenditure of $13,500. It made comprehensive findings and recommendations which are set forth at length in its report and were summarized in an epitomized statement available to the Members of Congress. These investigations disclosed the wide-spread and intensive character of Government activities competing with private business, revealed the injury done to individual initiative, enterprise, and self-support, and indicated the extravagant cost of many of these public operations. It was conclusively shown that under the system of authorizing competitive estimates from Government establishments in competition with the bonded and responsible bids of private producers, it often occurred that the work given to the Government establishment could not be performed under the estimate but was executed at greater cost than that at which it was offered to be done by the private producer. The work was thus lost to the citizen and executed for the Government to be paid for out of a deficiency appropriation at unnecessary public expense. It became obvious that the work which was being done by public establishments was continually expanding, and every Member of Congress knows that in the name of emergency relief and recovery the field of Government activity in production and service has expanded during the past year beyond all parallel. Yet every Member of Congress knows equally well that we have no means at hand of determining the cost of these operations, and, outside of those directly aimed at relief, the Government is steadily marching larger armies into the area formerly occupied by private enterprise.

As to what operations ought to be or may properly be undertaken by Government there may be difference of opinion, but surely none of us can disagree with the proposition that it is the business of Congress as trustee of the people's money to know how it is spent and what is the cost of what is done. Most of all, we must surely agree that if the Government uses the citizen's money to injure him by unfair competition or by continuing, under an artificial pretext, to lower cost, to do work or service for itself which the citizen can do better or more cheaply if the actual costs are disclosed, it not only does the citizen grievous injury individually, but it is collectively imposing a greater burden of taxation to support such a condition upon all citizens.

The investigations of our committee disclosed very clearly that by virtue of the manner in which accounts are kept in public establishments, by frequently including in costs only direct charges for material and labor, all the other costs which actually entered into the operations of the Government establishment were ignored. Thus, the Government underbid its citizen by proceeding as though all other elements of cost which were actually present were not there. It went further. If the Government establishment suffered a capital loss. Congress replaced the establishment, and the capital loss never appeared against the future product. Or a single establishment charges many of the elements of its cost to appropriations other than the one under which it directly operates a particular project, and thus escapes those elements of cost carried by another board, bureau, or department. Government establishments carry no insurance, pay no taxes, charge neither obsolescence nor depreciation, to mention a few things. The citizen who competes with them and whose money supports them is made, in competition, the victim of the very conditions which he must meet to support the Government establishment. Thus, the Government establishment constantly, by ignoring the true elements of cost, produces at less than cost by a deceptive and fraudulent system of cost accounting and deprives the citizen of the opportunity to secure a fair share of Government work which would be his under conditions of fair competition. This is a form of competition steadily condemned by the courts, the Federal Trade Commission, and every code of fair competition established under the Recovery Administration, with the approval of the President.

Our investigating committee found this condition wide-spread and we were not satisfied merely to point to these circumstances. We undertook the practical execution of our conclusions by providing a remedy. After much study and consultation a carefully drafted bill was prepared and introduced (H.R. 6038) in the first session of the Seventy-third Congress.

The purpose of this bill was to establish and maintain an accurate method of cost accounting, procedure, and cost reports for the executive departments of the United States. This was done by requiring all such departments to establish an agency to maintain an accurate system of accounting that would disclose the cost of all factors entering into their operations. The elements of cost were carefully identified and defined in accordance with the best recognized accounting practice in the business world. All Government agencies were required, in making reports and estimates, to include these items, and, if they were not included, to give the reason why. In making estimates as against competitive bids, the Government agencies were required to include allowance for all these defined items of cost, regardless of the appropriation to which they were charged. In this way, the estimates would disclose every item incurred by private bidders for the subject matter of competition. Thus, bidding between public establishments and private bidders was put on a fair and just competitive basis. Furthermore, all Government agencies were required to report to Congress on all work undertaken during the year, which report would show the cost of such work and the relation of costs to estimates submitted. Thus, Congress would know the cost of governmental operation, accurately ascertained. Finally, the Comptroller General of the United States, as the personal agent of Congress, was given the authority to make the provisions of the bill effective and to apply reasonable rules and regulations to that end. Thus, the invaluable assistance of the chief fiscal agent of Congress, whose business it has been since we have had a Government to see that appropriations are expended as provided, was given the authority to enforce the plan established and to aid all Government agencies in conforming to it.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the executive departments. The chairman of the committee sought the opinion of the heads of the executive departments and Government agencies, who very naturally antagonized the effort to place them under stricter supervision in accounting. Their criticisms, however, in many instances, clearly indicated that they understood the bill as little as they liked it. When hearings were finally obtained upon the measure, its terms were clearly explained and vindicated, and it was supported by the most representative commercial and industrial organizations in the United States, the National Association of Manufacturers, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and trade and business organizations throughout the country. The only opposition appeared from the departments whose contact we were undertaking to correct and control.

The testimony of the Comptroller General of the United States is of special importance. He is the independent agent of Congress whose business is to see that its will is obeyed in matters of public expenditure. He completely refuted the declarations of various department heads that the proposal was either unnecessary, impracticable, or would multiply personnel and increase expense. It showed, on the contrary, that it was not only practicable, but, in his opinion, essential, if accurate information with respect to Government costs was to be obtained and the operation of the plan would require few, if any, additional employees. He further asserted that any additional cost, if such cost resulted, which he doubted, would be more than justified by the great benefits resulting.

Our special committee welcomed every helpful suggestion to improve the bill. A number were received, and, in addition, substitutes were offered by the departments themselves, but, on their face, they had the obvious intent of preventing the establishment of the control the bill was intended to effect. The chief purpose of a number of suggested amendments was to confuse the issue and befuddle the committee. This became so clear that our committee felt it necessary to address a communication to the members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which we did on May 29, 1934.

Here, then, was the condition presented: A committee of the Congress had patiently investigated the whole subject of Government competition with private industry. It had submitted an elaborate and exhaustive report upon the entire subject. It had proposed a bill to remedy the conditions presented. There was every evidence that the House and the committee had the will to legislate. On two occasions the House, on a test vote, had, by overwhelming majorities, insisted that the Government should not establish a single plant which it conceived to be deliberately intended to compete with private enterprise. In the very last days of the session a further attempt was made to secure favorable consideration of the establishment of a single manufacturing plant limited to a particular product for the Post Office Department. Knowing the state of mind of the House, the Committee on Rules, in the face of an emphatic protest, declined to give a rule. There was every evidence that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments was prepared to report the bill, with perfecting amendments.

Experience with the attempt to place limitations upon appropriations has plainly indicated that it is not a practical method of control and that a variety of opinions are maintained by Members of the House with respect to particular operations. But few, if any, Members of the House disagree with the proposition that the Government ought not to compete unfairly with its own citizens. Congress is entitled to know the cost of Government operations, and that this cannot be known except through an accurate method of cost accounting in which the elements of cost are defined and the Government agencies are required to observe those elements in accounting and competition.

I regret that the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments neglected an opportunity to remove the Government from competition with private industry. Had he called together his committee to permit it to vote upon the bill to give or deny its approval of the proposal before them, after the elaborate testimony to which they had listened, and in the face of the opinion of the Comptroller General of the United States, there can be no doubt that the committee would have voted out a thoughtful and well-considered practical effort to meet this condition. Unhappily, the chairman of the committee gave more heed to the critical antagonism of the department to be regulated than to the Comptroller General of the United States, speaking from his years of experience as the servant of Congress. I have a high regard for the public service of the committee chairman. I deeply regret that he failed to act at a time when he would have rendered a great service to his country and remedied a condition which has resulted in continuing injustice to the great business constituency we in part represent.

The issue presented is not, however, to be downed. It becomes more important than ever, in the light of existing circumstances. Billions of public money are being appropriated for every form of governmental activity. Federal agencies are being established to perform every kind of a business function. To the extent that they unfairly compete with or enter the fields of business activity, they injure private enterprise and impede recovery. Moreover, I say without hesitation that the executive departments are escaping congressional control. The Congress does not know how its appropriations are expended, how the activities of Government compare with similar private operations, or whether their funds are expended economically or extravagantly. It is the traditional duty of the legislative branch to control the purse. It is abandoning that duty when it surrenders the purse strings to executive allocation. There can be no permanent economic recovery until Government quits lending and spending. All governmental expenditures are justifiable only as they stimulate the recovery of private enterprise, but if private enterprise is to be the victim of uncontrolled Government competition, its recovery is obstructed and delayed instead of being stimulated and aided by congressional control of the character of Government action. Every consideration of our traditions, the function of our Government, the circumstances of this depression, the obligations of Congress as the master of appropriation, demand that we shall effectively prevent Government operations becoming the unfair competitors of private enterprise and that we shall establish an effective means of ascertaining for our own information and that of the country, through a uniform and practical system of accounting, the cost of every Government cperation.

SAVE THE OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, that the petroleum industry of the country may be a danger spot, threatening the collapse of many phases of our national movement toward industrial recovery, has been observed by more than one careful student of our economic life. This industry, the second in importance, should be one of the most helpful agents in bringing back prosperity. It was among the first to lead the way back under the stimulus of the excise taxes imposed in 1933. It then gave promise of increased employment and enlarged purchasing power for millions of people in the oil States. This would have reacted upon the manufacturing States of the Union and have greatly accelerated our recovery from the depression. The adoption of the petroleum code has kept this industry from collapse through oversupply of crude oil, although that code has not been completely successful due to violations in some flush areas and due also to some doubt in regard to the binding force, if not the constitutionality, of regulations which are issued by the oil administrator under the code.

It was because of this situation that I presented at this session of Congress, by request of administration representatives, the Federal petroleum bill, H.R. 9676. The necessity for this measure had been increasingly recognized by most of those concerned with the industrial welfare of the Nation, as well as those whose principal and direct interest is in the petroleum industry. This measure is only the latest of a series of bills which I have from time to time presented to Congress, partly with the idea of riveting the attention of the Nation at large as well as of the Members of Congress on the need of careful thought to solve these questions, but also with the hope that definite and specific legislation might be adopted in order to meet these vitally important issues.

Even without the general depression in all phases of American business, the oil industry would have experienced a depression of its own. The unique character of its problems is such that it requires a special form of treatment unlike that required for any other form of industry. The production of crude oil, while usually grouped in the same category as mining, is quite unlike mining operations regardless of the viewpoint from which we consider it. The coal, the mineral, or the metal in the mine may be produced or not produced at the will of the owner. If it is not produced, it is safely held underground awaiting the time when production might seem profitable or desirable. It faces only one danger, that of flooding. Even flooded mines, however, may be pumped dry. The deposits in such a mine are not subject to exploitation by any neighboring miner. From the surface to the center of the earth, all the minerals or metals within the boundary of a specific tract of land belong to the owner and cannot be touched by another except through theft.

An oil well is quite different. It must be continuously produced. Suspension of activities and closing of the well may make it impossible ever to produce petroleum from that well. Production at too rapid a rate may damage the well. Furthermore, petroleum is not subject to the superficial boundaries of the surface area owned or leased by the operator. It is found in a pool to which others have access. When wells are drilled in the pool, the one who does not operate his well may find that his neighbors have drained the oil away through their own wells. He has equal rights to the oil in that common source of supply, but his neighbors may rob him of his share without his having any recourse in law such as is open to the operator of the mine who finds his coal or metal appropriated by a competitor. Furthermore, the best storage place for petroleum is underground. Storage above ground is expensive. It is also wasteful. The more volatile elements in the oil will evaporate.

The production of oil in excess of the consuming power of the Nation, plus the amount required for export trade, is unsound economically from the standpoint of the general public. Its only advantage is to wealthy individuals or corporations who may be able to purchase oil for which there is no other market and which is on sale at bargain prices, holding that oil in storage until the price has so far advanced as to give them an unearned but substantial profit.

The American people, both in their private capacities and as a Nation, have a distinct interest in the welfare of the petroleum industry. Aside from the numbers to whom it gives employment, this industry is one of the most profitable sources of public revenue, both State and Federal, which we know. It carries a heavy burden of taxation from the well mouth to the consumer. It has been estimated that it bears 166 separate taxes. If, for no other reason than that the petroleum industry is a hen which lays golden eggs, it should be preserved. The purchasing power of the oil-producing States of the Union is also another reason why this industry should receive thoughtful consideration by Congress. When the oil industry is fairly stable, the many millions of dollars received by that industry, distributed through pay rolls and through purchases of various materials, is an important element in providing customers for the industrial States of the Union and in providing traffic for the railroads carrying these purchases from the East to the oil-producing States.

Aside from food, clothing, and shelter, petroleum products possibly enter more intimately into the lives of the American people than any other. The consumer has a very real interest in the welfare of this industry. Any policy which, by waste of this natural resource or by permitting its control by a few monopolistically inclined corporations, would very directly affect the millions of consumers of petroleum products. It is therefore important that there should be such type of control as would prevent waste and also prevent the domination of this industry by a few wealthy corporations through the elimination of the less wealthy operators.

I should like to make clear at the very opening that while this measure was introduced at the request of and with the approval of the present administration, and while the present oil administrator, the Secretary of the Interior, is in hearty accord with its provisions, this plan for Federal supervision of the petroleum industry does not represent any desire of a bureaucracy to obtain control of one of the Nation's most vital industries. The Federal administration, as I understand it, is not seeking to place itself in a position of authority where it may direct an industry which vitally concerns most of the inhabitants of over 20 States of the Union and whose products probably enter more directly into the daily lives of the whole people than any other products save those concerned with food and clothing. Instead of the present administration reaching out for power in this matter, the Federal administration is here accepting a responsibility and a duty. Through its approval of this measure, the administration is taking upon itself a thankless task, fraught with most burdensome obligations, involving unremitting, detailed labor. The Federal administration, through approval of this measure, is, in part, fulfilling its pledge to restore employment, renew lost purchasing power, and revive

The petroleum industry of the Nation, with the possible exception of 5 percent of that industry, endorses the idea of a controlled supply of petroleum. That endorsement does not indicate any lack of ability on the part of the industry to solve its own problems. It does mean that the industry recognizes that 3 to 5 percent of the producing branch of that industry, through methods best described as racketeering, can make ineffective all the self-sacrificial restraints accepted by the overwhelming body of that industry. The industry also recognizes that State laws and local regulations cannot be effective in establishing stability in an industry which is national.

The policies set forth in H.R. 9676 are not novel. They are, in substance, those recommended at the March 1933 conference of the oil industry of the Nation, held under the auspices of the Secretary of the Interior, when representatives of the large companies usually called the "majors", representatives of all of the independent petroleum associations of record in the country, and representatives of governors of the oil-producing States came to an agreement that if the industry was to escape complete ruin certain programs must be carried out. Those programs involved control of production within the limits of our demand for consumption in the country and export from it, control of withdrawals from storage, control of imports, and so forth. These vital phases of that accepted program were tested through the administration of the code of fair competition for the petroleum industry. Under that code we have given these policies a reasonable trial. The result has not been perfect. All the ills of the industry have not been cured. "Hot oil" is still being run. Through court procedure and through other obstructive methods those opposed to a constructive policy for the advantage of the whole industry have done all in their power to thwart the purposes of the National Industrial Recovery Act and of the oil code adopted thereunder.

Sufficient success has been realized, however, in the administration of these policies to demonstrate their value and also to evidence the importance of giving to these policies the status and prestige of specific legislation. The courts are likely to accord to an act of Congress and a definite declaration of the policy of Congress a standing which, naturally, would not be given to a regulation or to an Executive order.

Furthermore, regulations and Executive orders may be recalled by the same authority which issued them. An act of Congress can be repealed only by Congress. If there is one thing which the petroleum industry needs more than anything else it is confidence and security. That confidence and security can be developed better when significant policies affecting the whole industry rest upon such an act of Congress rather than upon any code, administrative order, or regulation. This is especially true when the matter concerns imports, since each advance made by the industry may be wiped out completely by a simple order canceling the present limitations upon imports of cheap foreign oil.

The measure before the Seventy-third Congress for consideration, H.R. 9676, begins with a certain finding. Even a most casual study of the statistics of the industry demonstrate the truth of these findings that an excessive supply of crude petroleum and its products has damaged this industry and has also threatened to cause the abandonment of wells of settled production, which are the most important known petroleum reserves possessed by the Nation. This has been admitted for a long time by all, with the exception of a small handful who have believed that their own personal profit lay in unrestrained production regardless of price and regardless, too, of the effect such unrestrained production might have upon the ultimate recovery of this valuable and irreplaceable natural resource.

These wells of settled production produce only by pumping. This is the place to which all wells eventually come unless they become dry and cease producing. Flush fields produce large quantities of petroleum which is brought to the surface by the gas. Operation of these wells requires little labor after the well has been drilled. Stripper wells or wells of settled production, on the contrary, produce comparatively small quantities of oil and require more labor since they must be pumped. These wells, however, are among the most valuable natural resources possessed by the Nation. They constitute an invaluable treasure. If their abandonment should be forced through the overproduction of cheap oil from flush pools, then the entire American people face a serious economic loss. Such a policy would permit us skimming off the cream and throwing away all else. In view of the fact that we cannot be certain that there will be a continuous discovery of new flush fields sufficiently large to supply this Nation's needs for petroleum in the future, we must carefully safeguard the known supplies of petroleum which are reached only by these wells of settled production.

Some of these wells, notably those in the Pennsylvania grade area, produce oil from which the finest lubricants are made, Pennsylvania now supplying nearly 40 percent of the total market for motor oil. While the value of the oil produced in Pennsylvania is very high, the receipts from a single well are very low because of the small amount of oil produced per well, dropping as low as one-eighth of a barrel per day. When the supply of crude petroleum is much in excess of the demand for consumption in this country or for export abroad, the price of that product falls to a level below the general production cost. That means that it falls far below the production cost of wells of settled production. Should that condition long continue, these stripper wells or wells of settled production must inevitably be abandoned.

In spite of all attempts, both official and unofficial, to bring order into the petroleum industry, that industry has been forced to operate on uneconomic lines up to the time when the petroleum code went into effect. Because of the peculiar character of oil and its migratory nature, overproduction was practically forced upon many operators as the only alternative to surrender of their rights to the oil beneath their properties since their neighbors were draining the common pool. Discussing this question, Edwin G. Nourse and associates in America's Capacity to Produce, a study just issued by the Brockings Institute, say:

Until the adoption of the system of proration for the control of output the annual capacity of American oil wells was, for practical purposes, measured by the annual production. Under existing conditions the owner was powerless to hold back supply. Some qualification of this statement is necessary, but broadly speaking, it will be accepted by most oil men. Production might be lost before a gusher was brought under control or before pipe-line facilities reached a new field. On one occasion a strike of the oil workers shut down a fourth of the California field for a few weeks, but with rare exceptions competitive drilling and the ever-present danger of drainage forced the operator to flow or pump his wells at full capacity. In time a well reached the border line of profit where a fall in price would throw it in the red, but still the owner was reluctant to shut down for fear the well would be spoiled by infiltration of water or clogging of the sand. From 5,000 to 15,000 wells are abandoned or shut down every year, however, and the number increases in years of low prices. Return of high prices may bring thousands of them back into production.

These authors make an important point in regard to the pendulum movement of overproduction followed by low prices then by reduction in drilling, with the cycle beginning again when the consumption had restored equilibrium and profits were once more possible, only to be followed by renewed overproduction, and the vicious circle continued. In the same chapter, they write:

For practical purposes the actual production of the American oil industry may be taken as its capacity down to the year 1927. The fact that oil wells produced at full capacity before 1927 does not mean, however, that the industry was not confronted with a problem of overproduction. The truth is that the industry has experienced repeated periods when production was so far in excess of consumption that the only solution was the building of huge storage facilities and the accumulation of stocks far exceeding, in terms of days' supply, those of any other nonagricultural raw material. This condition resulted in a period of distress, which usually continued until the flush pools causing the glut had been exhausted and the check to drilling resulting from low prices had proceeded far enough to curtail production. Meanwhile the steady growth of consumption helped to restore equilibrium.

Therefore, section 1 of this proposed measure declares, as the policy of Congress, that the commerce in petroleum products is found to be of such a nature that it must be regarded as a unit, irrespective of whether transactions are interstate or intrastate commerce. To regulate this commerce, section 1 declares, restrictions must be placed upon quantities which may move in commerce when excessive supply exists, and that fair and equitable apportionment must be made among the States and among the different operators and sources of supply.

Section 2 gives the necessary authority to the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations and collect data and also to require reports and to make such inspections as his judgment finds necessary to effectuate the purposes of the act.

Section 3 provides for cooperation of the Secretary of the Interior with State executives, officials, and agencies, and authorizes joint hearings to be held with any duly authorized State agencies, the Secretary of the Interior being given specifically certain judicial authority, as is later more clearly set forth in section 10. This is not a pro forma section. Although not stated in so many words, this section is intended to protect and safeguard the rights of the various oil-producing States. In view of the fact that this measure was written and introduced in Congress before the Fifth Judicial Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States handed down its opinion in the Amazon and Panama cases, it is interesting to note that that appeal emphasizes the idea which underlies this proposed section 3, the court stating:

The Central Government was not created to be an opponent and a rival of the State governments, but to be a supplement and a protection to them. Its enumerated powers, although supreme and sometimes exercised to the dissatisfaction of some State, are not misused when, by a happy concord of duty, these governments can cooperate.

Since State laws in some States require certain hearings to be held in order that valid orders regulating production within the State may be made, this authority given the Secretary to participate in such hearings or in any other hearings relating to the industry is of more than ordinary importance. It gives to his attendance, either in person or by deputy, an official status.

In the same section, the Secretary of the Interior is given authority to cooperate with and to encourage the establishment and continuation of unofficial national, regional, State. and local committees of the petroleum industry. Under the petroleum code the planning and coordination committee has organized committees of the character mentioned, which now include over 7,000 men who are intimately acquainted with every detail of the petroleum industry. Among those committees are many which are solely and directly concerned with production problems. Even without this portion of section 3 authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cooperate with such committees, he could do so. The direct authorization, however, would give to these committees and to their relation with the Secretary a desirable standing. Through these committees the Secretary will be enabled to obtain the most expert advice and the best-informed opinion available in the Nation. The fact that these committees include every known point of view in the industry and that the membership embraces all classes of operators from the smallest to the largest, makes it important that the Secretary of the Interior should have some authority to encourage the maintenance of these committees, from the planning and coordination committee down, or of any of them which might be able to render such valuable service to him in his difficult task. Paragraph (c) of this section merely authorizes the Secretary to obtain from governmental departments and bureaus such material as they may have available concerning the petroleum industry.

Section 4 of this proposed measure, dealing with imports, is one of the most vital in the entire bill. Upon it depends the success of the remainder of the bill. No system of production control could be either complete or effective unless there is a definite limitation of imports. If the domestic producer is to be restrained from producing more than a comparatively small percentage of his potential, justice and equity demand that the importer of foreign oil should also be subject to positive limitations. The more successful become our efforts to restore the American petroleum industry on a stable basis through limitations of domestic production to the actual demand for consumption and export, the more profitable it becomes to import cheap foreign oil. Each advance in the price of the domestic product would increase the desirability, in the eyes of the importer, of increased importations. The present excise taxes, which have been continued in the new revenue act, are not sufficiently high to keep out foreign oil, when the profit to be realized is so much in excess of the excise tax.

In the past, the American price structure has been rapidly broken down by foreign oil. While it is true that these importations have not been very large in total quantity, the threat of such importations has repeatedly been sufficient to send the price for domestic oil below the actual cost of production. Furthermore, it is a well-known fact that 5 percent of a commodity in commerce is sufficient to break down the price of any product. When we join to the amount of imports that formerly came into this country, the threat of greatly increased imports, the menace to a proper economic price structure is obvious. At present these imports are limited by the same authority which limits American production, and may be rescinded by the same authority which promulgated it. By writing into the statute a positive limitation on the amounts of petroleum and its products which may be imported, and giving to the Secretary power to even further limit importations, the industry will be relieved from that continuous threat which has prevented it from feeling any degree of security in the past.

This section 4 authorizes the Secretary, through quotas if necessary, to limit the importation of petroleum and its products, including natural asphalt, to such quantities as will prevent those imports from supplying an undue proportion of the domestic consumptive and export demand, and thus interfering with current domestic production. This leaves much to the discretion of the Secretary. There is, however, a restraint upon that discretion. At present, by Executive order, the average daily importation of crude petroleum is limited to the daily average for the last 6 months of 1932. With a few changes in phraseology, this present status of imports is continued definitely until the end of 1935. Up to that time, this section provides:

| national scale the requirements for domestic consumption and for export. The same section continues then, giving the Secretary of the Interior authority, using such determination as a basis, also to determine the proper portion of such demand from any State, pool, or source of supply. Seven factors are specified, to which the Secretary is required to

The Secretary of the Interior shall not permit in any month the importation of crude petroleum or the products thereof in a greater quantity in barrels total than the average monthly rate of crude petroleum and products thereof in barrels total imported in the last 6 months of 1932: Provided, That where gasoline (finished or unfinished) is or was imported then in the computation of barrels total a barrel of gasoline shall be deemed the equivalent of two barrels.

Except for making the count in "barrels total" and providing that a barrel of gasoline shall be counted as two barrels in the barrels total, this limitation on imports is that which was agreed upon at the March 1933 conference of the industry, to which reference has already been made. It was accepted at that time by the importers as a fair quota, and was likewise accepted by the independents, many of whom had for a long time been waging a continuous campaign against the unlimited and free importation of foreign oil and its products. The representatives of the governors of the oil-producing States also accepted that limitation as proper. When agreement of these three elements of the industry, representing every important element in the industry, has been reached upon this important import question, I believe we are justified in accepting the standard which is thus fixed and which has prevailed to the present day.

There is in this section a new element introduced. Natural asphalt is specifically included among petroleum products which shall be subject to this limitation. This is made necessary by the growing demand on the part of some importers for larger importations of foreign asphalt. That demand has largely resulted from the enormous appropriations of various States and of the Federal Government for highway construction. A Federal appropriation of $400,-000,000 is now being expended, supplemented by additional appropriations from the various States. By express provision of the Bureau of Public Roads, foreign asphalt may be used in the construction of these highways, although one of the purposes of that appropriation was to encourage the employment of American labor and therefore the use of domestic products was supposed to be encouraged. It has been admitted by the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads in the Department of Agriculture that there is a sufficient quantity of domestic asphalt available for all the requirements of highway construction. The quality of much of this asphalt is unquestioned. It has been used from the below-zero temperatures of British Columbia to the tropic temperatures of Central America without being adversely affected by rapid or severe weather changes. The limitation placed upon the imports of natural asphalt in this bill, and the corresponding limitation on all petroleum, including asphalt-bearing oils, will give to the importer a share in the domestic market created by the $400,000,000 appropriation now being expended, and the new $200,000,000 appropriation recently passed by the House, but will not confer upon the foreign asphalt producer that almost exclusive monopoly of the best part of our domestic asphalt market which he now enjoys. This is an addition to the present import limitations but is a very vital and important one. It should add to employment, it should open a market to domestic asphalt-bearing oils which does not now exist, and it should assist in solving some of the serious refinery problems which have been disturbing another phase of the petroleum industry.

Section 5, which bears the title "Demand and Quotas for Movement in Commerce", gives to the Secretary of the Interior authority to determine the demand for domestic consumption and for export for petroleum and its products. It is of vital importance to the industry that some disinterested and impartial authority should determine just what constitutes this demand. No single State can do it. No private or unofficial authority could hope to have its estimates accepted as free from influence of interested parties. Only a Federal authority would be in a position to determine on a and for export. The same section continues then, giving the Secretary of the Interior authority, using such determination as a basis, also to determine the proper portion of such demand from any State, pool, or source of supply. Seven factors are specified, to which the Secretary is required to give due consideration in determining these portions of demand. Without specifying each of these seven factors, I would call attention to paragraph (3) which requires the Secretary to consider "State conservation laws and the orders of State regulatory agencies for the regulation or allo-cation of petroleum production." Two other factors are also noteworthy. They are numbers (5) and (6), number (5) requiring consideration to be given to the physical and economic conditions of fields, pools, and so forth. This is especially important, since it involves, among many other things, the preservation of wells of settled production which tap the most valuable oil reserves of the Nation. Number (6) requires consideration of imports.

Paragraph (b) of this section gives the Secretary of the Interior authority to prescribe quotas of crude petroleum for movement in commerce. While there is a certain novelty about the theory of prescribing "quotas for movement in commerce", it is, in reality, simply an expression of the authority of Congress to control interstate commerce. In consideration of this section, I would suggest that the committee refer to the declaration of policy which is proposed in section 1 of this bill. This section also provides for the establishment of plans for the scientific development of new sources of supply, and makes it unlawful to place in commerce petroleum produced in excess of the declared quota or any product derived from such petroleum.

Section 6 gives the Secretary authority to prescribe quotas for production in or from any State, pool, field, lease, and so forth. There is a proviso in this section which is of great importance. This proviso sets forth that the whole section shall remain inoperative within any State so long as valid production regulations prove effective. In other words, duly constituted State authorities have all the power to establish quotas within a State, so long as those quotas do not exceed the Federal allocation of production to that State.

Section 7 gives the Secretary of the Interior authority to require certificates of clearance, if he should deem it necessary.

Section 8 follows the usual form in authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make such rules and regulations as may be reasonably necessary to carry out the purposes of the act.

Section 9 directs the holding of hearings before quotas are prescribed, although giving to the Secretary of the Interior power to prescribe testimony quotas if an emergency exists, without notice or hearing, and also authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to adopt orders or findings of State regulatory agencies without a hearing. Other hearings are also authorized if deemed necessary.

Section 10 grants to the Secretary the power to examine witnesses, administer oaths, issue subpenas, and to order testimony by deposition.

Provisions for court review of orders, rules, and regulations under this act are made in section 11, which provides, in addition, that no injunction or restraining order is provided.

Section 12 prescribes court procedure against those failing to obey orders, regulations, and so forth, under this act.

Section 13 provides for penalties for violation of the act or any order, rule, or regulation issued pursuant thereto.

Section 14 sets up the Petroleum Administrative Board composed of not more than seven members appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, whose salaries are to be paid out of revenues collected from the industry under the special taxes imposed in the Revenue Act of 1934, and authorizes that Board to employ various qualified persons, the Secretary of the Interior being given authority to delegate any or all of his power to this Board.

Section 15 makes certain the continuance of the code of fair competition for the petroleum industry where it is not inconsistent with this act.

The remainder of the act contains a saving clause providing for prosecution for offenses committed prior to the effective date of the act under any provision of law or code which might be repealed by this act.

Section 17 provides that the validity of the remainder of the act shall not be affected by any provision in it being held unconstitutional.

Section 18 makes certain necessary definitions.

Section 20 provides that the act shall be in force for 2 years from its passage and approval. This time limit has been inserted on the theory that if the act does not appear to be practical or effective in its operation to justify its continued operation, it would become ineffective after 2 years. On the other hand, the act is thus assured a life of 2 years as a minimum period in which it might demonstrate its value both to the Nation and to the industry.

OIL INDUSTRY AIDED RECOVERY

The domestic petroleum industry, in spite of the demoralization which had characterized it previous to the adoption of the petroleum code and from which it has been endeavoring to emerge, has given unusual cooperation to the present program for industrial recovery. In spite of the fact that it had not yet attained even a cost-recovery basis, it increased employment, decreased hours of labor, increased the total amount of wages paid, and also the wage per man. It thus made available large sums of money throughout the oil-producing States for the purchase of commodities provided by other States in the Union. The industry is still maintaining those advances made for the benefit of labor and in aid of national recovery. It is doing this in spite of the fact that it is still far from a stable condition. Some sections of the industry, notably the independent producer and the independent refiner, are threatened with a breakdown in the price structure which may mean ruin to many of these. The plight of the independent marketer is involved with that of the producer and refiner. These phases of the domestic petroleum industry are seeking some degree of security such as would be afforded by a specific act of Congress definitely stating the authority for production control instead of this being dependent wholly upon Executive orders. The stay recently granted by the New Orleans court has made the situation of the administration of the code rather precarious.

It is commonly admitted that very large quantities of oil are being produced in violation of the allocation orders issued by the petroleum administrator. Until there is final action by the courts it appears to be difficult to secure enforcement of these orders, especially in view of the attitude taken by some State officials. Should there be a wide-spread and increasing overproduction inevitably the price structure would collapse and the wells of settled production would be faced with the alternative either of selling their product at less than its cost or else of considering abandonment of these properties which reach the most valuable petroleum reserves of the Nation. The importance of the wells of settled production, which would be protected by legislation of the type which I propose, has been set forth recently by Ray M. Collins, formerly State umpire for oil in Oklahoma, who made the following estimate for Oklahoma:

That in the next 20 years the 54,000 stripper and semistripper wells will produce 540,000,000 barrels while the 3,580 flush wells will ultimately produce 425,000,000 barrels of oil; that there are between 15,000 and 18,000 men employed to operate the 54,000 wells and only 10,000 men employed on the 3,580 flush wells.

From this it is quite evident that these wells of settled production must be preserved in the interest of the national welfare and also that labor has a very direct and vital interest in the preservation of these wells since more labor is required to produce a given quantity of oil from wells of settled production than from wells in the flush areas.

The cooperation in the national recovery program which has been furnished by the wells of settled production is worthy of special comment. Figures which were gathered by the Independent Petroleum Association of America from these wells of stripper production show comparative figures relative to employment conditions in their operations before and after the code became effective. This data gathered from stripper-well areas in 10 States show that the total employment for the wells and fields reported increased 34 percent in January 1934 over June 1933 and 46 percent in March 1934 over June 1933. In the same period the total monthly pay rolls increased 55 percent in January 1933 over the preceding June, and in March of this year had increased 79 percent over the preceding June. The average pay per month per man in January 1934 was 13 percent more than the pay in June 1933 and 17 percent more in March.

The petroleum industry is not the only one which has an immediate concern in the adoption of legislation which will preserve that phase of the Nation's business. The industrial States of the Union are also concerned, since they must depend, in a large degree, upon the continued purchasing powers of the oil States. So too the railroads of the country will be seriously affected by any policy which diminishes the amount of goods they carry from the industrial States to the oil States should the oil industry return to the condition in which it was a year ago. Furthermore, the coal industry cannot hope for recovery if millions of barrels of oil are consumed as fuel, replacing coal in the markets normally supplied by coal. In the absence of production control, which would balance production with the consumptive demand of the Nation, it is inevitable that large quantities of petroleum, which might otherwise have more important uses, is consumed merely as cheap fuel.

In order to give more specific authority than that which is now afforded by the petroleum code or by Executive orders for the rehabilitation of the petroleum industry, in order to prevent the entry into this country of large quantities of cheap foreign oil which might take possession of our domestic markets, in order to insure to labor continued and increased employment with shorter hours and with higher pay than it has been recently receiving, in order to maintain the purchasing power of approximately 20 States of the Union in which the oil industry is today prominent, in order to prevent further damage to the coal industry, in order to aid our railroads and our merchant marine, and, in general, to stimulate further the progress being made toward national industrial recovery, positive legislation definitely setting forth the terms under which this great natural resource can most equitably be produced is of the greatest consequence. Unless some method may be found by which to prevent a small and recalcitrant minority in that industry from wrecking the constructive work which is being attempted by the great majority, most serious damage may be done to the entire program for restoration of our national prosperity.

THE OPEN ROAD TO NATIONAL RECOVERY

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, no one can controvert the fact that when the Democratic Party on the 4th day of March 1933 entered upon the administration of the affairs of the country, the people required and demanded immediate action. Not only was this the prayer and demand of a suffering people, but it was also the requirement of the political, social, and economic condition in which the country had been placed by reason of many years of totally incompetent and inefficient administration. The condition existing on that March day of last year when Franklin D. Roosevelt faced the countless thousands of his hopeful and expectant countrymen massed in Capitol Square, and with upraised hand took the oath of his high office, is too vividly remembered to require rehearsing. However, it is well, perhaps, to sketch an outline swiftly—that we may not forget.

At that time approximately 14,000,000 men of this country, dependent upon their daily wage for a living, were out of employment. The wheels of industry had ceased to turn; desolation brooded over the silent factories; no flames flared from the furnaces; no smoke poured from the stacks; locomotives rusted in the yards of the great railways and empty cars stood idle upon the sidings; mine tipples were silent and deserted, and drift and shaft no longer echoed the sounds of toil; the highways were crowded with countless thousands of able-bodied men tramping from city to city and from town to town in a vain search for a means of | granted to the President, the death knell was rung to the livelihood; the streets of every city, great and small, reechoed day and night to the tramp of an army of unemployed vainly seeking a chance to earn a living for themselves and families; hunger and want not only marched in the ranks of this great jobless army, but hunger and want and cold and hardship and privation knocked at the doors of countless homes and, entering, laid wanton hands upon womanhood and childhood; banks and other financial institutions were daily crashing and the lifetime savings of millions of thrifty people were being swept away. The auctioneer's hammer daily rang the knell to the dreams of home owners, and farms had become but a cheap commodity in the marketplace; no ray of hope came to pierce the gloom of the nights of misery and no rainbow of promise appeared in the clouded skies of the days of despair.

This was the situation when, on the 4th day of March 1933, the man whom the people had selected as their leader, in accepting that leadership said:

The people of this country demand action—action now, and they shall have it.

Let us for a moment look at the record showing how that promise has been kept. This record is that of the special and regular sessions of the Seventy-third Congress and it is indelibly written into our country's history.

Two days after the inauguration of Franklin D. Roosevelt he declared a bank holiday and closed the doors of every banking institution in the United States. He said, in effect:

We will take stock of your condition. If you are sound and fit to operate we will let you reopen. If you are merely weak we will give you aid. If you are insolvent you can no longer handle the people's money.

We all know the result of that drastic action. There was no further crashing of banks. Stock was taken and the sound and solvent banks were almost immediately reopened. The weaker banks were aided and assisted to the extent that within a short while the banking system of the country was upon a working basis and enjoying the renewed confidence of the people.

Within 5 days after the inauguration of the new President a special session of Congress was called and assembled on the 9th day of March 1933. No delay was had in taking the action which had been promised. All precedents were shattered by the rapidity of this action. Backed by the tremendous public sentiment which had carried this administration into power, the Congress lost no time in placing upon the statute books the remedial legislation demanded by the emergency.

Almost immediately after the assemblage of Congress came the passage of what is known as "the Emergency Banking Relief Act" which met the banking situation as it then existed. This was followed by the National Economy Act which authorized the President to reorganize all Government bureaus and commissions in the interest of economy. Sweeping reductions were made in Government salaries and remunerations and slashes were ordered in other governmental departments. This legislation was immediately followed by the passage of the act legalizing the sale of light wines and beers, thus modifying the harshness of the unenforceable Volstead Act. Followed quickly the enactment of Public, No. 5, which established the Civilian Conservation Corps and in its operation placed 300,000 young men in healthful and gainful employment in the forests of

From thence on the great plan for national recovery was rapidly crystalized into legal authorization. By successive enactments the President was authorized to suspend gold specie payments, remonetize silver, ban gold exports, issue $3,000,000,000 in currency and reduce the gold content of the dollar. He was also empowered to cancel the "gold clause" in all public and private contracts. In addition to this, and for the purpose of industrial relief, the President was given authority to set aside antitrust laws in order to permit industry to enter fair-trade agreements to economize in the marketing of its products. By further authority sweat-shop system of the country and to cut-throat competitive practices.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

At the special session of Congress the great needs of the farmers of the country were recognized and their pleas for relief were heeded. A farm relief organization was created and given power to fix prices, regulate marketing of crops, rent surplus acreage, and to pay bonuses to farmers for reducing production. Authorization was granted to exchange Government-owned cotton for pledges to reduce acreage of cotton planting. The sum of $2,000,000,000 was appropriated to refinance farm mortgages at low interest rates over a long term of years. Government farm credit agencies were consolidated under a new administrator to provide fresh means and avenues of low credit rate for farmers.

All of this legislation of the special session in behalf of agriculture was supplemented at the regular session by the passage of yet more important measures of farm relief. At the regular session there was enacted the A.A.A. Farm Relief and Inflation Act providing for direct agricultural relief by authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to force increased farm prices through certain means provided in the act. Arrangement was made for farm-mortgage relief through the refinancing of farm mortgages at 41/2-percent interest for which purpose the issuance of more than $2,000,000,000 in Government bonds was authorized, the Government guaranteeing the interest. A broad inflation program was authorized involving expansion of Federal Reserve credit to the extent of $3,000,000,000 in treasury notes secured solely by the credit of the United States Government. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to make loans to drainage, levee, irrigation, and similar districts to the extent of not exceeding $50,000,000.

By the enactment of the Farm Credit Act loans were authorized for the producing and marketing of agricultural products. A production credit corporation and bank for cooperatives was created in each of the 12 Federal land bank cities with a capital of $7,500,000. Important provisions were made authorizing the purchase by intermediate credit banks of agricultural or livestock notes from national or State banks and other similar institutions, and authorizing loans to be made on warehouse receipts, mortgages, and other documents covering agricultural products or livestock.

The Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation was created by the Farm Mortgage Refinancing Act. The Crop Loan Act authorized the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration to make loans to farmers during 1934 for crop production and harvesting, and to make loans for feed for livestock in drought- and storm-stricken areas. Forty million dollars was appropriated to carry into effect the Crop Loan Act. The Jones-Connally Farm Relief Act provided for the inclusion of beef and dairy cattle and certain other basic commodities within the benefits of the A.A.A. and appropriated $200,000,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to finance the carrying out of the provisions of the act. Fifty million dollars was appropriated to reimburse farmers for cattle slain for the purpose of eradicating tuberculosis and to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make advances to the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation for the purchase of dairy and beef products for relief purposes.

The Bankhead Cotton Control Act was passed for the promotion of the orderly marketing of cotton in interstate and foreign commerce and for the stabilization of the cotton markets. To the same purpose was the Jones-Costigan Sugar Act which accomplishes for sugar the same benefits as those given to cotton in the act last named. The sum of $150,000,000 was appropriated to carry out the provisions of the last two measures.

By enactment of the Farm Mortgage Foreclosure Act a means was provided to enable farmers to secure loans for the purpose of repurchasing farm property which had been sold from them under foreclosure of mortgage.

PUBLIC WORKS

At its special session, Congress authorized the largest Public Works program in the country's history. The sum of $3,300,000,000 was set aside to carry out the purposes of the act. Of this amount, $400,000,000 was allocated for public-highway construction in the various States, and the balance was set aside to provide Federal aid in the construction of State and municipal projects, as well as to make construction loans to industry. The National Industrial Recovery Act provided for the adoption by all industries of codes of fair competition; guaranteed to labor the right to collective bargaining; it prohibits "yellow dog" contracts; establishes maximum hours, minimum rates of pay, and guarantees proper working conditions. This act is a proclamation of emancipation of labor. It writes the end, not only to the sweatshop, but to the use of child labor in the industries of this country.

HOME OWNERS

The passage of the Home Owners' Refinancing Act whereby the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was created with a capital stock of $2,000,000 and the authorization of a $2,000,000,000 bond issue gave to the small home owners of the country their first opportunity to save their homes from sacrifice at the auctioneer's block. At the regular session of Congress the bonds of this Corporation were, by an amendment to the original act, guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the United States Government. By an additional amendment at the regular session the Corporation was authorized to advance cash to an aggregate not exceeding $200,000,000 to home owners for the purpose of making necessary repairs, rebuilding and enlargement of their homes. The National Housing Act, passed at the regular session and now before the President for his signature, provides a comprehensive plan of home financing and mortgage insurance, and creates a savings and loan insurance corporation to insure the accounts of Federal savings and loan associations.

MONETARY

By joint resolution passed at the special session, the gold clause in all Federal and private obligations was canceled and these obligations were made payable in legal tender. By the Gold Reserve Act passed at the regular session the President was authorized to revalue the dollar at 50 to 60 percent of its existing statutory gold equivalent. A $2,000,-000,000 stabilization fund was created out of profit accruing to the Government as the result of the deflation of the dollar. This fund was placed in charge of the Secretary of the Treasury who was vested with authority to use it in such manner as might be deemed expedient for stabilizing the dollar abroad. The coinage of gold was declared to be at an end and the metal itself, in bullion form, is to be held in the Treasury as backing for paper currency. Title to all the gold in the Nation, including that held by the Federal Reserve banks, was vested in the Treasury of the United States.

The Silver Purchase Act, now before the President for his signature, declares it to be the policy of the United States that the proportion of silver to gold in the monetary stocks of the Nation should be increased, with the ultimate objective of having one-fourth of the value of such stocks in silver. To attain this end the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized and directed to make purchases of silver when such purchases become necessary to the maintenance of the ratio provided, and to make sales of silver whenever the monetary value of the stocks of silver becomes greater than 25 percent of the monetary value of the stocks of gold and silver. This act also authorizes the issuance of silver certificates and the placing of them in actual circulation, making such silver certificates legal tender for all debts and dues. The act also contains other important provisions with respect to the remonetization of silver and its reestablishment as a basic money for the people.

BANKING

In addition to the banking legislation enacted at the special session and which provided for the insurance of individual bank deposits up to $2,500, the regular session enacted the Banking Deposit Insurance Act which provides for an extension of this deposit insurance until July 1, 1935, and increased the amount of deposits so insured to the sum of $5,000. This act also empowered the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans upon or purchase the assets of any bank closed between December 31, 1929, and January 1, 1934, upon terms to be prescribed by the Corporation. This provision will undoubtedly result in the payment of substantial amounts to the depositors in closed banks, the affairs of which have not been yet liquidated.

RELIEF

It was already recognized by the present administration that all other plans heretofore followed, or attempted to be followed, for the relief of the distressed during the period of the depression were wholly inefficient. All forms of relief which did not go directly to those in need of it were ineffective. Already in the special session there had been made an appropriation of $500,000,000 for direct relief. This amount was granted by the Government to the various States to feed, clothe, and house the unemployed. There was created a new Federal system of employment bureaus to cooperate with the States in finding employment for those without means of support. The reforestation camps were established for the benefit of the unemployed. The Tennessee Valley Authority was created and the great sum of $240,000,000 heretofore invested by the Government in the Muscle Shoals project, and from which the Government has heretofore received no returns, was put to work. Added to this was a provision for not only the expansion by the Government of this great project, but the development of a gigantic program for developing the Tennessee River Valley. This resulted, and will result, in the placing in employment of thousands of the heretofore unemployed, and in furnishing electric power to a vast area at prices which will serve as a yardstick with which to measure the charges of privately owned utilities.

At the regular session there was passed the Roads Employment Act which is now before the President for his signature, which authorizes an appropriation of $300,000,000 for road work in the year 1935 and $100,000,000 in the year 1936. In addition to this, there is an authorization of $125,000,000 for road work in each of the years 1936 and 1937, which is available when met by the various States by an appropriation of a sum equal to that allocated to the respective States. This act also appropriates $24,000,000 to be spent during each of the next 3 years on roads through public lands, national parks, and Indian reservations. During the regular session, by the passage of the Civil Works Emergency Relief Act, there was appropriated an additional $950,000,000 available until June 30, 1935, for a continuation of the Civil Works program and for direct relief purposes.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

By an act approved by the President-on June 15, 1934, the National Guard was made a part of the Army of the United States and subject to active duty in time of war or national emergency. The Vinson naval parity bill authorizes the construction of our Navy up to the limit provided by the naval limitation treaties entered into by this country. Various other enactments were made affecting the personnel of the Marine Corps, promotions in the Navy, and the assignments of officers and enlisted men to foreign stations.

SECURITIES

At its special session, Congress passed the Securities Act which amounts to nothing more nor less than a national "blue sky" law designed to insure to the purchasers of securities that when they make their purchases in the open market they will receive securities of sound value. At the regular session there was enacted the Securities Exchange Act, which placed in the Federal Government a strong control over the stock exchanges. This measure is designed to prevent a recurrence of that disastrous period of speculation which immediately preceded the plunging of this country into its past years of depression.

REVENUE

Congress, by its Revenue Act of 1934, while increasing taxes on capital stock, estates, gifts, and certain other objects of taxation, removed part of the burden on smallincome taxpayers and shifted it to the higher incomes.

RATLROADS

By the Emergency Transportation Act, Congress established a system of railroad control and created a Coordinator of Transportation to work in cooperation with the railroads and with labor, but not at the expense of the wage earners. Thus has been set up the machinery to establish economies in railway management, to promote financial reorganization of carriers, to reduce overhead expenses, improve railway service, and to correct existing evils in railway operation.

The Railroad Retirement Act, passed by Congress and now before the President for his signature, provides for the retirement of railway employees who have been in the service for a period of 30 years or who have reached the age of 65 upon a pension or annuity. This annuity will be based on the period of service of the employee so retired. The fund out of which this pension or annuity will be paid is to be provided by contributions from the employees and from the respective railway corporations—the employees contributing an aggregate of one-third of the fund and the railways two-thirds of such fund. The act is to be administered by a railroad retirement board created by the measure. This act is one of wide-reaching importance and significance to the railway labor world.

CONCLUSION

Numerous other measures of extreme importance to the people of the country were enacted by the Seventy-third Congress. It would be impossible within a short period to give a comprehensive picture of the far-reaching effect of this legislation. Not unmindful of the youth of the land Congress provided by the Vocational Education Act for an appropriation of $3,000,000 annually for 3 years for agricultural, economic, trade, and industrial education. Congress also by the passage of the Wild Life Conservation Act pledged the Federal Government to an effort to preserve and increase the wild life of the country. Another measure along this same line authorized the establishment of sanctuaries to be devoted to the increase of game birds, game animals, and fish.

Another important measure, and one which may perhaps be destined to become the most important, is the Reciprocal Tariff Act which empowers the President to raise or lower tariff rates by not more than 50 percent, and authorizes him to enter into reciprocal-tariff trade agreements with foreign nations. This measure was planned for the expansion of the trade of the United States with foreign countries, to promote reciprocal-trade relations, and to open up foreign markets to American surplus products and commodities.

When we look back over the record of the Congress which is just closing, we cannot help but be astounded at the number and importance of the various measures of legislation enacted and written into the law of the land. It is not ours to prophesy what may be the ultimate result of this legislation upon the affairs of the Nation. We do know, however, that a great part of this legislation, and of the machinery set up by it has been in effect and working over a period of 1 year and that during that period the country has been gradually emerging from the depression. Millions have been returned to employment, distressed conditions have been relieved, industry has been revived, the wheels of transportation are turning, distress is no longer universal, and hope has entered the hearts of the American people. We may have blazed a new trial-we may have entered upon a new road, but it is an open road and we are again upon our way. The shadows of a night of despair are lifting and the dawn of a new day beckoning us on. Our leader is undaunted and unafraid-let us also be without fear.

POLITICAL USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Mr. HOIDALE. Mr. Speaker, the sordid story of how ditions in some of our slum areas are unspeakable. One sink Federal funds have been used by the State Administration of North Dakota for political purposes and for the purpose families with their water supply. Oil lamps must be used for of lining the pockets of State officials is fresh in the mind of the public.

Governor Langer, together with four members of his political gang, have been convicted, and are facing prison sentences. The slimy snake of graft and greed has horned in on the funds which have been furnished by the Federal Government to the State for relief purposes. No Federal officer or employer is involved in the steal.

Millions and hundreds of millions of Government relief funds have been sent out from Washington to help people in distress. The National Government could not undertake to handle the distribution of these funds direct, to good advantage and economically. It naturally made use of the agencies and machinery of the State governments. It had a right to depend upon the honesty and good faith of State administrators.

The President and the departments in Washington that have had charge of the distribution of these funds have taken the high ground that the distribution of emergency relief money should not be based upon political considerations. They say that a person in need is entitled to relief regardless of the party to which he belongs. That is not only reasonable, but it is the right and patriotic thing to do.

Now it appears, from information obtained from Minnesota that has just reached Washington, that Forestry Director Conzet of the Olson administration has sent out a circular letter to State forest rangers in which he gives instructions for the hire of emergency help under new allotments of Federal funds for fire-prevention work.

Mr. Conzet in his circular tells these rangers working under him that it will not be necessary to conform to usual practices in hiring these men "if you meet with the chairman or possibly chairman and secretary of your county Farmer-Labor organization and have the person you are employing approved by them in writing." He adds, with unblushing candor: "This letter of approval must accompany your notice that the man is being put to work."

It seems plain from these instructions that the reports are true that have been heard for months that a person must be a member of the Farmer-Labor Party in order to get a job paid for by relief money. These instructions are far from the fair position taken by the administration at Washington. Even if no State or private funds are being used for the purpose of employing these men, it would be wrong and entirely unfair to say that no one except those who belong to the Farmer-Labor Party shall have a chance to work at such labor as is done in clearing up the forests to prevent fires.

A NATIONAL HOUSING AND SLUM-CLEARANCE PROGRAM

Mr. CEILER. Mr. Speaker, one of the most important features in the program of the new deal is the plan to provide for national housing and slum clearance. Poor housing conditions and slum areas are a positive menace to the community in particular and to the Nation in general. Such conditions and areas breed disease and crime and illiteracy and all else that so strongly tend to undermine and weaken our national character. While we have made considerable progress in the matter of supplying to our people food, clothing, and transportation, for one reason or another we have not, up to the present time, enacted legislation to make possible a Nation-wide drive to build better and healthier houses and to rid the country of all its slum areas.

The home, it has often been said, is the very backbone of our society. It is, in fact, the very superstructure upon which all civilization rests. And because the administration appreciates and understands this fact so well, there has been enacted legislation to provide better living quarters for thousands and thousands of our citizens who are now forced to live in so-called "homes", in reality, of a character inferior to many stables, cow barns, and public garages. Conditions in some of our slum areas are unspeakable. One sink in the hallway must ofttimes suffice to provide many families with their water supply. Oil lamps must be used for light. Air spaces are often few and far between. Children reared in such squalid surroundings do not have the proper chance in life. Slums must be eradicated so that the children may be given clean and wholesome places in which to live and to play and to grow.

Aside from this very important truth, there is the further fact that a Nation-wide housing and slum clearance program will provide employment for millions of our citizens. A very large portion of the unemployed throughout the country are, in one way or another, associated with labor ordinarily employed in the building and construction world. Statistics prove that more than 6,000,000 people now on the relief rolls are normally identified with the building and construction trade, one of our basic industries. Such program, calling into play all phases of this industry will give employment, directly and indirectly, to practically all classes of labor-to the plasterer, the plumber, the electrician, the painter, the iron and steel worker, the carpenter the architect, the gardner, the interior decorator. Moreover, with newer housing there inevitably is brought along a demand for modern equipment, such as better lighting facilities, electric refrigeration, radios, telephones, modern furniture, rugs, pictures, kitchen utensils. In a word, there will be called into service many of the present unemployed skilled and unskilled workers. All along the line of the American scene there will be improved conditions. The benefits of such a program, carried out properly, will be felt throughout the length and breadth of the land.

The challenge of the slums can and must be met. For over and beyond the fact that only in this way can we establish permanent employment, lies the fact of even greater significance, that only through a properly carried out program of housing and slum clearance will the fine American home be preserved as a permanent institution.

APPORTIONING OF APPOINTMENTS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRI-CULTURE AMONG THE SEVERAL STATES, TERRITORIES, AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the District of Columbia Committee of the House of Representatives and as one who is deeply interested in the welfare of the people of the District of Columbia, I desire to bring to the attention of the House of Representatives some facts concerning the apportioning of appointments among the several States, the Territories, and the District of Columbia on the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census, a policy that has been adopted by our American Government. I think that this policy is fundamental in government. If we were to do otherwise, and fill the greater number of places in the Federal service at the seat of government with residents of the District of Columbia or territory adjacent thereto, people of distant States, including my own State of Indiana, might well take the position that they were not a part of a centralized government at Washington but that the Government at Washington is run by residents of the District of Columbia and close-by territory, to the end that residents of distant States might even lose interest in

I have noticed, too, criticism directed to certain appointees in the Department of Agriculture, because they have been sponsored by the chosen representatives of the people. This criticism may do a great injustice to those people who have entered the Government service in our emergency organizations, many of whom are highly educated and experienced and really represent a high type of personnel.

It is unfair to criticize the employees of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, where a very high standard of efficiency has been set. I have made some investigation on my own account and find there are literally hundreds of people in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration with A.B., B.S., M.S., and even Ph.D. degrees, as well as former successful business men, who previously made from five to twenty thousand dollars a year, who, on account of the depression, have accepted minor clerical positions in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. The Government is profiting through the employment of these men and women, who, on account of conditions, are required to accept places much beneath their education and experience.

These employees frequently work all day on Saturdays and on Sundays as well, in order to expedite the work of their departments, and the Members of the Congress who have sponsored them are responsible to the people for their proper performance of duty.

In the early days of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration that organization had 1,494 employees, out of a total of about 3,400, with legal residence in the District of Columbia or the two adjoining States. Such inequitable distribution originally was caused, I fully appreciate, by the fact that the Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed late in the crop year of 1933, and it was necessary to build an organization quickly, absorbing many of the old Census employees.

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration has been trying to correct the inequitable distribution of personnel without interfering with efficiency, and in so doing they are only carrying out the expressed policy of the Congress.

I submit that no one is as capable of judging the efficiency of employees of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration as is the Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act or the Secretary of Agriculture. The President has placed full responsibility upon these executives, and they are responsible to the President for their employees. It is claimed that partisan politics is being played in that organization in the extreme, while as a matter of fact their only desire is to have people who are in full accord with the aims, purposes, and ambitions of the administration and who will give the new deal a fair deal. I find in that organization 4 ex-Members of Congress; 3 are former Members of this body, and 2 of the 4 were elected to the Congress as Democrats and 2 as Republicans.

The Secretary of the Department of Agriculture is making a sincere effort to administer the affairs of the Department in accordance with a policy which has been adopted as part of the national recovery.

American agriculture is passing through a crisis. It is imperative at this time that result-producing efficiency be demanded in behalf of our American farmers in every effort our Government makes in order to speedily aid American agriculture.

I feel it my duty to sound a note of warning now, that the Congress will never desert the policy of apportioning the appointments in the Federal service at the seat of government among the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia on the basis of population, and any agitation in Washington to tear down that policy can do nothing but create a feeling of antagonism on the part of the Congress and the American people toward the District of Columbia and its people. I would not want this to happen. I know that in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration the evident intent of the Congress as regards apportionment of appointments among the States, as expressed in the Civil Service Act of January 16, 1883, likewise section 213 of the Economy Act relative to employment of man and wife at one and the same time, is being strictly adhered to, and they have also set a high standard for appointments.

We should never lose sight of the fact that it is the District of Columbia of the United States of America, rather than the United States of America of the District of Columbia.

I am moved to make these observations, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that there is a growing resentment among some of the Members of the Congress because of the large number of appointments that are made of residents of the District of Columbia and think that the criticism of the appointments from distant States is not productive of good feeling or good results. We must never allow people of the distant States to feel that they do not have equal representation at the seat of government with areas in and about Washington. I say this as a friend of the people of the District of Columbia.

I think it not unreasonable that the Government executives should have the right to select people who are in sympathy and full accord with the aims and ambitions of the President and his administration, and that the several sections of the country be properly represented in making appointments.

I submit herewith for insertion in the RECORD a list of clerks with college degrees who are now employed in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration at salaries ranging from $1,260 to $1,800 per annum, showing the name of the now in a more or less defenseless position.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. After reviewing the above list, I am constrained to say that the employees of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration have been selected with discriminating care, and I doubt very much if anywhere in the whole Federal service you will find a body of workers in the minor clerical grades with the high education possessed by the clerical staff of that organization or employees who are better suited to the jobs to which they are assigned.

It affords me great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to say a word in defense of those citizens who are striving in a result-producing manner to uplift American agriculture in order that the world may be pulled out of the depression which none of us have escaped. It is well, too, Mr. Speaker, that we recognize the fact that there can be no real recovery until the American farmer can be brought back to a reasonable degree of prosperity, for when the farmer prospers he buys what the city man produces, thus giving the city dweller work and wages to buy the product of the farm. There can be no real recovery in the industrial centers until that recovery is brought about by the backbone of the Republic, the American farmer. We must protect our producers of the food we eat. We will never have a real and lasting prosperity until our citizenship takes decisive steps to surround the source of our food, which is represented by our American farmers, with conditions which will stabilize American agriculture and provide proper reward for those who toil in the fields in order that our citizens may have an abundance of food.

A NEW DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE—A MODERN MAGNA CARTA FREEDOM FOR AMERICAN FARMERS FROM TYRANNY, CONFISCATION, AND OPPRESSION OF THE SHYLOCKS AND MONEY LENDERS

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I have not swallowed, willingly, the half-baked theories and policies of Henry A. Wallace, Dr. Rex. Tugwell, and their army of Wall Street lawyers, professors, theorists, crack-pots, and nit-wits. Many of you have read my observation on the Canadian Dionne quintuplets, when I said it was lucky that "they were not born in this country, as Secretary Wallace would probably have wanted to plow under two of them."

You may also recall that a few days ago, when Congress appropriated a million dollars to exterminate the chinch bugs, I offered an amendment to spend half of the money to "exterminate the bugs" in the Department of Agriculture. This amendment carried by a unanimous vote, although it is not so recorded in the Congressional Record.

I said on March 22, 1933, on the floor of the House when we passed the farm relief bill:

Mention has been made that this measure is revolutionary. is no more revolutionary than the hearts of the farmers of this country today. We have fixed up the banks, and I say to you country today. country today. We have fixed up the banks, and I say to you that your banks are builded upon our fertile soil. You may close all of your banks, place a conservator in every one of them, but restore farm prosperity and the money will flow once again into the bank vaults. Deny this prosperity to the farmer, deny him the cost of production, and the spiders of disaster will weave their webs of dissolution in the windows of all of the banks of the

This bill may not be perfect. If we had the privilege of submitting amendments, I would submit an amendment which would leave out all of the $10,000 experts and substitute instead real hard-headed dirt farmers, who know what they are talking about. But it is not for us to make amendments.

On March 27, 1933, I again said:

If the high-salaried farm leaders, if the well-paid professors and instructors in the colleges of agriculture, if the directors of ex-periment stations and farm doctors and research men and bug periment stations and farm doctors and research men and bug hunters in the experimental stations, and if the county agents were as successful in obtaining cost of production for farm prod-ucts as they are in telling the farmer how to run his business, there would be no need for farm-relief legislation today.

I maintain that this bill is the most forward-facing, the most far-reaching, and within 1 year will be the most fruitful of all the emergency legislation that we are passing. It is a new declaration of independence. It means freedom from the evil influence of the gambler and speculator; it means the end of the domination of the big bankers; it means the repudiation of the leather-spectacled plutocratic editors of the city press who solemnly prate of the inescapable penalties of overproduction and eventual consignment of the farmers to that sacred old white ox—the law of supply and demand. Is our tax governed by the law of supply and demand? Is the interest we pay to the money lenders governed by the law of supply and demand? Is the price of machinery that we buy from the harvester trusts based on the law of supply and demand?

During the past 10 years the farmers of this country have been deluged with a torrent of words. It is now time to quit talking and to act. Agriculture is dying. As proofs journey through any agricultural State, observe the homes, the buildings, unpainted for a decade. See the roofs rusting, the fences falling, the weeds growing up. Read the daily papers, note the number of farms confiscated by the money lenders and sold by the sheriffs. There is yet time to save the patient if heroic and emergency remedies are quickly applied.

Mr. Speaker, the farmers of this Nation had supreme faith in Franklin D. Roosevelt. Following his Kansas City speech they looked upon him as the Moses who was to lead them out of the wilderness of gloom and despair. Following his election on November 8, a new light began to shine in the homes of millions of distressed people in the wide-open spaces, and likewise in the homes of the millions of distressed workers in the cities. They knew that at last a real friend of the farmer and of the city worker was headed for the White House; the news that finally a man sat in the Presidential chair who at least was willing to try to solve this age-old problem-the disparity between agriculture and other industries.

Mr. Speaker, on June 13, 1933, the last day of the special session, I expressed regret at the failure of the President and Congress to rescue the farmers and home owners from the money lenders' strangling cord by a moratorium against foreclosure. I said:

These stricken people are the casualties of the economic war that we are now winning. These people, marching in the vast army of the dispossessed, forming the parade of the living dead, can see no rift in the black clouds of despair; for them the sun does not shine. Middle-aged men, old men who have passed their threescore and ten, their wives, their dependents—they march on to the poorhouse, to charity, to more fortunate relatives, to suicide.

They could have been saved, but we did not save them. The way was shown; the trail was blazed; but, perhaps, because the great majority of Congress had never faced the stark, grim, naked reality of being sold out by the sheriff, they failed to realize the necessity for complete and speedy action necessity for complete and speedy action.

May God will it that never again will honest and hard-working property owners be so wantonly and ruthlessly destroyed and de-voured by the financial wolves and twentieth-century Shylocks. For those who have gone, whose bleaching bones lay scattered along the broadening highways of resumption of business, of incomes, and prosperity for others, let us hope these casualties of the economic war will not fulfill the prophecy of Edwin Markham—

"O masters, lords, and rulers in all lands How will the Future reckon with this Man? How answer his brute question in that hour, When whirlwinds of rebellion shake the world? How will it be with kingdoms and with the money kings— With those who shaped him to the thing he is— When this dumb Terror shall arise to judge the world, After the lapse of the centuries?"

Mr. Speaker, the foregoing was uttered just 1 year ago. A miracle has happened in the short space of a year. On June 18, 1934, the Congress of the United States passed H.R. 9865, a new declaration of independence for the American farmer. When this law becomes effective, I can but wonder what will become of the ruthless money lender when the breath of gold leaves his feculent body and a financial death stops the rattling of his grasping brain, for he is unfit for the higher realm of life and too foul for the one below. He cannot be buried in the earth, lest he provoke a pestilence; nor in the sea, lest he poison the fish; nor swing in space, like Mahomet's coffin, lest the circling worlds, in trying to avoid contamination, crash together, wreck the universe, and bring again the noisome reign of chaos and Satan.

H.R. 9865, passed by both branches of Congress on June 18. last day of the second session of the Seventy-third Congress,

Be it enacted, etc., That section 75 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended, is amended as follows: In section 75, entitled "Agricultural Compositions and Extensions", after subsection (r), add a new subsection (s), to read as follows:

"(s) Any farmer failing to obtain the acceptance of a majority in number and amount of all creditors whose claims are affected by a composition or extension proposal, or if he feels aggrieved by the composition or extension, may amend his petition or answer asking to be adjudged a bankrupt. Such farmer may, at the time of the first hearing, petition the court that all of his property, of the first hearing, petition the court that all of his property, whether pledged, encumbered, or unencumbered, by liens or otherwise, be appraised, and that his exemptions as prescribed by the State law, subject to any liens thereon, be set aside and that he be allowed to retain possession of any part or parcel or all of the remainder of his property and pay for same under the terms and conditions set forth in this subsection (s).

"(1) Upon such a request being made in the petition or answer, at the time of the first hearing, appraisers shall be designated and appointed. Such appraisers shall appraise all the property of the debtor at its then fair and reasonable value, not necessarily the market value at the time of such appraisal. The appraisals shall be made in all other respects, with right of objections, exceptions, and appeal, in accordance with this act: Provided, That in case of real estate either party may file objections, exceptions, and and appeal, in accordance with this act: Provided, That in case of real estate either party may file objections, exceptions, and appeals within 1 year from date of order approving the appraisal. "(2) After the value of the debtor's property shall have been fixed by the appraisal as herein provided, the referee shall issue an order setting aside to such debtor his exemptions as prescribed by the State law, subject to any existing mortgages or liens upon any such exemptions to an amount equal to the value, as fixed by the appraisal, of the value of such exempt property as is covered by any mortgage or lien, and shall further order that the possession, under the control of the court, of any part or parcel or all of the remainder of the debtor's property, shall remain in the debtor subject to a general lien, as security for the payment of the value thereof to the trustee of the creditors, if a trustee is appointed, such a lien to be subject to and inferior to all prior liens, pledges, or encumbrances. Such prior liens, pledges, or encumbrances. such a lien to be subject to and inferior to all prior liens, pledges, or encumbrances. Such prior liens, pledges, or encumbrances shall remain in full force and effect, and the property covered by such prior liens, pledges, or encumbrances shall be subject to the payment of the claims of the secured creditors holding such prior liens, pledges, or encumbrances up to the actual value of such property as fixed by the appraisal provided for herein. All liens herein on livestock shall cover all increase, and all liens on real property shall cover all rental received or crops grown thereon by the debtor, as security for the payment of any sum that may be due or past due under the terms and provisions of the next paragraph, until the full value of any such particular property has been graph, until the full value of any such particular property has been paid.

"(3) Upon request of the debtor, and with the consent of the "(3) Upon request of the debtor, and with the consent of the lien holder or lien holders, the trustee, after the order is made setting aside to the debtor his exemptions, shall agree to sell to the debtor any part, parcel, or all of the remainder of the bank-rupt estate at the appraised value upon the following terms and conditions, and upon such other conditions as in the judgment of the trustee shall be fair and equitable:

"a. Payment of 1 percent interest upon the appraised price within 1 year from the date of said agreement.

"b. Payment of 2½ percent of the appraised price within 2 years from the date of said agreement.

"c. Payment of an additional 2½ percent of the appraised price.

years from the date of said agreement.

"c. Payment of an additional 2½ percent of the appraised price within 3 years from the date of said agreement.

"d. Payment of an additional 5 percent of the appraised price within 4 years from the date of said agreement.

"e. Payment of an additional 5 percent of the said appraised price within 5 years from the date of said agreement.

"f. Payment of the remaining unpaid balance of the appraised price within 6 years from the date of said agreement.

"Interest shall be paid on the appraised price and unpaid balances of the appraised price yearly as it accrues at the rate of 1 percent per annum, and all taxes shall be paid by the debtor.

"The proceeds of such payments on the appraised price and appear, and to the trustee of the unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear, if a trustee is appointed.

"(4) An agreement having been reached as provided in subsection (3), the debtor may consume or dispose of any part or parcel or all of said property whether covered by the general lien to the trustee, if a trustee is appointed, or subject to pledges or prior liens or encumbrances held by secured creditors, provided he pays the appraised value of such part or parcel or all, as the case may be, to the secured creditors, as their interests may appear, and the trustee of the unsecured creditors, as his interests may appear, if a trustee is appointed, or he may put up a bond approved by the referee in bankruptcy that he will make payments, as provided for herein, of any property so consumed or disposed of.

"(5) In case the debtor fails to make any payments, as herein provided, to any or all of the secured creditors or to the trustee of the unsecured creditors, then such secured creditors or the trustee may proceed to enforce their pledge, lien, or encumbrances trustee may proceed to enforce their pledge, lien, or encumbrances in accordance with law. It shall be the duty of the secured creditors and of the trustee of the unsecured creditors to discharge all liens of record in accordance with law, whenever the debtor has paid the appraised value of any part, parcel, or all of his property as herein provided.

"(6) Having complied with the provisions of subsection (3), the debtor may apply for his discharge as provided in this act.

"(7) If any secured creditor of the debtor, affected thereby, shall "(7) If any secured creditor of the debtor, affected thereby, shall file written objections to the manner of payments and distribution of debtor's property as herein provided for, then the court, after having set aside the debtor's exemptions as prescribed by the State law, shall stay all proceedings for a period of 5 years, during which 5 years the debtor shall retain possession of all or any part of his property, under the control of the court, provided he pays a reasonable rental annually for that part of the property of which he retain possession; the first payment of such rental to be made within 6 months of the date of the order staying proceedings, such rental to be distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interest may appear, under the provisions of this act. rental to be distributed among the secured and unsecured credit-ors, as their interest may appear, under the provisions of this act. At the end of 5 years, or prior thereto, the debtor may pay into court the appraised price of the property of which he retains pos-session: Provided, That upon request of any lien holder on real estate the court shall cause a reappraisal of such real estate, and the debtor may then pay the reappraised price, if acceptable to the lien holder, into the court; otherwise the original appraisal the lien holder, into the court; otherwise the original appraisal price shall be paid into court, and thereupon the court shall, by an order, turn over full possession and title of said property to the debtor and he may apply for his discharge as provided for by this act: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall apply only to debts existing at the time this act becomes effective.

"If the debtor fails to comply with the provisions of this subsection, the court may order the trustee to sell the property as provided in this act."

I FOLLOW THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the new deal Seventy-third Congress, which has just closed, should indeed be proud of its achievements. I, as a Member of that Congress, shall run for reelection on my record made therein. My colleagues and I in the House have willingly and graciously followed our masterful leader, Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Because I followed the President, there are in my district some benighted individuals, and one whippersnapper in particular, who seek to oppose my nomination by the Democratic Party and my subsequent election. I assure the gentleman, who seeks particularly to oppose me in the primaries, that his words in opposition to me-which involve words of opposition to President Roosevelt's policieswill fall on deaf ears. Up to date he has been attacking me. He has no grounds save "coffee grounds." I assure him that his amateur campaign against me will be as ineffectual as snow falling upon an iceberg.

There should of course be differences of opinion. That is what makes a horse race. I like a good race. I like a good fight. I seek, however, a foeman worthy of my steel. Unfortunately, the man who has the temerity to enter the field against me is one whose weapons are mental brickbats, sawed-off shotguns, sling-shots-in short, the tools of a marauder, the weapons of a political brigand, for his stock in trade is falsehood, chicanery, and deceit.

He wears a political coat of many colors. One day he wants a Democratic nomination, the next day he seeks a Republican nomination, the third day he covets the Fusionist label. He will doubtlessly wind up with a con-Fusionist nomination. He surely is not worthy of my steel. I shall hereafter ignore him and treat him with the contempt that his arrogance, distortions, and bully-ragging deserves.

The Seventy-third Congress met in special session at the call of the President, at noon, March 9, 1933, and remained at its task until June 16, 1933. Under the terms of the Norris "lame duck" amendment we met again in regular session at noon, January 3, 1934. Our record of activity has never been approached by any peace-time Congress in the lifetime of the Nation. No Congress has created for the country more benefits. It has been the very embodiment of the new deal. One of our last acts was to appropriate more than $2,000,000,000 to be used to rescue the jobless and the needy. We have always been at the call and command of the President. However, the President once was overridden. His veto of the economy bill was not sustained. I, however, was 1 of the 70 in the Lower House who stood by the President through thick and thin and sustained this veto which involved the independent offices bill. The President disapproved of it not only because it added $288,000,000 a year to the Government's financial problems, but also because it restored a form of veterans' benefits-the "presumptive" disabilities—which the President refused to countenance. That $288,000,000 would have been used for aid and relief to the unemployed.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE SPECIAL SESSION

One of the very first acts of the Congress was the result of the banking holiday. Our banking system was in chaos. Within a few hours after he was inaugurated, the President. with great courage, declared a banking holiday. All the banks of the Nation were closed. We gave the President the right to do this and made him virtual dictator over our entire banking system. We empowered the President to reopen banks where they were known to be sound. We did all this in the public interest. By March 20, 1933, we had enacted laws to save nearly $1,000,000,000 in the ordinary expenses of the Government.

Two days later we struck a body blow at prohibition, when we legalized beer. This was done by the Cullen Act, which not only added to our rapidly depleted revenue, but was a death warrant to prohibition.

We then passed the Agricultural Adjustment Act which gave both relief and rehabilitation to agriculture. We set up the C.C.C. camps, called the Civilian Conservation Corps. This involved the erection of forestry camps for unemployed and wayfaring young men. We provided for direct unemployment relief through the P.W.A. and the C.W.A. We gave the country, farm, and home, mortgage relief. We provided for the orderly reorganization of the finances of the railroads. As an emergency measure we passed the monetary gold-reserve bill.

We adopted the National Industrial Recovery Act, which changed the very economic life of the Nation—all for the better. This rehabilitated business, destroyed child labor, decreased unemployment, increased wages, expanded purchasing power, and enabled thousands of business men to continue in business.

Passage of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act was our first effort in the conservation of our national resources. This act will eventually provide for cheaper electrical power development for almost the entire South.

I herewith set forth in greater detail the most important measures that were enacted during the special session of the Seventy-third Congress. These, it will be seen, were enacted primarily to deal with an emergency.

The A.A.A., Farm Relief, and Inflation Acts, which were approved May 12, 1933, provides among other things for direct relief for agriculture by authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to force increased farm prices either through the allocation of production or through the leasing of land for the purpose of withdrawing it from production, and to license and tax processors of agricultural products to pay the cost of this program. Under the terms of this act, relief was also provided for mortgages on farms.

The Farm Credit Act of 1933, signed by the President June 16, 1933, made provision for organizations within the Farm Credit Administration to make loans for the production and marketing of agricultural products and to extend agricultural finance facilities to regional and local agencies. There was also created under the terms of this act a production credit corporation and bank for cooperatives in each of the 12 Federal land bank cities.

The Emergency Banking Relief Act, approved March 9, 1933, vested in the President and made applicable to peace-time emergencies the tremendous World War powers of regulation over transactions in credit, currency, gold, and silver. Amongst its other provisions this act authorized the President without evoking the war powers to fix restrictions on the banking business of Federal Reserve members.

Another important measure of the special session of the Seventy-third Congress is the Banking Act of 1933, which was approved June 16, 1933. This act provides for the coordination of Federal Reserve open-market activities. There was created under the provisions of this act the Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation, and provided for a deposit insurance fund made up of $150,000,000 appropriated by the Federal Government plus stock subscriptions. Provision is further made for a temporary deposit insurance fund from January 1, 1934, to June 30, 1934, insuring individual deposits up to the amount of $2,500.

The essential provisions of the State Bank Aid Act, approved March 24, 1933, is as follows: During the then existing emergency in banking, any State bank or trust company not a member of the Federal Reserve System for 1 year, might borrow directly from Federal Reserve banks by depositing satisfactory collateral, the same as member banks, under the Emergency Banking Act.

The Collateral Security Act, approved March 9, 1933, extended for 1 year, or until March 3, 1935, the time in which Federal Reserve banks may be permitted to use United States bonds as security for the issuance of their notes and credits.

The Economy Act of 1933, approved March 20, 1933, repealed existing laws relating to benefits for World War and Spanish war veterans, and authorized the President to establish a new pension system within broad limits. Under its provisions the salaries of Senators and Representatives were reduced from $10,000 to $8,500 a year.

The Beer-Wine Revenue Act, approved March 22, 1933, granted permission to brewers and wine makers to take out immediate manufacturing permits, and levied a tax of $5 on every barrel containing not more than 31 gallons; reenacted portions of the Webb-Kenyon Act; made the Hawley-Smoot Act's import duties applicable to importations.

The gold repeal joint resolution, approved June 5, 1933, canceled the gold clause in all Federal and private obligations and made them payable in legal tender.

The Silver Purchase Act, declared among other things, that it was the policy of the United States that the proportion of silver to gold in the monetary stocks of the United States be increased, with the ultimate objective of having and maintaining one-fourth of the monetary value of such stocks in silver.

The Tennessee Valley Authority Act, approved May 18, 1933, was created to maintain and operate properties owned by the United States near Muscle Shoals.

Under the provisions of the Insurance Company Loan Act, approved June 10, 1933, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to subscribe to insurance companies preferred stock of any class.

The Kick-Back Racket Act, approved June 13, 1933, made it unlawful to prevent anyone from receiving the compensation contracted for in connection with the construction of public works financed by loans or grants from the United States Government.

The Wagner National Employment System Act, approved June 6, 1933, provided for the establishment of a national employment system and for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such a system.

Under the provisions of the Home Owners' Refinancing Act, approved June 13, 1933, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was created. The Home Owners' Loan Act of 1934, approved April 27, 1934, authorized the issuance of $2,000,000,000 of bonds by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation which might be sold or exchanged for mortgages.

The Emergency Railroad Transportation Act of 1933, approved June 16, 1933, established a system of railroad control headed by a Federal Coordinator of Transportation to work in cooperation with the roads and with labor to effect economies, but not at the expense of wage earners.

The National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933, declared it to be the policy of Congress in the then existing national emergency of widespread unemployment and disorganization of industry, to encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and provide for the construction of useful public works. It covered all industries engaged in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, and provided for a comprehensive program of Public Works construction. Its record-breaking achievements of the past year may be glimpsed from the chart on the following page.

The Wagner-Lewis $500,000,000 Emergency Relief Act, approved May 12, 1933, authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make $500,000,000 available out of its funds for emergency relief purposes, to be spent by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration created by the act.

The C.C.C. Reforestation Relief Act, approved March 31, 1933, authorized the President to provide work for unemployed American citizens in the construction of works of a public nature in connection with the reforestation of lands belonging to the United States or to the States.

The Securities Act of 1933, approved May 27, 1933, required filing with the Federal Trade Commission and for transmission to prospective investors, the fullest possible information concerning new security issues sold in interstate commerce or through the mails. This act also carries penalties for violation of its provisions.

The Gasoline Tax and Postage Rate Act, approved June 16, 1933, continued the Federal 1-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax another year beyond July 1, 1933. This act further authorizes the President until June 30, 1934, to proclaim such modification of postage rates on mail matter as, after a survey, he might deem advisable by reason of increase in business, the interests of the public, or the needs of the Postal Service.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE REGULAR SESSION

The measures adopted in the regular session of this Congress were more solidly progressive. I herewith enumerate some of the more important pieces of legislation which we adopted at the regular session of the Seventythird Congress.

The Civil Works Emergency Relief Act, approved February 15, 1934, appropriated an additional 950 million dollars available until June 30, 1934, for continuation of the civil works program and for direct relief purposes under the authority of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Extension Act, approved January 20, 1934, continued the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as a lending body for 1 year, or until February 1, 1935, after which it would become only a liquidating corporation. It also provided for increasing the borrowing power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by $850,000,000.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation exports resolution, approved March 26, 1934, declared it to be the sense of Congress that in any loans made by the Reconstruction granted to mothers the power Finance Corporation, or other Federal instrumentalities to

The Liquor Taxing Act of 1934, approved January 11, 1934, was designed to yield $500.000.000 annually in revenue.

The Independent Offices Appropriations Act, passed over the Presidential veto March 28, 1934, provided for the partial restoration of the 15-percent pay cut of Federal employees and reinstated the form of veteran benefits known as "presumptive" disabilities.

Under the terms of the Vinson naval parity bill, approved March 27, 1934, authorization was given to build up the Navy to the full limit of the London Treaty. One of the new ships, I am pleased to say, will be built in the Brooklyn Navy Yard providing employment for many men in our borough.

The Equal Nationality Act, approved May 24, 1934, amended the Cable Immigration Act of 1922 relative to citizenship and naturalization so as to remove all discrimination against women in the nationality laws. It also granted to mothers the power to transmit American citizenship to children horn abroad foster exports of agricultural or other products, provision should be made that such products should be carried exclusively in vessels of the United States unless the Shipping Board Bureau, after investigation, certified to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that such vessels were not available in sufficient numbers or on necessary sailing schedule or at reasonable rates.

A comprehensive program of home financing and mortgage insurance was provided for by the National Housing Act. It seeks to pry loose private capital for much-needed housing improvements throughout the country.

The labor disputes joint resolution authorized the President to establish a board or boards to investigate issues, facts, practices, and activities of employers or employees in controversies arising under section 72 of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

The Public Utilities Review Act, approved May 14, 1934, amended section 24 of the Judicial Code with respect to the jurisdiction of district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards.

The Public Utilities Review Act, approved May 14, 1934, amended section 24 of the Judicial Code with respect to the jurisdiction of district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards.

The Arrest Facilitation Act, approved June 6, 1934, appropriated as a reward or rewards for the capture of anyone charged with violation of the criminal laws of the United States or any State, or of the District of Columbia, the sum of $25,000 to be spent at the discretion of the Attorney General of the United States.

The National Stolen Property Act, approved May 22, 1934, extended the provisions of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act of 1919 to other stolen property.

The Permanent Appropriations Act, now before the President for signature, provided, amongst other things, that a larger number of specified annual appropriations shall be subject to annual consideration and appropriation by Congress. Moreover, it requires the Comptroller General of the United States to make a survey of certain appropriations and funds in the custody of Government officers, in which the Government is financially concerned, and to report to Congress annually his recommendation for changes in existing laws.

The Bank Deposit Insurance Act, provided that beginning July 1, 1934, the amount eligible for insurance should be $5,000 of the deposits of each depositor instead of the present

In the regular session of the Seventy-third Congress, very important legislation was enacted in the matter of bankruptcy. May 24, 1934, the Municipal Bankruptcy Act was approved. This measure provided that during an emergency period of 2 years, cities and local taxing units might petition Federal courts for approval of plans for readjustment of their duties, if endorsed by holders of 51 percent of their outstanding obligations. It is further stipulated under the provisions of this act that the plan of readjustment should not be confirmed by the judge until it had been approved by creditors holding two-thirds in amount of each class of claims affected by the plan, and also of those holding three-fourths in amount of all securities.

The Corporate Bankruptcy Act, approved June 7, 1934, permitted corporations to reorganize with the consent of the majority of their creditors under the guidance of the courts and allowed financial compromises in many instances when a majority of the creditors had agreed but were balked by minorities. Further provision is made that a petition for reorganization of a corporation might be filed by any creditor or stockholder if approved by holders of 25 percent in amount of any class of creditors, and not less than 10 percent in amount of all claims against the debtor. Moreover, provision is also made that when corporations were not really insolvent but were unable nevertheless to meet maturing obligations, agreement to the petition must come from stockholders representing 10 percent of any class of stock and 5 percent of the total.

In addition thereto, there is contained in this act a prohibition against the appointing as receiver of any person related to any judge of a United States court; and another prohibition against the appointment as attorney for a receiver of any person who was such a relative or member of a law firm of which any member was a relative of such

Section III of this act stipulates that district courts or any of their judges should apportion appointments as receiver equitably amongst all eligible persons, firms, or corporations within the district. This section is the result of the investigation conducted by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee with myself as chairman into activities of the Irving Trust Co. of New York as monopoly receiver. This section prevents the recurrence of any such monopoly and compels Federal judges to apportion receiverships and trusteeships amongst persons, firms, and corporations.

The Communications Act of 1934 created a Federal Communications Commission of seven members to regulate the national, interstate, and foreign communications services by telegraph, telephone, cable, and radio. Amongst its other provisions, there is one abolishing the Federal Radio Commission and transferring its functions, as well as regulatory authority over telephone and telegraph, now vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the new Communications Commission

The Judiciary Committee of the House reported out 14 crime bills, and these were enacted into law. I introduced 11 of these measures. Punishment is provided for killing, assaulting, resisting, opposing, impeding, or interfering with Federal officers while performing their official duties-running down crime. The powers of government were provided. under the commerce clause of the Constitution, to punish extortion by means of telephone, telegraph, radio, oral message, or otherwise. The act forbidding the transportation of kidnapped persons in interstate commerce is amended to provide punishment by death if the verdict of the jury so recommends, or by imprisonment for such term as the court shall determine. Another crime control act makes it unlawful for any person to flee from one State to another for the purpose of avoiding prosecution or giving testimony in cases involving murder, kidnapping, burglary, robbery, mayhem, or extortion accompanied by threats of violence.

Punishment of 10 years imprisonment is also provided for causing or assisting in prison mutiny, riot, or escape. Punishment is provided for certain offenses committed against banks, organized or operating under laws of the United States, or any members of the Federal Reserve System.

Under the Crime Prevention Compact Act, approved June 16, 1934, the consent of Congress was granted to any two or more States to enter into agreement or compacts for cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime and in the enforcing of their respective criminal laws and policies, and to establish such agency, joint or otherwise, as they may deem desirable for making effective such agreements or compacts.

The Securities Exchange Act of 1934, approved June 6, 1934, provided for the regulation of securities exchanges and over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and the prevention of inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets. Amongst its other provisions is one establishing a bipartisan Securities and Exchange Commission of five members, appointed by the President with Senate consent. to administer the act, and also to take over from the Federal Trade Commission the administration of the Securities Act of 1933.

The Reciprocal Tariff Act, approved June 12, 1934, authorized the President for a period of 3 years to negotiate trade agreements with foreign governments without the traditional advice and consent of the Senate. Moreover, the President is empowered by proclamation to raise or lower tariff rates by not more than 50 percent.

The Revenue Act of 1934, approved May 10, 1934, it is estimated, will yield $167,000,000 additional revenue during the fiscal year 1935 and $417,000,000 during a full year's operation from increased taxes on capital-stock, estates, gifts, income, capital gains and losses, personal holding companies, reorganizations, consolidated returns, partnerships, and miscellaneous. Under the provisions of this act some of the burden on the small income taxpayers in the "earned income" class is removed and shifted more to those whose incomes come from "unearned" sources, particularly dividends and tax-exempt securities.

The Vocational Education Act of 1934, approved May 21, 1934, provided for the further development of vocational education as an emergency measure during the depression by appropriating $3,000,000 annually for 3 years, commencing July 1, 1934, one-third to be allotted to agricultural education, one-third to home economics, and the remainder to trade and industrial education.

In addition the President signed the Celler foreign trade zones bill, which permits the expansion of our export and import trade by setting up foreign trade zones at ports of entry. One of my prized possessions is the pen with which the President signed this measure.

THE FUTURE

The President's program has not been completed; much remains to be done. The people must see to it that there be returned to Congress men who will follow the President. My opponent will not follow the President. He boasts that his opposition to me is because I followed the President and upheld his veto.

In his message to Congress on June 8, the President said. amongst other things, that social insurance and Federal old-age pensions laws must be considered in the Seventyfourth Congress convening in January 1935.

* security against the hazards and vicissitudes of life is one of the basic duties of our Government.

Fear and worry based on unknown danger contribute to social unrest and economic demoralization. If, as our Constitution tells us, our Federal Government was established, among other things, "to promote the general welfare", it is our plain duty to provide for that security upon which welfare depends.

Next winter we may well undertake the great task of furthering the security of the citizen and his family through social insurance.

I have been a Representative in Congress for 12 years. I believe I have faithfully served the people of my district. The record of the past Congress in which I served has been stupendous. I did my full share in carrying the burdens. I participated with every ounce of energy within me to carry out this gigantic program of relief and war on depression. Judging from the barren record of my would-be opponent, it seems inconceivable that he could assume to carry out, much less understand, the task that awaits a Representative in Congress during its next or Seventy-fourth session. I am not worried about the result of the primary or campaign. I have confidence in my abilities to carry on and to carry out the will of my constituents. I have confidence in the intelligence of the voters. They will recognize that which is genuine and spew out that which is sham. I shall again represent the people of this district.

SURVEY TO DETERMINE THE LOSSES IN THE MEDITERRANEAN FRUIT FLY ERADICATION CAMPAIGN IN FLORIDA

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, it is my desire to call to the attention of the Members of the House S. 1800, which is a bill providing for an investigation and report of losses resulting from the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly by the Department of Agriculture. I am very much disappointed that we were not able to get final action by the House at this session, and I feel that undoubtedly the gentleman who objected did not understand the exact situation, so I am making this statement for the purpose of calling to my colleagues the true situation, with the hope that in the ensuing session of Congress we may have their assistance in passing this bill.

The Mediterranean fruit fly was detected in Florida on April 9, 1929. It was discovered in the back yard of an experiment station conducted by the Federal Department of Agriculture. In view of the great ravages by this pest in other places where it had been found, shortly, most stringent rules were promulgated. Experts of the Federal Department of Agriculture had figured that at the end of 4 or 5 months the offspring of a single female would amount to 10,000,-000,000 females, not counting the males. Therefore you can readily see that the Federal Department in its quarantine regulations, in a frenzied desire to protect apples, peaches, cherries, and soft-skinned fruit, vegetables and berries of the north, made rigid regulations. There are those that thought that the eradication campaign was merely to protect our own citrus fruit. Such is not the case, because greater damage would have been done to the soft-skinned fruits of our northern neighbors.

Some have advanced the theory that this was an effort to get money into the State. Such a statement is absurd, because the entire amount spent by the Federal Government is considerable less than we pay for labor alone in the citrus groves of my State in a 1-year period.

The citrus industry and the vegetable growers tried to cooperate with the Federal Government. The State authorities cooperated with the Federal Government. There was untold suffering, for much of which no possible claim for reimbursement is contemplated. The bill before us specifically provides for a survey only. It has been reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture, had the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and of the Director of the Budget. It is for the purpose of assembling information only, and whether there is ever reimbursement or not, the Federal Government should assemble this information.

There were various types of losses:

First. Actual destruction of fruit in quarantine areas. Second. Injuries to trees by high-powered poisonous spray.

Third. Severe rules and regulations designed to prevent the spread of infestation, and the requirement of processing fruit, curtailing of shipping seasons, and the areas to which shipments might be made.

Fourth. The actual destruction of fruit in zones other than the first zone, in those cases where the Federal Department of Agriculture had designated certain fruits and vegetables as host plants and later determined that they were not host plants.

For the information of the Members of the House I will state that a host plant was one in which it was thought that the fly would propagate, and the Federal Department of Agriculture made a list embracing a great number of different fruits and vegetables as host plants. Subsequently, it was determined that many of these were not host plants. As a simple illustration: Cowpeas and pepper were first thought to be host plants, and farmers were required to plow up these particular kind of crops. When it was determined they were not host plants it was too late to plant that season. I am not asking the Federal Government to take snap judgment. I am merely asking in the interest of fair play that the people of my State who suffered that the fruit and vegetable industry of the Nation might be safe, and in which State happened to be the battleground, he given a fair hearing.

Some have ventured the thought that the campaign was carried on by the State authorities. Sober and material reflection will show to you that certainly the State of Florida would not quarantine shipments beyond its State line. The Federal Government made the quarantine regulations. We, of course, through our own police powers desired to cooperate, assisted in carrying out the Federal quarantine regulations. These facts are clearly established in the hearing on H.R. 5016 before a subcommittee of agriculture of the House of Representatives in the Seventy-third Congress and a hearing conducted by the special subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations acting under H.R. 139, the Seventy-first Congress, this testimony showing clearly that Dr. Newell was designated by the Federal Department of Agriculture to take charge for the Federal Government. These hearings likewise showing clearly that the designation of host plants was made by the Federal Department of Agriculture, and included among those and many others green beans, eggplants, apples, pumpkins, cucumbers, squashes, cantaloups, strawberries, blackberries, and so forth, many of which were later determined not to be host plants, and from which you can readily see that we were fighting not alone to protect our own industry but to protect fruits and vegetables that do not even grow in Florida, because an examination of the list will also show apples, pomegranates, and cherries, which are not grown in our State at all.

I do not want to say too much, but do want to invite your attention to the hardships worked upon the people of my State for the benefit of the entire Nation. Mistakes were made naturally in the wild frenzy to protect agriculture. Experimentation had to be carried on, but we feel that fairness and justice entitle us to have the Federal Government definitely make a survey to determine what losses, if any, were due to the mistake of the Federal Government. The hearings clearly show that quarantine regulations were promulgated by the Federal Government.

If there be in the mind of any Member of this House any particular question, I would appreciate it if he will take the matter up with me. It is my intention to send a copy of this statement to each of my colleagues during the vacation period in order that they may clearly familiarize themselves with this meritorious bill.

The people of my State suffered. The small farmers, feeling that the Federal Government would treat them right, submitted to great hardships, and I do not exaggerate when I state that in many instances such submission practically meant starvation to those affected. The larger growers likewise cooperated and in many instances the losses incurred in that season caused the business failures of many otherwise prosperous growers.

I sincerely trust that my colleagues may join me in passing this bill.

A REVIEW OF SERVICE RENDERED

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, at the end of my present term I shall retire from Congress after more than 12 years of service. During those years it has been my pleasure to serve the people of my district, my State, and Nation. I have tried to be an efficient Congressman and to answer every call made upon me. At no time during those years of service have I ever been sparing of myself. Day or night I have worked hard in the interest of my constituents. Those long years of overwork brought on a period of ill health, but in the few months I was away from active duty my district did not suffer for want of attention and at all times I have kept in constant touch with the affairs of my district. The fact that I overworked myself in the interest of my district and became ill for a short period of time was made a political issue against me in the last campaign, and set up certain conditions that succeeded in encompassing my defeat.

Favorite-son candidates were encouraged to run against me from several counties in my congressional district, thus cutting into my strength. Many friends all over the district have written me stating that they had cast complimentary votes for their local candidates, fully intending to support me in the second primary. Furthermore, I did not have sufficient money to perfect an extensive and militant organization which was necessary to overcome the false rumors which had been circulated over the district in connection with the condition of my health. The opposition came to me at a time when I was in the midst of one of the most important sessions in the history of our Nation. My duty required me to stay in Washington, and I was unable to take the time to make an active campaign in behalf of my candidacy. These are just some of the circumstances which prevented me from entering the second primary. Illness and financial reverses had made such drains on me. I was unable to match the huge sums of money spent against me in the primary. Conditions arose in certain counties in my district in which many hundreds of illegal votes were cast against me, and which would have no doubt justified a contest. Many friends insisted on my filing a contest. This I did not care to do, as I had more interest in the welfare of my party and preserving harmony than I did in my own personal interests.

I have given the best years of my life in the service of my district. My defeat can mean no bitterness for me for I have had the pleasure of befriending many people and those thousands who, out of sheer gratitude and friendship, came to the polls and cast their vote for me on June 2 are a sufficient reward for anything I may have done. After all, the greatest reward in public office is not financial, but is the satisfaction of giving your best and of being of help to friends and constituents.

Looking back in retrospect I can take a pardonable pride in my record. I have accomplished many things for my district. The development of the inland waterways in my district has been aided by my efforts. I have befriended many veterans in my district and have at all times taken an active interest in the welfare of the soldiers who offered their all in the service of their country.

I have secured many appropriations for my district, including a beautiful new post office in my home city of New Bern, an addition to the post office at Goldsboro, a national military park at Moore's Creek Battle Ground, a new post office at Mount Olive, and a memorial to William Rufus King at Clinton. I secured from the Government historic Fort Macon and an adjoining tract of land for the purpose of a State park, which is now being developed and improved by the Civilian Conservation Corps Camp which I helped to establish there. I made a recommendation to the Forestry Service of the Department of Agriculture some time ago for the location of a purchase unit or area, either in Pamlico, Craven, or Carteret County. I am glad to say there is a purchase unit organized in the Croatan area of Craven County. There are many other things I have accomplished for my district which I do not have the time to detail now. Besides these I have been constantly doing individual services for constituents in my district.

A particular pleasure to me is the fact that the creation of the port terminal at Morehead City has become a reality. I have been actively interested in the port developments of eastern North Carolina for more than 30 years and have actively worked to that end. In 1927 I drew an act which passed through our legislature to establish a port commission in Carteret County and Hon. W. H. Bell, then representative in the State legislature from Carteret County, secured the passage of this act. This act will be found in the Public, Local, and Private Laws, North Carolina, session 1927, chapter 245. The creation of the port commission has made possible the realization of the development of the port at Morehead City and an impartial review of the records will disclose that I contributed my part toward this work. A short while ago I had the pleasure of conferring personally with President Roosevelt in behalf of the port terminal at Morehead City and I believe that my efforts in behalf of the port have been of assistance in securing this final approval. Details of the creation of the port terminal commission are set forth in a speech of mine delivered in the House of Representatives in the Congressional Record of June 27, 1929, page 3441.

I conducted my campaign on a high plane. I have said no unkind or harmful word against anyone. Much abuse and false rumors were used against me in a concerted effort to cause my defeat. I have known too many reverses in past years to be disheartened or discouraged by a temporary setback. I shall continue to maintain an active and militant interest in behalf of my district, State, and Nation. No one can take from me the pleasure I have had in serving my district for more than 12 years. It has been my privilege to have been a Member of the Seventy-third Congress, which will rank as one of the greatest sessions in our Nation's history and which gave birth to the recovery program of our great President. Throughout our entire country's history times of turmoil, strife, and depression have brought forth great men—Washington, Lincoln, Wilson—and now we have Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who I believe will rank among our greatest Presidents

His interest in the welfare of the average man and woman, his unselfish ideals and his whole-hearted and inspired leadership have brought us out of a period of chaos and have opened a way to a brighter future for us all. To have been able to serve under this great President and contribute my part toward his recovery program and to receive from him personally his appreciation and thanks, are sufficient reward for any efforts I may have made.

The friendships I have made in Congress I shall always cherish. My colleagues have always been most helpful and considerate. They are a wonderful set of fellows and it makes my heart heavy to think of leaving them. The personnel of this House, including the clerk and his assistants, have been most helpful at all times. Hon. Henry T. Rainey, our Speaker, and Hon. Joseph W. Byrns, our Democratic leader, have been my personal friends. I wish for the leadership of this House and for all my colleagues, both Republicans and Democrats, health, happiness, and success.

To all my constituents in my district whose patience, cooperation, and friendship through the years have made possible whatever success I may have had I wish for them every good thing for the days to come and may God bless them every one.

THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT MUST AID THE SCHOOLS IN THEIR PRESENT EMERGENCY

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Record, I include the following address to be delivered by me before the Ohio State Teachers Association at Cedar Point on June 25, 1934.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, it is an honor and a responsibility to address the teachers of Ohio in these days when the winds of adversity are blowing hard.

The American public-school system has been the inspiration of

The American public-school system has been the inspiration of many a song and story and of much fervid eloquence. It has been the theme of many able discourses. The advantages of an education have been impressed upon our youth by reference to the accomplishments of our learned men and women. The field of education is like a field of wheat—there is the preparation of the ground and there is the gathering of the golden grain. The public-school system has its work of preparation and its harvest season. In the past we have been much engrossed with the harvest that the public-school system produced and have not brought the preparation so much to the front. We aimed at superior scholarship, greater technic, new methods of teaching, more selective curricula, and other similar improvements that would tend to popularize the school system. But today school authorities are much more alarmed about the preparatory season than about the harvest season. "What shall the harvest be" is not so important as whether the planting of the seed will be accomplished. We are taught that the fruits of the spirit excel those of the material world. But out of it all it seems that money is the great barometer by which most of our public as well as our personal activities are measured. The lack of money has caused more misery and anguish to more people in the past few years than we can easily comprehend. Debt has stalked across our land and his course is marked by innumerable bankruptcies, foreclosures, suicides, and other misfortunes. Few people or industries have escaped his withering touch. This pernicious financial anemia that we call "debt" is sapping the lifeblood of the Nation also.

Our school system that has been such a compliment to the genius of the American people is in grave danger. It is on trial. Yes; our great Republic is also on trial.

The question is whether the Government can by extending its credit assume the burden of the heavy load of debt that the people, because of their failure to pay their taxes, have transferred to the shoulders of the States and municipalities. The perpetuity of the Republic depends quite as much upon the capacity of the of the Republic depends quite as much upon the capacity of the people to pay their taxes as it does upon their patriotism. The Congress that just adjourned voted an additional debt of about seven thousand millions and extended the national credit by guaranteeing about the thousand millions in additional objections. Congress that just adjourned voted an additional debt of about seven thousand millions and extended the national credit by guaranteeing about ten thousand millions in additional obligations. Today the national debt, direct and indirect, is greater than it ever was in the history of the Republic. Not in the history of the world has any nation taken on such financial obligations in peace times as our Republic has taken in the past 15 months—and all this in the face of constantly decreasing values. If the appraisals of the property of the country were increasing, an increasing public debt could be assimilated. But with appraisals of 30 to 50 percent, the public debt of the Nation and the various political subdivisions is fast approximating the appraisal value of the Nation's property. These public debts added to the private debts will exceed the appraisal value of all the property in the country.

The real importance of our public schools and of public education has never been appreciated so much as it is now when we are confronted with the danger of serious curtailment and possible complete failure of the system. Our public-school system is distinctively an American institution, and is a vital part of the Nation itself. Under our system of government however, it was not intended that the Federal Government should assume the responsibility of financing or managing the public schools.

it was not intended that the Federal Government should assume the responsibility of financing or managing the public schools. The basis of our form of government is the State. The State has assumed the full responsibility for the financing and manage-ment of the schools. It has divided this responsibility with the counties and municipalities. Failure by the State to discharge this responsibility is a condition precedent to Federal assistance, whether financial or otherwise. This failure must reach the pro-portions of an appearance.

whether financial or otherwise. This failure must reach the proportions of an emergency.

How stands education in this respect? Is there such an emergency as would justify the Federal Government in taking an interest in the matter? Great changes have taken place in the past few years in the attitude of the people toward the activities of the Government as they relate to the people. The pioneer asked little from his Government. He took his family and his belongings and marched forth to carve for himself a home in the western forests. He carried the banner of progress and development for his country and secured nothing in return except a home and a right to be an American citizen. But today nearly every man in every inand secured nothing in return except a nome and a right to be an American citizen. But today nearly every man in every industry and every institution has dropped his working tools and is looking toward Washington, whence cometh his help.

But must an emergency be one which is free from the fault of auyone or any group before it can be considered such an emergency as will admit of Federal action? No. An emergency is a factual condition and not an ethical one. If an emergency exists, then the hydron of remembilities thinks.

factual condition and not an ethical one. If an emergency exists, then the burden of responsibility shifts.

Does an emergency exist? I think there is not much doubt about it. Is the emergency so great as to warrant Federal assistance? I think there is no doubt about it. While this condition might have been averted, that does not alter the existence of the emergency. Admitting the emergency and the duty of the Government to assist, how shall this be done? This raises several serious questions. Shall the Government make a gift of money or shall it loan the money to the States, since this is a primary duty of the State to provide educational facilities? And shall this money, whether a gift or a loan, come from Emergency Relief Funds or from statutory enactments? Lack of finances is not a new thing in Ohio school situations. All the lack of funds in Ohio does not come from the present depression.

Ohio does not come from the present depression.

In 1923 and when I was a member of the Ohio Senate we who were from the poorer sections of the State where tax valuations were low, but where the maximum levies were made, were confronted with the fact that our tax revenues were not sufficient to operate our schools, even though we allotted more than one-half of our tax revenues to school purposes. At that time I introduced a bill providing for an appropriation of $1,250,000 to be applied toward equalizing school advantages so that the weak districts might have their schools open and the teachers paid. This bill passed. This was the first legislation of its kind. From that time forward similar provisions have been made for weak districts. passed. This was the first legislation of its kind. From that time forward similar provisions have been made for weak districts, I also introduced a bill in the Ohio Senate which became a law and which provided for a system of equalization which is the basis of the present system. A few days ago in Washington a great school authority was speaking favorably of our Ohio school equalization system and it was a pleasure for me to remind him of my activity as a pioneer in school-relief legislation in Ohio. At that time I coined the slogan, "We must educate the children where we find them, and tax wealth where we find it." Many other States have had weak districts which required State aid. When the counties failed the State responded. When the counties failed the State responded.

During the last session of Congress several bills were introduced asking Federal aid for the schools of the country—none of these bills were passed. Extensive and interesting public hearings were held before the Committee on Education. The National Committee for Federal Emergency Aid for Education presented its case in a very intelligent manner with many persuasive facts and much convincing data seeking to show the necessity for immediate action by way of the enactment of laws carrying approximately $150,000,000 in Federal aid. These hearings are printed, and I would recommend them to you as being well worth your careful study. But Congress adjourned without meeting the request of this committee. Congress has many disappointing ways about it. This mittee. Congress has many disappointing ways about it. This committee, on the other hand, being active school men, will not be halted by this disappointment. They will continue their efforts for practically every State and every locality is handicapped in one be halted by this disappointment. They will continue their efforts for practically every State and every locality is handicapped in one way or another.

Millions of delinquent taxes appear on the tax books of every taxing district of the country. Approximately $50,000,000 would be required to pay the unpaid salaries of teachers. Approximately 50,000 fewer teachers were employed in 1934 than in 1933, and this in spite of the fact that the school population increased about 200,000 annually. Teachers' salaries have dropped until in many States the average salary is less than $50 per month for 6 or 7 months per year. In many sections schools failed to open the past school year. Appraisal of property has been reduced in practically every State. In Ohio appraisals were reduced from thirteen and one-half billions to nine billions.

All these facts prove that an emergency exists and that only the Federal Government can reach it. The National Committee for Federal Emergency Aid for Education prefers the enactment of legislation. The President having refused to accept the plan providing for direct legislation favored a plan that would provide money from the general relief funds. Mr. Hopkins, the Federal Relief Director, has indicated his willingness to set aside money from the general relief funds. The deficiency appropriation bill, passed the last night of the congressional session just closed, carried an item of forty-eight millions for schools. It is claimed that this will not be enough. No doubt more will be made available from the relief funds when need is shown. Just a few days ago—June 14, I think—the Federal Government paid the State of Ohio $497,619. This was to apply toward paying salaries of teachers in rural districts and in municipalities of 5,000 population or less. This cleared up all deficiencies in 71 counties and in 493 districts, 430 of which are in State-aid districts.

in rural districts and in municipalities of 5,000 population or less. This cleared up all deficiencies in 71 counties and in 493 districts, 430 of which are in State-aid districts.

The Douglass bill which provides for an earmarking of $75,000,000 of general relief funds for schools was reported out favorably by the Committee on Education of the House of Representatives, and was on the calendar when Congress adjourned. For some time before adjournment it was evident that no legislation providing direct aid to public schools would be enacted by the Congress then in session. The subject was well considered by the committee but the opposition of the President was an obstacle difficult to overcome.

What of the future? There is no question that emergency relief will be granted for the coming year. The amount will depend upon the total amount for distribution and the need and the fervor of those demanding it.

Whether the Seventy-fourth Congress which will convene next January will favor direct legislation is uncertain. There are many who will oppose any attempt by the Federal Government to supplant the States in the control of the public schools. They will not oppose emergency relief but they are opposed to extending the Federal powers. The determining factor will be the wishes of the President, if a majority of Congress will be of the same political party with the President.

It might be interesting to recount the growth of public sentiment with reference to Federal aid. There is no doubt that in a republic public sentiment is a thing that will grow and that it is the most potent force in government.

ment with reference to Federal aid. There is no doubt that in a republic public sentiment is a thing that will grow and that it is the most potent force in government.

When the depression first set in and Federal aid was first considered, public sentiment was opposed to it. It was claimed that it smacked of the British dole. Mr. Hoover fought valiantly against it. Every effort was made to find some plan whereby the Government could aid without aiding directly. The Red Cross was encouraged to extend its field of activity. Local charities were encouraged. The President was sympathetic but hesitated to establish a precedent.

The Federal Farm Board had about 275,000,000 bushels of surplus wheat. This belonged to the Government. I conceived the idea that this wheat could be distributed through the Red Cross to be ground into flour for the needy. I introduced the first bill providing for the transfer of 50,000,000 bushels of this wheat to the Red Cross. The House of Representatives was Democratic and of course my bill was not passed, but a similar bill was passed bearing the name of a Democrat. This was followed by other bills until all the wheat was thus used. This was followed by legislation advancing $200,000,000 to the several States for road improvements and public improvements, but this was to be repaid or ments and public improvements, but this was to be repaid or charged against the future allotments for road purposes which the Government had been making for several years. This emboldened the Government, when $300,000,000 more was voted under more liberal terms. Then came the P.W.A. and the C.W.A., when all restraint was removed and when the sky was the limit for appropriations.

To my mind aid for the schools is more essential than aid to many that have received it. The public schools are so dear to the American people that they will sanction any reasonable efforts to keep them open. Whether aid from the emergency relief will be the best course or whether aid by special legislation will be the best course is now difficult for me to decide in view of Presidential opposition. Should the depression lift it is reasonable to suppose that emergency relief will be adequate. Should it continue I think the welfare of the school children will have such an appeal that the President would be inclined to change his course if it was inimical to the best interest of the children of the Nation. My experience as a teacher and in the common schools, high schools, and as a university student, makes it easy for me to sympathize with any legislative movement that is for the best interests of the schools and the school children. My record in the Ohio Senate and in the United States House of Representatives has been one of sympathy with your programs as will be attested by those who have followed school legislation in these bodies. I feel that the great cause in which your lives are centered and on which your hearts are set will not be permitted to suffer unduly and that if legislation providing Federal aid appears to be the best and wisest course when Congress convenes again, such legislation should be attempted. In the meantime let us hope that the generous hand of Uncle Sam will bring to this great cause such relief as is just, considering that justice should always precede generosity.

THE NEW DEAL AND THE OLD DEAL

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it is my precious privilege to have had a part in the work of inaugurating President Roosevelt's new deal for the American people and I covet the still greater honor and gratification of having a share in its complete realization.

The people of this country can testify to the benefits which have come from President Roosevelt's sympathy and striving for the reemployment of the millions who were jobless less than 14 months ago, for the farmers who were in poverty in the very midst of plenty, for the little merchant and dealer who faced, or actually suffered, bankruptcy and ruin. Not fewer than 25,000,000 men, women, and children were in want when President Roosevelt took charge of the Government a year ago last March. Their misery was President Roosevelt's pathetic inheritance from Hoover. I do not wish, nor do I intend to be unfair to President Hoover. I do not contend, therefore, that he should be blamed for causing the depression, but I charge him and the eastern element of the Republican party with responsibility for the continuance and aggravation of the depression. Mr. Hoover not merely omitted but he positively and repeatedly refused to take any adequate measures for the employment of those millions disemployed by the collapse of industry, or for the relief of lesser business, or for the betterment of conditions on the farms. He would not consent to a program of public works. Indeed, he opposed and denounced the suggestion. He was equally hostile to the various proposals for the assistance to small business and to agriculture. In this opposition he was abetted by other Republicans who should have understood and attempted to relieve the plight of wageworkers, farmers, and small business men. Instead, Mr. Hoover and his helpers held and practiced the creed that those at the top-the powerful banks and corporations of Wall Street—should be aided first and most, so that those below, including the millions without work or means might, somehow, sometime eat the crumbs that fell from the tables of those favorites.

If Mr. Hoover sincerely believed that the prosperity, or the bare existence, of the masses could best be assured by enriching those already possessing all the riches, then his heart must be acquitted at the expense of his head. If this belief of his was not bad ethics it certainly produced a terrible calamity. After 4 years of this false philosophy, the United States was closer to wreck and ruin—closer to a revolt of the people—than at any other juncture of its history since the Civil War. Only the election of Franklin D. Roosevelt, I am firmly convinced, prevented a subversion of our Government.

President Roosevelt has justified the confidence with which a great majority of the American people received him as a candidate and with which they have continued to regard him as their President. His first major act after his inauguration was the formulation of the emergency banking bill, designed to halt the closing of banks and the loss or impounding of the people's last remaining capital. That bill was proposed, passed, and signed in 7 hours. At once there was a new birth of confidence throughout the country. That confidence begot courage. The people were inspired. Their hopes mounted still higher as they saw the President propose to Congress, one after another, a whole series of reconstructive measures that have reversed the trend.

Whatever may be my lot in the future, it will ever be one of my proud recollections that I was a Member of the Seventy-third Congress—the Congress to which President Roosevelt confided the legislative labors of national recovery. That Congress was Democratic in respect to a majority of its membership and its leadership. It was loyal to the President and, therefore, to the people. It gave him complete and cordial cooperation. It shared with him the credit of halting the depression and reviving business and industry.

Time does not permit me to recount in any considerable detail the remedial and restorative legislation enacted by the Seventy-third Congress, which adjourned only a few hours

What I deem first in importance is the National Recovery Act, for its benefits have thus far been the most wide-spread. That act has ended child labor and given new charter to little business and new recognition to the worker. No one contends the N.R.A. has proved to be perfect, but every class of those dependent on industry—employees as well as employers—concede its immense usefulness in the present and its still greater value in the future.

Next in significance as a stimulus, not only to agriculture but also to general business, was the legislation given to the farmer. Several great and salutary agencies were created. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration provided for direct relief to agriculturists of all kinds and sections. It arranged for the refinancing of mortgages on farms, with interest at the rate of 4½ percent, through the issuance of $2,000,000,000 in Federal bonds. It authorized a program of inflation involving the expansion of Federal Reserve credits by as much as $3,000,000,000.

Then followed the Farm Credit Act of 1933, the Farm Mortgage Refinancing Act of last January, the Crop Loan Act of February 1934, and the crop-loan resolution appropriating $40,000,000 for advances to farmers for production and harvesting during this year.

These were not all the help the Seventy-third Congress gave to agriculture. In addition to these, it passed the Jones-Connally Farm Relief Act, the Jones-Costigan Sugar Act, the cotton-cattle-dairy-relief resolution, the Farm Mortgage Foreclosure Act, and the Homesteaders' Relief Act.

One of the most beneficent of the measures given to the people was that creating and financing the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. This agency has a capital of $2,000,000,000 to lend to those whose homes have been put in jeopardy by the depression. Loans equal to 80 percent of the value of the property, not exceeding $14,000, are authorized.

I am sure you will remember how I fought for 2 years for the guaranty of home-loan bonds—we guaranteed the bonds this year. Already many thousands of our people have saved their homes by recourse to this Federal assistance.

Labor also was recognized in these enactments of the Seventy-third Congress. Aside from the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, this Congress passed the bill establishing a national employment system to cooperate with the States and appropriated for its maintenance one and a half millions for the first year and $4,000,000 annually thereafter. It passed also an act appropriating $300,000,000 for the construction of highways in 1935, and one hundred millions for construction in 1936, and providing certain other funds to be expended in partnership with the several States.

In the last days of the final session there was enacted the bill prohibiting and penalizing the practice of obliging workers employed on Federal contracts to return to their employers part of their pay, thus compelling them to accept compensation below that fixed in the scales. After that came the bill authorizing the President to establish boards which shall investigate and settle disputes arising under section 7-A of the National Recovery Act.

So much for legislation of general and permanent character.

Heed was given also to the emergencies that existed, and especially to human suffering. The Wagner-Lewis Act of 1933 made $500,000,000 available to the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. In the act of February 1934 nine hundred and fifty millions additional was allocated until June 1935. These funds not only saved many thousands from suffering and death but at the same time put money in circulation and increased consumption, thus stimulating general business.

Other emergencies were met by this Congress in an act appropriating about a billion and a half dollars for various needs. This act provided $899,000,000 for relief and public works; five hundred and twenty-five millions for the benefit of those in the drought-stricken regions of the country, and eighty-five millions for the building of roads. This same bill authorizes the Emergency Relief and Public Works Administrations to draw on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for an additional billion for more public work to relieve the unemployed.

I have cited only the major measures; those which I think were at once the most imperative and humane, and which undoubtedly have done most to accomplish what was of first importance—restoration of public confidence and morale. There are other most useful measures on the list, but to these I shall not advert on this occasion. I voted for every one of these bills; for every one of these legislative efforts to save people from suffering; to prevent revolution; to assure recovery. I opposed every measure that President Roosevelt opposed. I not only have no apologies for my record in regard to these bills, but I have a deep consolation in the remembrance that my vote for these measures of restoration contributed to their enactment. I had then and I still have firm faith in President Roosevelt-in his masterful ability-in his resolve to make lawful and successful use of the powers of government in restoring our people to prosperity and happiness. I believe in the new deal, and I ask no higher privilege than that of having a part in giving it general and lasting application. I am anxious to continue to support the President and to further his policies.

Already we have heard cries of "communism" at the mere mention of these measures I have discussed here this evening. It is communism, we are told, to feed the hungry, to give work to the jobless, to extend credit to the farmer, to stabilize prices for the merchant. Such acts of Congress, we are informed, are a perversion of our political system. Certain of the beneficiaries of the old order predict that if the new deal shall be perpetuated we shall have socialism. These opponents of the President need to be told that these measures not only do not imperil the Government—they actually have saved it. The stuidity of these obstructionists in causing the conditions and dangers the country has been experiencing in the last 4 years is only exceeded by their obtuseness at a time when President Roosevelt is keeping the Government safe for them as well as for all the rest of us.

There is but one kind of communism which we need to fear. It has had a great responsibility for what happened from 1929 to 1933. If it is not curbed, it will be answerable for still worse evils hereafter. I mean the system that Grover Cleveland 40 years ago called a "communism of pelf." Cleveland's prediction that this "communism of pelf" would sometimes, if left unchecked, make "private enterprise a mere appurtenance to a vast machine" had been fulfilled in 1929.

The Insulls and Mitchells and Harrimans were in control. They were in high favor at Washington. The Government was doing no wrong and courting no disaster when it served their interests. You will recall that when, in December 1929, it was apparent to most observers that the disaster of the previous October had wrought a terrible damage to the whole foundation and superstructure of business, Mr. Hoover called together all—or nearly all—the captains of industry. For the most part they were the men who gave money and momentum to his campaign when he was telling us that the poorhouse was soon to vanish and two chickens were about to appear in every pot.

Mr. Insull was in that gathering at the White House. He also held the view that conditions were fundamentally sound. He was so optimistic, indeed, that a few weeks later he floated a new—and enormous—issue of worthless paper in exchange for the earnings of workers and the surpluses of little-business men. About the same time Mr. Hoover began to suspect the presence of prosperity "just around the corner", but he did nothing to coax it into sight.

The men whom Mr. Hoover consulted at the White House that December, and whose advice he presumably followed from then until he went into retirement, were those who deprecated every suggestion that the Government owed to the people and to itself the duty of taking some steps to prevent the depression from becoming downright destruction. They feared communism if the Government did anything to help the jobless; to feed the famishing. It was not communistic of the Government to give them tariffs according to their own specifications; to spend millions every year in quest of foreign markets for their goods; to lend hundreds of millions to their railroads; to let them manipulate the public credit for their own selfish, and sometimes criminal, purposes. No; it was only when the benefits of governmental intervention were sought for the poor and helpless that there were cries of "dole" and "communism."

You are hearing, and will continue to hear, those cries during the coming campaign. Mellon, Insull, Harriman, and Mitchell will perhaps be silent, for they are somewhat pre-occupied with legal matters just now, but their proxies will be very vocal. Fortunately, those croakings are no longer capable of causing fear. The people have learned as one lesson of this terrible quadrennium of suffering that the thing which these exploiters condemn is pretty certain to be honest and worthy. Their clamor against President Roosevelt and his program will receive no ear from the average man or woman. Most of us remember what happened under Hoover when he was taking their advice, and we are quite well aware of the change for the better that has come with Roosevelt.

If these groups and individuals could influence popular opinion sufficiently, they would elect a Congress that would obstruct the President at every turn and forestall every further proposal of his to enact measures of relief for workers, farmers, and small business men. They have made a beginning by gaining control of the Republican National Committee and the Republican congressional campaign committee. They doubtless will supply money for the expenses of such congressional candidates as are willing to pledge obedience to their commands. Whether or not the average man and woman is conscious of the fact, there is no doubt that these exploiters are fully aware of the truth that this campaign and the next will be more than a struggle between Democrats and Republicans. They know that it is a conflict to decide whether the new deal or the old order is to triumph and endure in the United States. The old order was their order; the new deal is the charter of economic liberty and security for the average man and woman.

If they shall have Congress in their keeping next winter, as they now have the command of the Republican committees, they will make the clock stand still if they cannot indeed turn it back to the old days and the old ways. With Congress under their domination, there would be no more appropriations for public works, with their need for men and materials; there would be no loans to farmers; no help through the N.R.A. for little business; no relief for those otherwise without food or shelter; no care or concern for those millions who recently were taken care of by the Government. The President would be rendered helpless. And beyond that I dislike to vision, for, if I should look even a little way past that point, I fear I should see the stupidity which brought the depression bringing the thousand times greater disaster of revolution.

There is one way in which to guarantee the continuance of the work of recovery begun by President Roosevelt. That is to nominate and elect men and women who accept and advocate his policies.

We are at a critical juncture. Retreat—even hesitation—will cost us all we have gained and endanger the future.

We must go forward with the President and to the goal he has set. The reward of this loyalty to him and devotion to his ideals and objectives will be the achievement of a larger measure of social justice than the world has ever known. We shall be repaid by the insurance of workers against the consequences of unemployment; of the average man and woman against the terrors of losing the home; of the aged against destitution which haunts their years of feebleness.

I pledge my support to the President and to all these objectives. President Roosevelt can count on my voice for every item of his program. I am sure the people will uphold the President, not for his sake alone but for the sake of this country and its 125,000,000 souls.

A NEW DEAL FOR RAILROAD WORKERS

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, for many years railroad workers have been fighting for a just and square deal. Always in the past their fight has been a losing one and most emphatically so since the World War, which period has witnessed huge consolidations and vast mergers of the railroads by a few bloated millionaires.

Outstanding among these mushroom railroad magnates are the Van Sweringen brothers, of Cleveland, Ohio. Recent disclosures by the Department of Justice investigators in the collapse of the Union Trust Co. of Cleveland revealed that these railroad kings obtained their huge fortunes by swindling stockholders and depositors in the Union Trust and in the Alleghany Corporation; that they borrowed immense sums of money from the house of Morgan and that the choice collateral of the Union Trust Co. was plundered to buy Liberty bonds to the extent of $10,000,000 which were retained by Morgan as collateral for the Van Sweringen loan. Leave it to old John Pirate—he will always get his even though widows and orphans are robbed of their nickels and pennies.

This was the insufferable condition of blatant plutocratic rule under which railroad workers labored in the past. The railroad czars adopted the nefarious policy of "we own the right-of-way; we own the rolling stock; we own the watered stock; we own the workingman." They borrowed millions from the Government without reducing the salaries of their $100,000-a-year officials. They kept going deeper into the red because they were too greedy and stubborn to reduce rates or to install modern equipment and conveniences.

All this has been changed during the Roosevelt administration. Railroads have been forced to humanize their relations with their employees. Not willingly did they surrender to the new order of things. Unwillingly they will be forced to accept the new legislation enacted into law on the last day of the session. I refer to the railroad pension bill and the Railway Act amendments, first initiated by a petition signed by 145 Members discharging the committee from further consideration of the bill.

I am proud to state that my name was on that petition the same as it was on all other petitions that would benefit labor, farmers, or war veterans. The most credit for the passage of these two bills should go to my colleague "Fighting Bob" CROSSER, of Cleveland, and his courageous young assistant, Hon. Joseph P. Monaghan, from Montana. I am pleased to append a letter from Congressman Monaghan expressing appreciation for my humble efforts in the fight for the railroad bills.

> CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Mr. Charles V. Truax, M.C.,

House Office Building, Washington, D.C., June 1934.

My Dear Charlie: I take this means of expressing to you appreciation for your signing the petition declaring a policy against adjournment until disposal of pending remedial legislation.

Your so doing played no small part, I assure you, in the victory which was achieved yesterday when the House passed the railroad pension bill and the Railway Labor Act amendments.

With every wish for your future success and assurance of my high esteem, I am,

Sincerely yours

Sincerely yours,

P.S.—Mr. CROSSER said that your action will be brought to the attention of those vitally interested in the success of the measures he sponsored.

Mr. Speaker, having been a workingman myself all my life, my sympathies quite naturally are with the millions of toilers who have to somehow, some way, earn a living for themselves and their families. In this crisis, in this depression, in this panic, which has bankrupted millions of farmers, small-business men and merchants, and which 4 years ago caused 15,000,000 men to walk the streets for a job when no job was to be found, when millions of frail, underfed mothers and children humbly bowed their heads in prayer before retiring and prayed that the morrow might bring forth something better, something different, a job or an income, I have carefully weighed and analyzed every piece of legislation that has been introduced in the House of Repre-

In a great majority of the legislation thus considered and acted upon there were always two sides to consider; the one side was the side of the wageworkers, the struggling masses, who create all of the wealth and in the end pay all of the taxes. The other side is the side of the idle holders of idle capital, the money kings, the Sir Francis Drakes, Captain Kidds, and Blue Beards of Wall Street as represented by Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the Rockefellers, the Harrimans, the Mellons, who do the least in creative or constructive work and collect the most from the toiling masses.

This infamous band of blue-blooded millionaires have deliberately swindled thousands of poor working people out of the little homes which their toil had paid for and driven them forth to perish. They have ruthlessly trampled the life out of labor unions in the past, and in years gone by across the doors of their mills, factories, and shops was written in letters of nether fire, "Abandon hope, all ye who enter here."

Nearly every dollar of their millions has been coined from the lifeblood of labor. They might well be called "financial cannibals." The term is tame. It were like calling Medusa dreadful, Primo Carnera uncomely, or the devil displeasing. It would require a Mirabeau to express in a single phrase the character of men so graceless in greed, so insensate to all the nobler promptings of the soul. Hence I determine as best I can which legislation is best for the wageworkers and poorest for the blue-blooded capitalists, then I raise my voice and cast my vote on the side of the workingman, and keep on "raisin" and "castin" until hell freezes over.

If in all of the 197 roll calls in the first and second sessions of the Seventy-third Congress, I once cast a single vote that was detrimental to labor, I should be pleased to have it pointed out so that such a mistake will not occur again. A few days ago it was my privilege and honor to address the Central Labor Union of Washington, D.C. They said I made a forceful talk which was enthusiastically received by labor. They also said that-gressman at large from the State of Ohio.

What is regarded as one of the most brilliant addresses by an invited guest at the Washington Central Labor Union was delivered at the meeting this week by Hon. Charles V. Truax, Congressman at large from the State of Ohio.

Congressman Trauax was reported by delegates and members of the legislative committee to have proven one of the most consistent as well as a most able friend of wage earners in the United States House of Representatives.

In his address Monday evening, Congressman Trauax reviewed his association with organized labor, since childhood, when his father was a union carpenter; his work as a farmer and his activities in the interest of farmers. He was director of agriculture in Ohio for several years before being sent to Congress and it is now reported that citizens of his State are contemplating sending him to the United States Senate this year.

He commended President Roosevelt and spoke favorably of the pending Wagner labor-disputes bill and the Connery 30-hour week pending Wagner labor-disputes bill and the Connery 30-hour week bill. Congressman Truax, during the present session of Congress, introduced a bill to declare a moratorium on loans on homes and farms, with provisions for reduced interest rates. He also introduced a bill which would permit the Government to make loans direct to individuals, including wage earners, in time of need. has consistently fought for basic farm prices that would insure a living income for farmers, and eventually the 5-day work week and other progressive measures as sponsored by organized labor, believing that workers on the farms and workers in the factories and elsewhere have similar interests.

Congressman Truax has, according to E. J. Roche, of the Central Labor Union legislative committee, signed every petition in Congress in behalf of labor and has voted favorably on every bill in which wage earners have been concerned.

The speech was enthusiastically applauded throughout and, at its conclusion, a unanimous standing vote of thanks was extended to Congressman Truax in appreciation for his splendid address and his loyalty to the interests of those who toil for a living.

WORK OF THE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE DURING THE SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, during the special and regular sessions of this Congress the Committee on Ways and Means has considered and reported more bills and resolutions of a major character to the House than in any like period since the World War. Many of these measures dealt with subjects other than the raising of revenue, and their enactment form a vital part of the President's recovery program.

TAXATION OF NONINTOXICATING LIQUOR

Five days after Congress was called into special session, following the inauguration of President Roosevelt, H.R. 3341 was reported to the House. This measure amended the Volstead Act and provided for the raising of revenue by the taxation of certain nonintoxicating liquors containing not more than 3.2 percent of alcohol by weight. Eight days later the same was signed by the President and became law.

EXTENSION OF GASOLINE TAX

On April 18, 1933, the committee reported H.R. 5040, to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year and to modify postage rates on mail matter. This measure also provided that the tax on electrical energy levied on the consumers under the 1932 Revenue Act should be paid by the producer instead.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT

On May 23, 1933, the national industrial recovery bill was reported to the House, the provisions of which declared it to be the policy of Congress, in the then existing national emergency of wide-spread unemployment and disorganization of industry, to encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and provide for the construction of useful public works. This measure formed the very foundation of many of the important recovery activities of the administration. It provided for the creation of the National Recovery Administration, the Industrial Recovery Board, and the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works.

Under the provisions of this measure codes of fair competition have been set up and provision was made that the violation of such codes should be deemed unfair competition, to be restrained by United States district courts.

One of the most important reforms brought about by the enactment of this law has been the abolition of child labor and the elimination of the sweatshop conditions existing in many of our industries. Labor has been guaranteed the right of collective bargaining, prohibition of "yellow dog" contracts, and establishment of maximum hours, minimum rates of pay, and proper working conditions.

This measure provided that the Federal Emergency Administration for Public Works might function for 2 years, and authorized the Administrator to prepare a program covering highways, water systems, conservation and development of natural resources, prevention of soil erosion, water power and electrical transmission development, river and harbor improvement, flood control, low-cost housing and slum clearance, and other needful improvements.

Additional taxes were levied by the provisions of this bill. An additional one-half cent was added to the gasoline tax; the capital stock and excess-profits tax; a 5 percent dividends tax, and effective January 1, 1933, it eliminated the carry-over of net-loss deductions for previous year, and also increased the consolidated corporation returns tax rate from three-fourths to 1 percent for the years 1934 and 1935, as well as extending the life of certain existing excise taxes.

AMENDMENT TO SETTLEMENT OF WAR CLAIMS ACT

House Joint Resolution 183 was also reported from the committee and enacted. This resolution extended the time in which applicants could file claim for awards made under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928. A similar resolution was also reported and enacted during the regular session, extending the time an additional 2 years in which to make application.

STUDY OF REVENUE LAWS

Just prior to the adjournment of the special session, the House authorized the Committee on Ways and Means as a whole or by subcommittee to make a study of the revenue laws with a view to plugging the existing loopholes whereby many were legally avoiding the payment of income taxes.

During the interval between the adjournment of the special and the convening of the regular session a subcommittee devoted weeks of intensive study and investigation to this subject. During this period the repeal of the eighteenth amendment was ratified by the required number of States, and study was also given the subject of liquor taxation, and prior to the convening of the regular session the entire committee returned to Washington and conducted hearings on liquor taxation and revenue revision.

LIQUOR TAXING ACT OF 1934

On January 3, 1934, the first day of the regular session, H.R. 6131, the liquor taxing bill, was reported to the House. This measure was enacted into law on January 11, and was designed to yield the Treasury approximately $450,000,000 revenue during the fiscal year 1935.

AMENDMENT TO NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT

H.R. 7599 was reported to the House on February 5, 1934. This measure amended the National Industrial Recovery Act by authorizing the President, through the Public Works Administration, to make loans to nonprofit corporations to finance or aid in financing the repair or reconstruction of homes and other properties damaged or destroyed by earthquakes, storms, floods, and other natural causes during the years 1933 and 1934.

REVENUE ACT OF 1934

After devoting several weeks of consideration to the report of the subcommittee and the evidence presented during the public hearings, H.R. 7835 was reported to the House on February 12, 1934.

In the form in which this measure was finally enacted into law it is estimated that $417,000,000 of additional revenue would be received by the Treasury during a full year's operation of its many provisions. This measure reestablished the principle of earned income allowance and removed some of the burden on small-income taxpayers and shifted it more to those whose incomes came from "unearned sources' particularly dividends and tax-exempt securities; provided a different treatment of taxing capital gains and losses, with an estimated additional yield of $30,000,000 annually. Repealed the bank check tax effective January 1, 1935. Removed the tax on candy and soft drinks: jewelry of $25 value and under, as also the tax on furs valued at $75 or less. This measure also plugged up many loopholes through which many had been avoiding payment of income taxes. Abolished the consolidated returns for all corporations except railroads, and tightened up provisions relating to reorganization of corporations. Provided for publicity of certain facts relating to each income return, including the amount of gross income and credits against net income and the total tax paid. Provided a new basis for taxing personal holding companies and reenacted the capital stock and excessprofits tax.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS

H.R. 8687, to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, was reported to the House on March 17, 1934, and the same was approved by the President on June 12. Under the terms of this measure the President is authorized for a period of 3 years to negotiate trade agreements with foreign countries and to raise or lower existing tariff rates by not more than 50 percent. This measure is designed to check the rapid decline in our foreign trade and to provide the machinery whereby our country will be in a position to compete with other countries in negotiation of trade agreements and thereby bring about the expansion of our foreign markets for our surplus agricultural and industrial products.

FOREIGN-TRADE ZONES

H.R. 9322, to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in the ports of entry of the United States, to encourage and expedite foreign commerce, was reported to the House on May 9, 1934. This measure likewise has been approved by the President. It is | designed to establish zones similar to those existing in other countries throughout the world, to improve our foreign trade, and to bring about improvement in customs administration. These zones will be of inestimable benefit to our shipping and domestic industries. Their establishment has long been advocated by American industry and port authorities in every section of the country.

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 601 (C) (2), REVENUE ACT OF 1932

H.R. 9234 was reported by the committee on May 17, 1934. This bill extends the exemption to malt sirup, malt extract, and liquid malt sold by the manufacturer or producer to a dealer who resells it, directly or through another dealer, to a baker or manufacturer or producer of malted milk, medicinal products, food, cereal beverages, and so forth. Under the present law some manufacturers were at a serious disadvantage in competition with manufacturers who maintained their own distributing agencies and made direct sales, thereby securing the exemption from the tax. This measure equalized the competitive situation and accords equal opportunity to all and special privilege to none.

AMENDMENT TO THE TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

H.R. 4798 was reported by the committee. This measure merely extended the period of limitations with respect to claims filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by the Alien Property Custodian for refund or credit for income. war-profits, or excess-profits taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected from a limited number of claimants whose property was in the custody and control of the Alien Property Custodian. Its enactment is a matter of good faith and simple honesty in affording these claimants their day in court, since they at no time had a right to defend themselves during the time the property was in the trusteeship of the Government.

THE SILVER PURCHASE ACT

H.R. 9745, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes, was reported by the committee on May 28, 1934. The provisions of this measure declare it to be the policy of the United States that the proportion of silver to gold in the monetary stocks of the United States should be increased, with the ultimate objective of having and maintaining onefourth of the monetary value of such stocks in silver. This act authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to issue silver certificates and place same in actual circulation, in such denominations as he might prescribe.

This measure constitutes an important step in aid of recovery and paves the way for international cooperation in aid of general world recovery and in promoting further steps to better the means of exchange among the great trading nations. With a proper proportion of silver in our monetary stocks, we may look toward a coordinated use of that silver to check changes in the purchasing power of the dollar. The enactment of this measure will open world markets for the products of American agriculture, industry, and labor.

REGULATION OF DISTILLERIES AND RECTIFIERS

H.R. 9617, to authorize the reduction of the required distance between liquor distilleries and rectifying plants and to authorize higher fences around distilleries, was reported to the House. This measure amended the provisions of law which have been on the statute books for more than 50 years, and will enable the Government to give closer supervision over such plants, as well as added protection against trespassers.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN CONTAINERS OF DISTILLED SPIRITS

House Joint Resolution 370 to protect the revenue by regulation of the traffic in containers of distilled spirits was reported and enacted into law. This measure was designed to afford means whereby a surveillance may be had over the manufacture and use of bottles. There is at the present time a very large illicit trade in the manufacture of such containers and it is believed that an adequate control of the manufacture, sale, and distribution and possession of liquor bottles by duly qualified distillers and rectifiers, and by supervision over the principal dealers and jobbers, both in new and used bottles, will deprive the illicit distillers of the principal means which they now employ of introducing untaxed spirits into the regular lawful channels of commerce.

Another measure designed to protect the revenue and to stamp out the illicit manufacture of distilled spirits was reported from the committee and enacted into law. House Joint Resolution 373 authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to require persons disposing of substances used in the manufacture of distilled spirits, such as corn sugar, cane sugar, and malt sugar, to make correct returns to him showing the names of persons to whom the disposition is made, the quantity disposed of, and other information in connection therewith. With such information the Commissioner will be able to determine whether taxes due on distilled spirits manufactured from such substances have been paid, and will also provide a formidable means of combating illicit distilling by enabling the Commissioner to trace such substances into the hands of the illegitimate manufacturer.

PAYMENT BY GERMANY ON AWARDS OF THE MIXED CLAIMS COMMISSION

House Joint Resolution 365, to amend the settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, was reported by the committee and passed by both the House and Senate, and is now awaiting action by the President. This resolution provided for withholding further payments to German nationals from the German special-deposit account in the Treasury, for such period or periods as the President determines Germany to be in arrears in the payments of principal and interest under the debt-funding agreement entered into between Germany and the United States on June 23, 1930.

TAXATION AND REGULATION OF FIREARMS

H.R. 9741 was reported by the committee on May 28, 1934. This bill provided for the taxation of manufacturers, importers, and dealers in certain firearms and machine guns, to tax the sale or other disposal of such weapons, and to regulate the interstate transportation of the same. This measure will give the Department of Justice added powers to cope with the growing frequency of crimes of violence, and will be helpful in depriving the gangster of his most dangerous weapon, the machine gun.

SMUGGLED WATCHES

House Joint Resolution 322, providing for the disposition of smuggled watches, watch movements, and parts, when confiscated by the Government under the customs laws, was also passed by both the House and Senate. This resolution is designed to give protection to the domestic jeweled watch manufacturers and the legitimate importers against the destructive competition growing out of the disposition of such merchandise at public auctions. It will also discourage the smuggling of such merchandise into the commerce of the United States.

Many other important matters were considered by the committee during the session just adjourned. Extensive hearings were held on the subjects of unemployment insurance, taxation on community-property incomes, and the reduction of internal-revenue taxes on tobacco products.

TAX ON STEAMSHIP TICKETS

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time to call attention to H.R. 9862, pending before the Ways and Means Committee, which is a highly meritorious measure. This bill is an amendment to the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, to exempt persons traveling between Puerto Rico and the mainland from the payment of a stamp tax on steamship tickets by adding a new sentence at the end of section 442 (a) thereof to read as follows:

As used in this subdivision the term "United States" includes

The Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department has prepared the following memorandum:

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 1934.

Subject: Tax on steamship tickets.
Section 442 of the United States Statutes at Large provides as follows:

"Sec. 442. Tax on steamship tickets.

"(a) Subdivision 5 of schedule A of title VIII of the Revenue Act of 1926, is amended to read as follows:

"'5. Passage ticket, one way or round trip, for each passanger, sold or issued in the United States for passage by any vessel to a port or place not in the United States, Canada, Mexico, or Cuba, if costing not exceeding $30, $1; costing more than $30 and not exceeding $60, $3; costing more than $60, $5. This subdivision shall not apply to passage tickets costing $10 or less."

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall take effect on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act."

The following statement as published in passages tayling of the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act."

The following statement, as published in passenger tariffs of the American Mail Line, shows the status of this stamp tax when applied to tickets purchased for official use:

"United States Government, State, or political subdivision thereof, officials, employees, including military and naval forces, when traveling in an official capacity and their transportation is paid for by the United States Government, State, or political subdivision thereof, are exempt from paying tax on tickets issued to them. All accredited diplomatic representatives of foreign to them. All accredited diplomatic representatives of foreign countries and members of their staff and household are also exempt from paying tax on tickets sold to them."

Schedule A-5, Regulations No. 71, relating to stamp taxes, published by the Treasury Department, Internal Revenue Act of 1926, covers the above provision.

In a memorandum for the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, dated January 4, 1934, from the Judge Advocate General, it is stated in part:

The stamp tax thus imposed necessarily applies to pas "The stamp tax thus imposed necessarily applies to passage tickets from continental ports of the United States to Puerto Rico, because the term 'United States', as used in the Revenue Act of 1928, is expressly defined by section 701 of that act to include 'only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia' (45 Stat. 879; U.S.C.A. 26: 2701). It follows, in the opinion of this office, that the Bureau of Internal Revenue could not legally, by amendment of existing regulations, annul or forego collection of the tax on tickets to Puerto Rico."

EDWARD A. STOCKTON, Jr.,
Assistant to Chief of Bureau.

So, you see, it is obvious that this bill, H.R. 9862, as a matter of justice and fairness, ought to be approved by this Congress.

THE NEW DEAL

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, the closing days of the Seventy-third Congress bring to all of us a spirit of retrospection. The platform of the Democratic Party 2 years ago, as well as the declarations of its spellbinders, provide a rather interesting contrast to the legislative course pursued since that party came into power.

With apologies to Mary Howitt, I submit the following lines:

THE " NEW DEAL"

"Will you walk into my parlor?" said the spider to the fly;
Are the words of invitation of seducers ever nigh.
The parlor and its beauties, its comforts, and its ease
Are tendered to the innocents, their lives and rights to seize.
The spider has his cunning, his web one cannot feel
As skillfully and artfully he weaves a bright 'new deal.'

"Will you walk into our party?" Democrats were heard to say;
"Our platform is a covenant; on it we mean to stay.
Each plank accept as solid; it's short but it is true,
The voters of the country can all expect their due.
To farmers and to workers, to all imbued with zeal
We promise a panacea as we weave this bright 'new deal.'

We've a cure for every failure, our store of pills is great; But remember what we promise are the things which can't abate. Covenants are sure and sacred, party platforms must be so; It's a contract with the people in plain words that all may know. When we come into our power, whether it be woe or weal, By the pattern of our platform we will weave this bright 'new deal.'"

So the words were glibly uttered, in convention, in debate, By the candidates and speakers, pledging party's future fate. On all issues, for all problems, Democrats declared their place, To entice the distressed voter in the Nation's hectic race; As the spider used his cunning, so the voters were to feel All enraptured and delighted by the web of this "new deal."

- "Come into our fairy parlor, see the taxes fade away, Useless bureaus and commissions shall no longer hold their sway.
  Governmental costs will lessen, 25 percent at least we'll save;
  Balanced Budget, drastic savings, timid voter do be brave.
  Give to us your vote and favor, your approval and your seal,
  Watch the taxes lift and vanish in the web of this 'new deal.'
- "See the beauties of our tariff, facts we'll find to make it true, Not one man but a commission will determine what is due. Free of Presidential power, rates and duties we will make; Shame upon the older methods made for all the workers' sake. Come into our party's parlor, even stay and have a meal, Try this tariff, sure and certain in the web of this 'new deal.'
- "Oh we've other charms and pledges", as the spider snared the fly,
- "A sound dollar real and staple with which you may go and buv.

To the veterans we'll be gracious, justice to them must be done. Government must keep from business, private interests these should run:

Strengthen all the antitrust laws, these will help the common weal.

Cast your eye, oh trusting voter, on the web of this 'new deal'. "Now we have you in the webbing, as the spider had the fly; he pledges and attractions will forsooth now have to die. All the Debts and taxes must be increased, bureaus grow to heights unknown.

Spending billions is our hobby though the taxpayers writhe and groan. Spend and spend, that is our slogan, never mind the pinch you feel;

Billions squandered, billions wasted, just to weave this bright 'new deal.

'Now that you are in the webbing all our platform falls Filmy the away. theories, brain-trust notions are the order of the

Constitutions are resilient, made to stretch like rubber bands, Tariffs must be made by one man. Take them from the Congress' hands.

Look to Russia, see the planning, disregard our old ideal,

No more tariffs, mere trade treaties make the web of this

'new deal.'

Now that you are in the webbing, promises we need not keep, Not our party's nor our country's; they've been cast into the deep

Rubber dollars, what's their value? Oh, that can't be told us yet,

We must bend and stretch and pull them, so they'll cover every debt.

German marks were of this fashion; we'll inflate but we'll

How much air we pump into them in the web of this 'new deal.' Now that you are in the webbing, you must give us all your gold: Though you earned it, bought or mined it, it's not yours to keep and hold.

Shout your protests, cry for freedom; tories, rebels, must give

You've no right to even differ with our orders or our sway. Private rights? Oh, they have vanished under regimented wheel; Liberty? Oh, that we'll stifle in the web of this 'new deal.'

"Now that you are in the webbing, soldiers' rights must crumple, too.

Justice? That's a campaign promise, it will vanish as the dew.

Cut the veteran; that's our program, we need funds for party pelf:

Democrats must have a pork barrel, to maintain and succor self, Soldiers, just forget our pledges, rouse your fervor and your zeal, Take this pittance, seek no justice, in the web of this 'new deal.'

"Now that you are in the webbing, business men, there's much in store:

Every merchant, every tradesman must hang N.I.R.A. on his door. More control and more dictation, every rule you must obey; What you charge and how much profit, Washington alone can say. Antitrust laws, oh, forget them, N.I.R.A. does not like their feel:

It's monopolies that help us in the web of this 'new deal.'

Now that you are in the webbing, to the Nation gold you loaned During war days' stress and tumult, bought a bond you thought you owned.

'Gold I'll pay in sure redemption', promised dear old Uncle Sam,"
And he meant it and believed it, never dreamed that such a slam

Would upset, distort and break it, breach the promise, spoil the seal.

"But this promise must be broken in the web of this 'new deal."

There are many new attractions which we never did unfold In our platform or our speeches; it is well they were not told. We've created new commissions, bureaus seem to leap and grow, Names no longer are availing, just by letters one can know. To remember would be futile; how your head would ache and reel.

So just trustingly accept them in the web of this 'new deal.'

"Then, of course, we did not tell you of our regimenting plan.

By which wheat and corn and cotton were included in our ban;

And the cows' milk must be curtailed, the pigs should have no young; To this economic planning we would fain have praises sung. All your rights you've given over; they've been trampled under heel

By AA's and other letters in the web of this 'new deal.'"

Now the voters want their freedom; broken planks have given | way, Unkept covenants and pledges their distress does not allay, Mounting covenants, colossal taxes, Constitution cast aside, Regulate, control, and dictate—on these three all tyrants ride. We want freedom! It's our birthright; for it martyrs strove with zeal.

Lift us, free us, grant deliverance from the web of this "new deal,"

NATIONAL VETERANS' CONFERENCE

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a letter from Doak E. Carter, chairman of the National Veterans' Conference Committee, Victory Post, No. 4, the American Legion:

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 13, 1934.

The Honorable ERNEST LUNDEEN,

Member of Congress.

Dear Sir and Comrade: This committee, under the authority of Victory Post, No. 4, the American Legion, is calling a national conference of representatives of all patriotic veteran organizations and units, to be convened in Washington during October for and units, to be convened in Washington during October for indoctrinating all of the veterans of the World War and Spanish-American War, regardless of their veteran organization affiliation, with the spirit of cooperation and coordination of veterans' objectives, thereby affording the membership of each organization the opportunity to take such action within each particular organized group as will permit and lead to the promotion of a planned national policy to the end that veterans will not always be vulnerable in the face of attack and that the veterans may again he restored to that high level of patriotic idealism which again be restored to that high level of patriotic idealism which was once theirs."

By reason of your consistently favorable attitude toward the eteran this committee feels that it may ask your assistance in this matter

Such a conference will, no doubt, have a great and lasting effect upon veteran thought and activities and upon the welfare of the Nation. So far as we know, this is the first meeting of its kind ever proposed.

Trusting that you will help us, we are, Sincerely yours, DOAK E. CARTER, Chairman National Veterans' Conference Committee, tory Post, No. 4, American Legion, Department of the District of Columbia.

I favor a national conference of veterans of all wars to consider a veterans' legislative program. The conference proposed by the committee of the Victory Post of the American Legion will offer an opportunity for the veterans to express themselves directly and in a coordinated manner.

This is the first time, in recent years, so far as I know, that the veterans of the Nation have been asked to meet in a general conference, and much good will come from this deliberation. Inasmuch as all patriotic veteran organizations and united organizations are being invited to attend. the findings of the conference will be a cross-section of the opinions of all veterandom. Such an activity will result not only in the consolidation of veteran efforts behind a unified. reasonable program, but will also furnish the Congress with a great deal of highly desirable information. Such a conference successfully consummated will establish a precedent of united expression which heretofore has been sadly lacking in the representations of the various veteran organizations.

A program can be readily drawn setting forth the desires. aims, and intentions of the mass of veterans. Such a program will materially contribute to the solution of the great problems now confronting the veterans of America.

HON. WILLIAM E. HUMPHREY OF WASHINGTON

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, on February 14, 1934, Hon. William E. Humphrey died in Washington, D.C., aged 72 years. Mr. Humphrey was a Representative in Congress from the State of Washington for 14 years, from March 3, 1903, to March 3, 1917, and later was 8 years a member of the Federal Trade Commission.

He was born near Alamo, Montgomery County, Ind., March 31, 1862, and was educated in the schools of that State. He was admitted to the bar in 1887 and commenced the practice of law in Crawfordsville, Ind. He moved to Seattle, Wash., in 1893 and continued the practice of law there, being corporation counsel of the city of Seattle from 1898 to 1902.

He was elected as a Republican to the Fifty-eighth and the six succeeding Congresses and was not a candidate for an eighth term. He was appointed February 25, 1925, by President Coolidge as a member of the Federal Trade Commission and was reappointed to that commission in 1931 by President Hoover.

Mr. Humphrey was of that forceful type of character who pioneered in the settlement and development of the Pacific Northwest. He was a lawyer and attained eminence in that profession before he entered the field of national politics. Always a Republican of the stalwart type, he was a leader in the House of Representatives in maintaining and advancing the principles and policies of his party and attained a national prominence that was both the admiration and envy of men of lesser note. Mr. Humphrey was the essence of loyalty. He never betrayed a cause or a friend. He always rendered the best service that was in him to his State and Nation. His death marked the passing of a human landmark of rugged honesty, efficiency, and loyalty. The memory of his life and associations and the results of his public service will long remain as a monument to a devoted friend of humanity and an outstanding character in American public life.

Concurrent Resolution 52

Concurrent resolution petitioning the Congress of the United States of America to reconsider its action on the excise tax on Philippine coconut oil or in case Congress fails to reconsider its action, requesting the President of the United States to veto the same

Whereas in its present session the Congress of the United States of America passed the revenue bill providing among other things the levying of an excise tax of 3 cents gold on each pound of Philippine coconut oil, or on oil extracted from Philippine copra imported into the United States of America;

Whereas notwithstanding the 2 cents gold differential tax provided for by the American Congress in favor of Philippine coconut oil, the imposition of 3 cents gold on oil coming from the Philippines will necessarily increase to more than 300 percent the market value thereof in America, thereby practically eliminating said commodity from that market: nating said commodity from that market;

Whereas up to the present the American market is the only best available market for the Philippine copra and coconut oil so that the exclusion of this commodity from said market will consequently kill the copra industry in the Philippines;

Whereas according to the statistics of the Departments of Agriculture and Commerce more than 4,000,000 Filipinos are depending for their living on the copra industry, while on the other pending for their living on the copra industry, while on the other hand the government income derived therefrom amounts to more than 4,000,000 pesos per year, which amount will be entirely lost to the government of the Philippine Islands once the copra industry is paralyzed;

Mhereas the imposition of the excise tax on Philippine coconut oil is contrary to the letter and spirit of the provision of section 6, paragraph (b) of the Tydings-McDuffie Act accepted today by the Philippine Legislature under the provision of section 17 thereof; which section 6, paragraph (b), in the opinion of the Philippine Legislature constitutes a covenant and which for all intents and purposes is in the nature of a commercial treaty between America and the Philippine Islands insofar as their economic and trade relations are concerned. Now therefore be it between America and the Philippine Islands insofar as their economic and trade relations are concerned: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the house of representatives (the Philippine Senate concurring), To petition, as it does hereby petition, the American Congress to reconsider its action on the pertinent portion of the revenue tax of the United States of America imposing an excise tax of 3 cents gold on each pound of Philippine coconut oil by completely eliminating therefrom said tax, or at least excluding from the imposition thereof Philippine coconut oil intended for industrial and not for human consumption purposes:

tended for industrial and not for human consumption purposes;

Resolved further, That should this petition fail to be granted by the American Congress, the President of the United States of America is hereby respectfully requested to disapprove or suspend the effect of the portion of the revenue bill imposing the excise tax above mentioned, or to exclude the Philippine Islands from the effect of said tax;

Resolved finally, That copy of this resolution be furnished through the Resident Commissioner in Washington, Hon. Pedro Guevara, to the President of the American Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the President of the United States of America.

Concurrent Resolution 54

Concurrent resolution petitioning the Congress of the United States to reconsider its action making retroactive to January 1, 1934, the provisions of the so-called "Jones-Costigan bill"; requesting the President of the United States to disapprove said bill, failing its reconsideration by Congress, or to suspend its application to the Philippine Islands during the calendar year 1934; and for other purposes

Whereas the Congress of the United States has recently passed a bill, commonly known as the "Jones-Costigan bill", to include sugar beet and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act; Whereas section 9 of said bill provides for the retroactive effect thereof to the 1st day of January 1934, notwithstanding the fact that in the case of Philippine sugar more than 1,030,000 short tons have already been shipped and sold prior to the enactment of said bill, and there still remain to be disposed of, of the crop to be harvested prior to July 1, 1934, approximately 400,000 short tons of sugar;

Whereas the inclusion of the sugar already shipped to the United States prior to the enactment of the Jones-Costigan bill in the quota to be given to the Philippine Islands for the calendar in the quota to be given to the Philippine Islands for the calendar year 1934 would necessarily result in a tremendous surplus which will have to be carried over to 1935, which surplus, together with the 1934-35 crop, would leave no appreciable quota for 1936, thus vitally crippling the sugar industry of the Philippines and causing grave consequences to the millions of inhabitants dependent upon said industry, and would further render impracticable a just and equitable enforcement of the provisions of said bill among the sugar producers in the Philippines: Now, therefore, be it

*Resolved by the house of representatives (the Philippine Senate concurring), To respectfully petition, as it does hereby petition, the American Congress to reconsider its action on the pertinent portion of the said Jones-Costigan bill making its provisions retroactive to January 1, 1934;

*Resolved further, That should this petition fail to be granted by the American Congress, the President of the United States of America is hereby respectfully requested to disapprove said Jones-Costigan bill; and, failing this, to suspend the application of the provisions of the said bill to the Philippine Islands during the calendar year 1934, under the authority granted him in section 7 thereof:

calendar year 1934, under the authority granted him in section 7 thereof:

Resolved further, That in the event the Jones-Costigan bill should be enacted into law and the President of the United States should be enacted into law and the President of the United States should extend its provisions to the Philippine Islands, that the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States be, and he hereby is, respectfully petitioned to fix a quota of 400,000 short tons of sugar for the Philippine Islands for the second semester of the calendar year 1934 without regard to the shipments and sales made prior thereto, and that the regular quota for the Philippine Islands under the provisions of said bill be made to take effect starting with the calendar year 1935; and *Resolved finally, That a copy of this resolution be furnished through the Resident Commissioner in Washington, Hon. Pedro Guevara, to the President of the United States, the presiding officers of both Houses of the United States Congress, and the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States.

Whereas a bill has been introduced by Representative Haines in the Congress of the United States (H.R. 8735) amending section 400 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1926 reducing the tax rate of $2 paid on cigars weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand and retailed now at not more than 3 cents each, to $1, and this reduction is to be applicable only to cigars manufactured in the continental United States;

Whereas this bill is a discrimination against Philippine cigars imported into the United States as they would pay double the internal-revenue tax paid by similar cigars made in the continental United States, and thus violate the reciprocity provisions contained in section 301 of the United States Tariff Act of 1930 which provides that Philippine merchandise coming from the Philippines into the United States will pay taxes equal to the internal-revenue taxes imposed in the United States upon like articles; articles:

Whereas this bill is an indirect amendment of the economic provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Act, now accepted by the Philippine Legislature.

Provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Act, now accepted by the Philippine Legislature;

Whereas said bill would cause the complete ruin of the cigar trade of the Philippine Islands in the United States, would work hardships on the tobacco farmers in the Philippine Islands, and would reduce our government revenue to a considerable extent: Now, therefore, be it

ANTILYNCHING LEGISLATION

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, it is necessary for me to enter this discussion long enough to make two very brief

It is becoming regrettably evident that well-matured plans look to the adjournment of the Congress without an opportunity being provided for the consideration of the fundamentally important antilynching bill, Senate bill 1978, introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and myself.

We have patiently and persistently pressed for consideration of this measure, which was favorably reported from the Judiciary Committee and is now on the Senate Calendar. We have every reason to believe that a substantial majority of both branches of Congress desires and would approve the measure. Public opinion supports it with overwhelming endorsements. It is demanded by every consideration of orderly government, humanity, and wisdom. We know, and leaders here know, that the President of the United States has expressed his strong desire for its enactment at this session: but it is more than evident that the constant priority given other bills by those having legislation in charge here will not include this civilized and civilizing reform. For lack of that assurance, with others, some of us oppose and will vote against final adjournment.

For the moment I defer further comment on these distressing developments, and offer for printing in the RECORD without the signatures and to lie on the table a last-moment petition for the enactment of the antilynching bill. It is signed by G. W. A. Murray and about 560 other citizens of the State of New York.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures, as follows:

We, the undersigned residents of the State of New York, in view of the failure of the several States to cope adequately with the problem of lynching and to assure the citizens of the Nation of problem of lynching and to assure the citizens of the Nation of due process of law and the protection of life and limb, believing that the Federal Government is morally and constitutionally obligated to act for the abolition of the evil under which more than 5,000 Americans of all races and both sexes have been murdered by mobs since 1882, do hereby endorse and express our approval of the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill (S. 1978). We do further petition and urge our legislative representatives, Senators ROBERT F. WAGNER and ROYAL S. COPELAND, and Representative ROBERT L. BACON, not only to vote for this bill but to work vigorously and assiduously for its passage, and we urge that the President of the United States use all his power and influence to the end that the bill be voted upon and enacted as law at the present session of the Congress of the United States. present session of the Congress of the United States. Dated, May 1934.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, for a number of years, as is well known, lynchings occurred in the South. Now they have gone more or less to other climes, to the West and to the North. Those sections have had trouble with lynching, and, of course, we are, indeed, in sympathy with their efforts to exterminate it. It is merely a matter of a State performing its duty, which, of course, it can perform better than any other authority. In my State of Louisiana I had the honor to have been Governor for 4 years. The State touches the Gulf of Mexico. There was not a lynching in the State during the period I was Governor.

I was indeed sorry to see that there were lynchings in California; I was indeed sorry to see the riots that oc-curred in such places as East St. Louis; but it is a salutary fact that we find lynching practically a forgotten matter in my section of the country, and I am sure that the States of the West and North which are now experiencing trouble will profit by what we have done and will exterminate lynching as well as we have done in Louisiana.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S SUGAR ACT

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, so much misinformation has been circulated about the administration's sugar law passed at this session of the Congress, and with reference to the popular understanding and support of it by sugar growers in this country, that it appears desirable, if only for historic accuracy, to ask, as I now do, to have printed in the RECORD and lie on the table certain typical communications in the form of telegrams, letters, resolutions, and newspaper articles received, out of many, from informed citizens and groups of citizens about the legislation. First, I offer the following representative letters and telegrams, in whole or in

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter will lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

Hon. Edward P. Costigan,

Senate Chamber, Washington, D.C.

Dear Senator: I am enclosing an article published in the Greeley Tribune Republican. This paper has been kind enough to publish several articles for me in support of the sugar bounty, though editorially they oppose the bounty idea.

Being vice president of the Mountain States Beet Growers Marketing Association, and living only 2 miles from the office, I have had a pretty good opportunity to study the sugar-beet question.

I have supported you and your plan from the start. It looks to me as though something practical could be worked out for sugar either under A.A.A. or by separate legislation.

Yours truly,

Chas. O. Plumb.

As a citizen of Colorado, I am proud of the courage, thought, and vigor you are giving to this issue. I have no fear that you require my applause, but neither do I doubt your appreciation of my appraisal of the part you are playing.

So, having been a close student of the beet-sugar industry for 30 years, face to face, I may be excused for an opinion: The legislation outlined in the bill you have introduced offers the best way, at least for the time. The economics of the whole Nation call for substantially the plan you have outlined, and the industry therefore owes you its gratitude. Whether it yields commendation now or not, the near future should approve your course.

With every good wish,

GEORGE M. HOUSTON, Former Mayor of Greeley, Colo.

THE MOUNTAIN STATES BEET GROWERS MARKETING ASSOCIATION Greeley, Colo., April 18, 1934.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,

Hon. Edward P. Costigan,

Senate Chamber, Washington, D.C.

My Dear Senator: Beet farmers are grateful to you for your efforts to save the industry. A year or so ago I could not bring myself to believe that the bounty plan, while admittedly practical, would ever secure the Nation-wide endorsement necessary to secure its enactment into law. But the complete collapse of our present protective policy has fully demonstrated the necessity of adopting other modes of sustaining the industry. And along with protecting the whole industry through benefit payments, we have a plan in the pending legislation of protecting the individual beet farmer in his contract relations with the sugar company. company.

Our work is, however, not completed with the passage of your bill. We must now be very persistent in securing for the beet farmer the rights and benefits accorded him in the law.

Growers have pushed aside the uncertain Great Western contract and not planted beets, choosing rather to take the risks of planting late than to accept the company contract which might place the Government in the position of having to ratify the company contract, or let the beets waste in the field.

At this data there is not in excess of 10 percent of the beets company contract, or let the beets waste in the field.

At this date, there is not in excess of 10 percent of the beets planted, while thousands of acres are ready.

I kindly wish that you would most earnestly urge the Department of Agriculture to have a statement or ruling ready to the effect that the Secretary will assure beet farmers signing the contract, after the law is passed, that he will see to it that they are accorded every benefit intended for them under the law.

The growers are willing to trust the Secretary and will abide by his decision. With the passage of the law, the beets must go in the ground at once, for it is late already. A word from him upon the coming into effect of the law is all that is absolutely necessary, and details of contracts and what not can stand aside for a little while.

You may assure the Department that our beet farmers will cooperate. Kindly see that arrangements are made so that we can plant at once and still be assured that the Secretary will protect growers no more or no less than the law contemplates.

Again, will you be so kind as to have the Department wire us their ruling or statement just as quick as possible after the passage of the law. In the event there is hesitancy, a wire from you will be helpful and appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

J. D. PANCAKE. Secretary.

ents and fellow men.

Secretary-Treasurer Colorado State Federation of Labor. WASHINGTON, D.C., April 9, 1934.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,

United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

My Dear Senator: I am writing you with reference to the proposed sugar legislation, that is, the bill S. 3212, introduced by you March 28, 1934. This bill has, as you know, been amended and passed by the House. We feel this proposed legislation holds out great promise of giving long-needed relief to our beet farmers and at the same time it lays a foundation for a solution of the entire sugar problem of the United States. Most comprehensive legislation involves some compromises on the part of the parties directly affected, as does this proposal. But the situation of our farmers is acute and the need for action is imperative. I strongly believe this to be the very best and fullest measure of relief that it is now possible to obtain for our farmers under existing conditions. Further, I firmly believe the plan is workable and sound and that with friendly and capable administration it holds out possibilities for greater prosperity than has been enjoyed by our beet farmers heretofore. Once we have the legislation and operate under it, the weak spots will be discovered and they can and should be corrected by supplemental additional legislation. By this additional legislation we will also hope to obtain for our farmers a larger share of the American sugar market. United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

I know of your keen interest in this problem and want to take this opportunity to thank you for the cooperation you have given and your able championship of our cause. Without the able and kindly assistance of yourself and many others of our friends in both branches of the Congress, the continental sugar industry of the United States would surely face disaster.

With kind personal regards, I am,
Sincerely,

Chas. M. Kearney,
President National Beet Growers' Association.

GREELEY, Colo., Merch 23, 1934.

Hon. Edward P. Costigan,

Senate Chamber, Washington, D.C.:

Replying to your telegram just received, will kindly say we have confidence that you and other members of Colorado congressional delegation and other friends laboring for the best interests of the delegation and other friends laboring for the best interests of the beet industry will secure best terms possible in pending sugar legislation to insure its early passage, and we accept the results of all your efforts, feeling that you and your associates have welfare of individual beet farmer at heart.

Appreciate telegram of 26th reciting efforts to expedite sugar legislation. No attempt yet made to negotiate beet contract with Great Western, though planting season here. Holly Co. offering contract among Delta and Grand Junction growers containing provisions for making reduction in beet payments in event of tariff reduction or for company paying processing tax. One blanket provision stipulates company may modify or amend contract terms touched by national legislation or Government regulation, including restriction of output or sugar sales. Obviously amount of additional payments for past crop to our farmers depend upon Washington legislation. No one can estimate impending disaster awaiting beet farmer if sugar legislation falls or is delayed too long. Growers deeply appreciate your efforts to obtain purchasing price guarantee per ton.

Dear Senator: I have attended quite a number of beet-growers meetings in the past month or so, and can assure you as president of the Brighton local of the Mountain States Beet Growers' Association, that any letter or resolution you have received from me has always been officially presented at the beet-growers meetings and in every instance have been unanimously adopted by the real beet growers, which leads me to believe that the large majority of beet growers would readily accept the administration's sugar bill rather than create a controversy which they realize if prolonged can be very detrimental to their interest.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Next I present for the RECORD the following resolutions adopted by various sugar-beet growers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, they will be printed in the RECORD.

The matters referred to are as follows:

JANUARY 30, 1934.

Hon. Edward P. Costigan,

United States Senator, Washington, D.C.

Dear Sir: Whereas we, the beet growers and dairymen of the State of Colorado, feel the necessity for immediate action on the part of the administration;

Whereas it must be admitted there is a crying need for an adjustment of the new deal if that deal is intended to help the beet growers and the dairymen of the United States; Whereas the farmers, either through financial conditions or otherwise, are forced to accept any price offered by the manufacturers of farm products and in every instance the price offered and which the farmers have to accept is considerably less than the cost of production;

Whereas we are forced to buy manufactured commodities in a market which is protected by the administration through a costplus system, which, if some adjustment beneficial to our interests is not made in the near future we can no longer continue

Whereas the only market available for farm products is an organized buyers' market where competition is eliminated;
Whereas having been placed in a position to sell our farm products in an unrestricted market and forced to buy manufactured commodities in a market protected by law leads us to believe that if there is not an immediate adjustment we can hardly hope to continue as farmers even though a farm be given whereas we are not recommending or asking for any particular plan, but we believe that you as Senators and Representatives from the State of Colorado fully understand our condition and will make every effort possible to bring to the attention of this administration the necessity of some plan to relieve us of these unfair and deplorable conditions;

Whereas we commend the effort of Senator Costigan in seeking to make sugar a basic commodity and recommend that Senator Adams and our Congressmen work to that effect. The administration is not the cause of our present condition but has the power to adjust matters so our condition may be changed. Failure to use that power places the responsibility on the administration.

Truly yours,

DAIRYMEN'S COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION. Forwarded by Bert Thornton, Brighton, Colo.

To the United States Senators and Congressmen from the State of Colorado:

Whereas as beet growers for several years, experience has taught us that to get the best returns from a crop of sugar beets they should be planted anywhere from the last week in March to the should be planted anywhere from the last week in March to the 15th of April. We, the real beet growers, whose only chance for a fair price for our beets realize that chance is dependent on governmental regulation of the sugar industry. We appreciate the efforts of our friends and representatives in Washington on the sugar question. To prolong the controversy could be detrimental to our interests. What we can gather from the newspapers it appears to us that the quotas in the Costigan bill are the things that are creating the argument.

As time for planting is drawing near we would recomend that the bill give the President full power to alter or amend the quotas as he may deem necessary.

We are confident the President will give us a quota fair to our interests and the interests of the Nation as a whole.

This resolution was adopted by a body of beet growers of the Weld County local of the Colorado Farmers' Protective Association March 1, 1934.

BRIGHTON, Colo., March 8, 1934.

To the United States Senators and Congressmen from the State of Colorado.

Senator E. P. Costigan, United States Senator from Colorado, Washington, D.C.

Whereas we, the real beet growers, realize the importance of having sugar made a basic commodity, and therefore earnestly urge the passage of the Costigan bill to that effect.

Our condition has become so distressing that even a temporary relief at this time is much better than no relief at all. We do not believe that President Roosevelt, the administration, or Senator Costigan desires or intends to eliminate the sugar industry of the United States, so long as that industry is a benefit to the producer and laborer as well as to the sugar companies.

Time must be considered if the beet growers are to receive any benefit for the year 1934 through governmental regulation of the sugar industry. We have but a very short time left between this date and the time for signing contracts and the planting of

Therefore we earnestly recommend that either the quotas recommended by the President be adopted or the Costigan bill so amended as to give the President full power to alter or amend the sugar quotas as he may deem necessary.

There has been considerable criticism against the administration on the sugar question. As beet growers, we in no way resent the President's recommendation to Congress on a sugar

Should Congress adjourn without giving us some relief from our distressing condition, the sugar companies would be benefited.

As beet growers, we have concluded no act of Congress could possibly hurt us any worse in the future than the acts of the sugar companies have in the past.

COLORADO FARMERS PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION OF ADAMS COUNTY.

By Mrs. W. E. SHERAET, Secretary.

To the United States Senators and Congressmen from the State of Colorado:

As beet growers of the State of Colorado whose livelihood are dependent on the production of sugar beets and the price thereof, we realize we can no longer continue to grow beets at a profit under present prices paid by the sugar companies.

Therefore, we urgently request that our friends and representatives in Washington give any sugar legislation serious thought at the time. We respectfully urge the adoption of the administration's giver hill.

tion's sugar bill.

If that bill became law, it may not grant us all the benefits we should have, or all the advantages we desire; nevertheless, it should relieve a very distressing condition in the production of beets, which condition is bound to become worse for the beet and cane growers, should Congress fail to pass any sugar legislation.

As time for planting is so near, we can hardly afford to disregard the importance of time.

We believe any amendment to the Costigan bill which would materially change the President's recommendation to Congress on a sugar plan would have the opposition of the administration and prolong a controversy detrimental to our interest.

and prolong a controversy detrimental to our interest.

We, the real beet growers, whose interest will be affected by any sugar legislation, again urge the immediate adoption of the administration's sugar bill.

This resolution was adopted March 14 near Greeley, Colo., at a mass meeting of beet growers.

Presented by Bert Thornton, Brighton, Colo.

Finally, there are submitted, in full or abbreviated form, the following newspaper editorials and article.

since its inception some 30 years ago, the beet-sugar industry in the Rocky Mountain region has been insecure. It depended for its existence upon an item in the tariff act—an item which might be stricken by any Congress. Neither the grower nor the refiner was given any assurance of permanence.

Under the Costigan bill, which has passed the House and is certain of approval by the Senate, that situation is altogether changed. By this measure, the domestic sugar industry will be stabilized. Beet sugar will be declared an essential commodity; a return will be guaranteed by a processing tax; the domestic industry will be protected by quotas so that the market cannot be destroyed by an influx from Cuba or the Philippines; child labor will be wiped out of the beet fields; the farmer will be assured a fair return, as will of the beet helds; the farmer will be assured a fair return, as will the beet workers.

As the News pointed out at the time the measure was introduced, such stabilization has long been the vital need of this industry. So far as the Rocky Mountain territory is concerned, this achievement is of tremendous importance.

As perhaps was to have been expected, the Costigan bill was subjected to violent attack at the start. Some of the criticism came from sincere friends of the industry who objected to the tentative quota for domestic beet sugar. Some of the criticism was furely political.

tentative quota for domestic beet sugar. Some of the criticism was purely political.

That these objections have been met satisfactorily is proved by the approval of the bill on the part of all Colorado Members of the House of Representatives of other beet-raising districts. Representative Fred Cummings, of Fort Collins, who was described in Wednesday's session as "the man who knows more about beet sugar than any other Member of the House", is one of the original critics who finally gave his enthusiastic support.

Increase in the quota to 1,550,000 tons, of course, had something to do with the change in sentiment. Of even greater weight, however, was the realization that some sort of stabilization was essential as an assurance of the future. When the Costigan bill was being considered during the hearing Representative Cummings asked bluntly: "What do you propose to do, give us a shot in the arm with this proposal and then put us out of business while we are unconscious?" He now has a better understanding of the attitude of the administration toward the industry, and there is significance in the fact that he announced his candidacy for reelection immediately after voting for the bill.

reelection immediately after voting for the bill.

Further amendments may be necessary in the Senate. Certainly the measure should explain clearly who is to pay the processing tax. In addition, the domestic industry should be given further protection in the allocation of any increased consumption.

Relatively, however, these are minor points. For the first time in history the beet-sugar industry will be placed on a permanent, stable basis; the grower will be assured a fair return, and both grower and refiner will be safeguarded against a flood of sugar from abroad. Senator Costioan is to be congratulated on his major achievement of major importance to his State.

[From the Grand Junction (Colo.) Daily Sentinel, Apr. 10, 1934] A SENATOR AND HIS STATE

A Senator and His State

We live in a sugar-beet country. We have had considerable to do and to say concerning the western Colorado sugar-beet industry for more than a quarter of a century. We have done our best to keep both sugar factories over here running. The Grand Junction factory, however, was closed up all the years of the Hoover administration and only opened under the first year of the Roosevelt administration. We have helped the company, year after year, increase acreage and do many other things, and at times have been accused of being entirely too friendly with the company. We have inaugurated and carried on campaigns to work up enthusiasm in this part of the State when to start on there was no enthusiasm at all among the people. We are mentioning these things simply to emphasize the point that the Sentinel cannot be accused of being unfriendly to the beet-sugar factory operators or to the industry itself. Our record of such a friendship is of long standing and consistent.

With these remarks we want to couple our conscientious belief that Senator Ebwand P. Costigan has had and has now the best interests of the people as a whole at heart in his stand on the beet-sugar question. We also want to go on record as saying that we do not believe the so-called "Costigan-Jones bill", which has passed the House and will pass the Senate this week, is injurious in the slightest way to the beet-sugar industry. We believe this measure will stabilize the industry, will put it on the safest basis it has been on at any time, and will be helpful both to the refiner and the man who grows the beets. Perhaps the bill is a little more considerate of the beet grower than of the refiner; if that is true, we can see no objection and we agree with Senator Costigan when he said:

"It is refreshing to find at last an administration which gives when he said:

"It is refreshing to find at last an administration which gives first place to the welfare of farmers rather than the prices of stocks and bonds. Here is a plan which makes some help possible for farmers without increasing the burdens on consumers. It provides, through quota restrictions and tariff reductions, the first check in many years on unregulated and destructive production and competition."

We take the following from a recent and accurate statistical summary of the domestic sugar situation and what the Government seeks to accomplish by means of the program involved in ment seeks to accomplish by means of the program involved in the Costigan-Jones bill:

Present price of beets per ton, $5.32.

Prospective 1934 price in absence of program, $4 maximum.

Prospective price under administration program, $6.50 a ton.

Current income of United States beet growers, $58,988,000.

Prospective income, in absence of program, $34,800,000. Prospective income if program is adopted at present fair exchange value, about $63,000,000.

tive income if program is adopted at present fair exchange value, about $63,000,000.

We agree with the Denver News when it says editorially:

"Under the Costigan bill, which has passed the House and is certain of approval by the Senate, that situation is altogether changed. By this measure, the domestic sugar industry will be stabilized. No longer will it be dependent upon a tariff and subject to constant fluctuations with every change in administration. Beet sugar will be declared an essential commodity; a return will be guaranteed by a processing tax; the domestic industry will be protected by quotas so that the market cannot be destroyed by an influx from Cuba or the Philippines; child labor will be wiped out in the beet fields; the farmer will be assured a fair return, as will the beet workers."

We predict that the Costigan bill, endorsed by the administra tion, will in the long run bring a greater degree of prosperity to the beet growers of Colorado than they have ever enjoyed. The Senator is rendering a notable service to his State.

[From the Denver (Colo.) Rocky Mountain News, May 10, 1934] STABILIZED AT LAST

signing of the Costigan-Jones bill means that the Federal Government at last is definitely committed to the support and maintenance of the domestic sugar industry.

As the News pointed out when the measure was introduced, the stabilization plan represents the principal hope of continued existence so far as the beet branch of the industry is concerned. The real threat to the domestic industry lay in the constantly increasing importations from Cuba and the Philippines. This dumping finally broke the market. To protect itself, the beet industry had only a tariff, subject to a change at any passing whim of Congress—and, under this tariff, Cuba, its principal competitor, received preferential treatment, and the Philippines paid no duty of any kind.

Today the position of the sugar-beet industry is fixed on a firm basis through the quota system. The production of Cuba and the insular possessions for the United States market is established by congressional enactment. There can be no more dumping. The Federal Government is now back of the sugar business.

Already the benefits of the measure are apparent. Despite the efforts to misrepresent the effects of the bill and to dissuade the growers from planting a crop, in the Rocky Mountain territory the farmer will receive $6.50 a ton for beets—not as much as in banner years, but at least 20 percent more than he would have received had it not been for this enactment. Every sort of commercial activity in this part of the country will be the gainer—retail and wholesale business, coal mining, the railroads, and other forms of endeavor whose connection with beet growing and sugar refining is remote. The measure and its results are a great victory for Senator Costigan and the administration, and the News is happy to have been able to contribute toward winning it.

[From the Denver (Colo.) Rocky Mountain News, Feb. 17, 1934] COLORADO'S SUGAR QUOTA

Colorado's sugar-beet quota under the Costigan bill is not high enough to satisfy some Colorado people. That is not surprising. The Rocky Mountain News, being in sympathy with the aspirations of the Colorado beet producer and refiner to expand the sugar industry, would like to see a more liberal quota for the State. But we cannot expect a piece of legislation, affecting such widespread interests, to be written exactly according to our orders. At least the stabilization plan is a base for additional development. And it must be acknowledged that for the first time a national administration has recognized the plight of the beet farmer and is extending a helping hand.

farmer and is extending a helping hand.

So far as Colorado's quota is concerned, if we think it isn't high enough, Michigan thinks it is too high.

Here is what Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, told

Here is what Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, of Michigan, told the Senate yesterday:

"Colorado producers would be given preferential treatment under the plan to use the production of the last 3 years as the basis for domestic quotas, because plants in that State have been able to operate closer to capacity than has been the case in Michigan, where sugar factories were closed during most of that period."

Certainly this is an indication that Colorado is not getting very much the worst of the deal under the Costigan measure.

[From the Denver (Colo.) Rocky Mountain News, Apr. 14, 1934] SUGAR AND A LIVING WACE

By keeping up his fight for proposals safeguarding the rights of the field workers, Senator Costigan is proving himself the true friend of the beet-sugar industry. The Vandenberg amendments, which have been accepted by the Senate, tend to weaken the Costigan bill. We trust they will be eliminated before the measure is adopted in final form.

Most objectionable of these amendments is that changing the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to eliminate child labor to authority to limit or regulate such labor.

That is tantamount to a declaration of the right of the beet industry to continue child labor, after child labor has been eliminated.

nated from other industries, including the cotton mills.

In justice to the refiners, it should be stated that they have opposed child labor in principle, and have never employed children in their plants. They have recognized that the existence of child labor is the greatest single argument leveled against the domestic sugar business, and in resolutions have called for its shollition. abolition.

To be sure, resolutions by the refiners and the employment of adults in the refining process by no means meet the actual prob-lem. A living wage for adults depends upon the return to the farmer for his beets, and that return depends upon the contract between the farmers and the manufacturers.

So far, there has been no contract between the refiners and the agricultural cooperative associations in this territory. Some independents have signed, but the association members insist that the agreement offered by the companies is not a contract but an option, under which the grower is not given a guaranteed market. For most of the beet raisers of this district, the Great Western Sugar Co. is the only possible purchaser.

The seed should be in the ground not later than tomorrow. The deadlock over the terms, unless it is broken, will interfere greatly with this year's production. And, without attempting an offhand solution to a rather complicated question, it is self-evident that the growers cannot be blamed for being unwilling to risk expense and labor without a guarantee for a definite return for their crop.

It may readily be that the growers are the principal advocates of another amendment which strikes out the clause giving the Secretary of Agriculture authority to fix minimum wages in the fields. In many cases the farmer who grows beets has been barely able to meet expenses; in a few he has lost money. With this situation, he is naturally reluctant to be told just what he must now his harvest hands. pay his harvest hands.

But here again the vicious circle can be traced. Unless the grower gets a sufficient return from the refiner he cannot pay a living wage. And until the industry does pay a living wage it will not be properly stabilized.

In his battle for the field workers, therefore, Senator Costigan is fighting for the entire industry. We wish him well in his efforts to defeat the amendments that threaten the vital purpose

[From the Denver (Colo.) Rocky Mountain News, Apr. 27, 1934] THE SILVER LINING

While the chains that bound the sugar-beet growers and the sugar refiners have been broken and the way has been opened for the planting of beet seeds in the Rocky Mountain district, there is still much to be desired, and there is yet hope that the signing of the Costigan-Jones bill and the announcement of regulations by the A.A.A. will mean that a full crop will come from the ground.

It is true that negotiations between the Great Western Sugar Co. and the farmers' cooperative associations have been broken off. Nonetheless the cooperative organizations have announced to their members that they are free to plant on a restricted basis. Many independent growers have already signed up, after accepting the sugar company's contract with the hedge provision.

So Colorado at least can look forward to the operation of its sugar mills this fall, and to the usual impetus to business that accompanies the harvesting, processing, and refining of this important crop.

accompanies the harvesting, processing, and refining of this important crop.

It is to be presumed that crops harvested on acreage not devoted this year to the growing of beets will, in a measure, offset the curtailed beet production, and the situation is far from being the hopeless one it is painted in some quarters.

Meanwhile, it is up to Washington to act.

The President should sign the Costigan-Jones bill without further deliberation about the off-shore quotas. The Secretary of Agriculture should announce, as quickly as possible, the regulations which are to be imposed under his control, and the resultations which are to be imposed under his control, and the sugar-beet industry as proposed under the Costigan-Jones measure.

When that is done, the clouds which have hovered over the sugar-beet industry will have been blown away. The beet farmer and the refiner will then begin to receive the benefits from an industry built on a solid foundation, and business can go ahead industry built on a solid foundation, and business can go ahead with a certainty as to the future.

[From the Denver (Colo.) Rocky Mountain News, May 1, 1934] VICTORY

Settlement of the sugar-beet controversy, together with the establishment of the domestic-sugar industry on a definite, stabilized basis, is the best business news for this territory since the upturn which followed the change in national administrations.

The annual dispute between grower and processor over the contract price for beets has been an old story. This year, however, the arguments took on added significance because, under the Costigan-Jones bill, the Federal Government for the first time was to take a hand in the business, to guarantee that it be protected against the dumping of insular cane sugar on the continental market, to assure the farmer a fair return and, in short, to maintain production over a term of years.

Because of this peculiar situation, the planting of the beets and

Because of this peculiar situation, the planting of the beets and the harvesting of a crop became matters of vital concern not only to those directly involved in the industry but to the entire Rocky Mountain region.

Relatively little labor is required in the harvesting and marketing of a wheat crop. Much of the field work is done by machinery, and the railroads carry only the finished product.

Far more is involved in the sugar business. Hand labor is necessary for most of the topping and cutting. The beets are shipped to the factory in bulk. Hundreds of miners are required to take out the coal which is used during the refining season in northern Colorado alone. During the third of a century in which the industry has been in existence in this part of the country an intricate structure has been built upon which thousands depend for their livelihood.

For this structure to be endangered by a deadlock over the beet price and by the refusal of the farmers to plant seeds would be a calamity under any conditions. For such a thing to happen when the Government was about to get behind the industry and guarantee its future would have been disastrous.

Because of a knowledge of this situation, the News was the first metropolitan newspaper to make the beet-sugar situation a major issue and to attempt to clarify the problems faced alike by the farmer and the processor.

That task has not been easy. The provisions of the Costigan-

That task has not been easy. The provisions of the Costigan-Jones bill have been deliberately distorted, and the grower was told that its passage would be fatal to his welfare.

Temporarily, this campaign had a harmful effect. It intensified the dispute over the beet price; in many cases, it delayed planting.

Today, the farmer has a better understanding of the situation. The Federal Government has entered the picture, even before the Costigan-Jones bill has become law. The administration has seen to it that the Rocky Mountain grower will get a better price for his product and, under the agreement, that the refiner will be given an adequate return.

Most important of all, assurance is given that the industry will proceed under governmental protection. The calamity howlers have been answered and hushed. Senator Costican has won a great victory for the beet-raising district—a victory to which the News is proud to have been able to contribute a part.

[From the Denver (Colo.) Rocky Mountain News, May 1, 1934] BEET PLANTERS MAKE UP TIME—CROP WILL BE IN GROUND BY END OF WEEK, AND LOSS BELIEVED AVERTED

The sugar-beet crop in the Rocky Mountain region is expected to be in the ground by the end of the week, with every indication there will be slight loss because of the delay in planting caused by the fight over the contract between growers and refiners.

The Great Western Sugar Co. reports its 22 factories are being swamped by farmers wanting seed so they will lose no more time.

N. R. McCreery, Colorado district manager of the company, said 110,000 acres were planted in Colorado.

168,000 acres were planted in Colorado.

SPEED UP IN OTHER STATES

Figures were not available for Nebraska, Montana, and Wyoming, but it was reported that planting was going ahead rapidly. There were 72,000 acres of beets in Nebraska last year, 8,500 in the Wheatland, Wyo., district, and 40,000 in the Lovell-Billings district of Montana and Wyoming.

W. D. Lippitt, president of the Great Western Sugar Co., returned yesterday from the Chicago conference.

SPLENDID VICTORY

He said everything possible would be done to aid the farmers in

He said everything possible would be done to aid the farmers in getting a good crop.

J. D. Pancake, secretary of the Mountain States Beet Growers Marketing Association, also returned to his home in Greeley.

"It was a splendid victory for the growers", he said. "It was especially gratifying to be assured of special concessions to insure this region of the pre-war parity price.

"Farmers are busy throughout the four States getting their seed in the ground and I do not think there will be any great loss because of the delay in planting.

"The soil is in excellent condition and if the farmers will see that the seed gets plenty of moisture I do not believe they will know the difference from planting weeks earlier."

WAIT QUOTA ALLOTMENT

Both the growers and the sugar companies are awaiting the signing of the Costigan-Jones bill with interest as it is expected it will bring immediate quota allotments.

Lippitt said yesterday he had not been notified of any arrangement for making the acreage allotments.

It is expected Dr. A. J. S. Weaver, head of the sugar division of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, will announce the number of acres that can be seeded in the various beet-growing sections of the Nation.

It is not expected there will be any cut in the acreage in the Rocky Mountain States.

It is believed the Costigan-Jones bill will be signed tomorrow, according to dispatches received from Washington last night. The bill has been given the approval of Secretary Wallace and awaits only the signature of the President.

[From the Fort Collins Leader, May 11, 1934]

PRESIDENT SIGNS SUGAR BILL TO AID GROWERS AND INDUSTRY—HE SIGNED COSTIGAN-JONES LAW WEDNESDAY—PROCESSING TAX WILL GIVE BEET GROWERS $6.50 PER TON THIS YEAR—CROP OUTLOOK

The dawn of a better day for northern Colorado, and particularly for her beet growers, was made certain Wednesday, when President Roosevelt made history for the sugar industry in the United States as he signed the Costigan-Jones sugar-control bill to stabilize the industry and to insure for beet growers a larger return for their beets. for their beets.

In the presence of a group of Congressmen and Government officials the President placed his signature to the law recently passed by Congress, then announced that the tariff on imported sugar would be reduced one-half cent a pound, and that the processing tax would not exceed that amount. By this method consumers will not be forced to pay more for their sugar, while beet growers in the United States will benefit from the processing tax of 50 cents per 100 pounds.

The Costigan-Jones bill sets a quota of 1,550,000 tons of beet sugar as the amount to be produced in the United States; it provides for a processing tax or bounty to be collected on each sack of refined sugar sold, which tax will be used to increase payments to beet growers to insure them a parity price for their beets. The amount they will receive this year, under the law, is figured at $6.50 per ton. The reduction in the tariff and the collection of the processing tax will become effective in 30 days. Signing of the bill by President Roosevelt was hailed with delight throughcut northern Colorado. The following comment is typical of the sentiment expressed:

sentiment expressed:

J. D. Pancake, Greeley: "This bill assures farmers a living-wage price for their crop. It stabilizes the sugar markets of the United States and puts the whole sugar industry on a solid foundation. It's a lifesaver for the entire industry, and everything looks fine for the domestic beet-sugar farmers. The crop outlook is splendid."

CONDITION OF BEET CROP FAVORABLE

N. R. McCreery, Colorado manager for the Great Western Sugar Co., is reported from Sterling as saying that the Colorado beet crop "looks better at this stage of the year than it has on the same date in the last 3 years. There is no reason now to be pessimistic about the Rocky Mountain beet-growing States producing their quota under the new sugar-control measure this year. * * * I do not believe that any great reduction of the total tonnage is to be expected, on the basis of the present outlook." look."

This comment is regarded as highly significant, in view of the fact that some concern has been expressed that production might fall off considerably this year because of late planting, thereby permitting an increase of import quotas to take care of normal consumption demands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 3064) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1449) thereon.

Mr. POPE, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 9829) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act with respect to the processing tax on hogs, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1452) thereon.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 5543) for the relief of T. Brooks Alford, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1453) thereon.

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted a report thereon, as indicated:

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NYE:

(47 Stat.L. 337):

A bill (S. 3800) to regulate corporations in interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3801) for the relief of Webster & Hull; and A bill (S. 3802) for the relief of C. W. Zaring & Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CUTTING:

A bill (S. 3803) to provide the necessities of life for those citizens of the United States who through the disability of age and the mischances of a complicated industrial civilization have lost their power to support themselves; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

(Mr. O'MAHONEY introduced Senate bill No. 3804, which appears under a separate heading.)

A FEDERAL THRIFT SYSTEM

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Postal Savings System of the United States went into effect in 1911 and enjoyed a gradual and steady growth during the first 7 years of its existence. The deposits increased from $10,-614,000 in 1911 to $167,652,000 in 1918. From 1918 to 1929 the amount of deposits remained practically constant.

After the collapse of 1929, however, the people of the country turned to the System for safety. During the year 1930 the total deposits increased from one hundred and sixty-four million to two hundred and forty-five million. and during the following year the total jumped to six hundred and five millions. Anyone who had taken the trouble to study the expansion of the postal savings during the years following the crash and during the months preceding the bank holiday of the spring of 1933 could have foretold what was to come.

The increase of deposits in 1932 was almost $300,000,000. On March 31, 1933, they had reached the stupendous total of $1,113,921,638. As much as $45,000,000 was added to the total deposits during a single month in 1932 and the monthly increase was never less than $10,000,000.

It was generally expected that when the Federal law was passed establishing the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and guaranteeing the deposits in private banks there would be an immediate decrease of the total entrusted to the Postal Savings System. The guaranty law had gone so far as to change the character of postal savings and making them in effect time deposits.

NO DECREASE IN POSTAL SAVINGS

Strangely enough, however, there has been practically no decrease in the postal savings. The year 1933 ended with a total deposit of $1,208,884,000, and on March 31 of this year the total was $1,199,982,000.

Mr. President, we may take satisfaction, of course, in the fact that the increases have stopped and that confidence in the banking system of the country has undoubtedly been restored, but the fact that deposits have not been falling off sharply seems to indicate that the people of the country, the poor people, those who accumulate savings with difficulty, have not yet recovered from the tremendous shock which they suffered in the panic of 1929. They are still reposing their confidence in their own Federal Government for the protection of their savings.

Does it not seem prudent that the Federal Government. recognizing this confidence in the Federal agencies, should now afford to these people a method of cooperating with them in the conservation of their earnings?

I am aware that the subject is involved and difficult, and for that reason I made no attempt to introduce a bill early in the session, believing that other pressing measures should first be considered. The problem, however, is one which should, in my opinion, be given very careful study during the summer, and which should be taken up for consideration in the next Congress.

The tentative bill which I am introducing is for the purpose of affording a basis for the study of this problem. It provides for the creation of an installment investment service under the direction of the Government designed primarily to offer to the men and women of small means an opportunity for safe and permanent investment. The plan is so drafted as not to conflict with private banking. It is an attempt to restore in another form the thrift system which was established during the war.

NOT IN COMPETITION WITH BANKS

This new Federal thrift system would neither parallel nor compete with services now offered by commercial or savings banks, but, on the contrary, would prove of benefit to these | institutions.

Sooner or later the commercial banks of the country will be called upon to meet a reviving demand for commercial accommodations, and then it will be highly desirable to discontinue further Government financing through them and to shift elsewhere at least a part of the estimated $15,000,-000,000 Government securities which member and nonmember banks now hold.

The Federal thrift system will be competent to absorb at least a large part of these obligations, thus performing a highly constructive service for the commercial banks, as well as for the industry and business of the Nation.

The plan will not duplicate but will definitely extend the present service of the savings bank. The funds which the system will gather in and direct into the channel of permanent Government investment will largely be new capital which was never in, and probably never would have found its way to, a savings account.

The Federal thrift system, moreover, is intended to provide a long-term installment investment plan only, and consequently it sharply limits the certificate holder's right to withdraw cash impulsively. As part of his financial plan, each certificate holder will therefore be specifically urged to carry an immediately available cash fund in the form of a savings account, adequate for any emergency which he may reasonably anticipate.

Governmental leadership in thrift promotion in a field which does not compete with but is collateral to that of the savings bank will renew confidence in the now-discredited formula "save as you earn", and will secure the speedy regeneration of the thrift convictions and habits of the Nation

Just as the Government war-time insurance taught millions, who previously believed that $1,000 fraternal life insurance provided maximum protection, to think in terms of a $10,000 unit, so will the Federal thrift plan widen the national thrift horizon in every direction.

The plan will, through local post offices, penetrate many localities and small communities which are not now, and probably never will be served in any way by corporate sav-

TO AID THE AVERAGE CITIZEN

The economic health of the Nation rests squarely on the economic well-being of those millions of average American men and women who can attain financial independence only through frugality and who must have the support of a simple, convenient but systematic conservation program, leading to a clearly perceived goal.

This class constitutes 90 percent of the population of the country, which can least afford to risk the product of its selfdenial and is wholly unable to distinguish between fraudulent or speculative or sound securities that are constantly offered it in exchange for its laboriously accumulated capital.

Systematic thrift is not a difficult habit to acquire, but the safe investment of funds so conserved, always a troublesome problem, has now become so difficult for those whose income and financial experience are limited as seriously to disturb the thrift habits and convictions of the Nation.

The Federal thrift system would perform a social service of tremendous value by providing simple, effective machinery through which persons whose income will always be small may systematically and permanently invest as they earn in an interest-accumulating Government obligation and thus conveniently and confidently apply to the upbuilding of economic independence a vast sum which is now devoted to no productive purpose.

By providing the means for permanent as well as safe investment the system would also, for those who make use of it, entirely eliminate that tragic and terrific toll to which the product of American thrift is annually subjected through injudicious investment by those who, least able to lose, are also least experienced financially.

By developing and preserving a great number of panicproof, income-bearing competences, the Federal thrift system would stabilize the purchasing power of millions of individuals and family groups and would thus materially lessen the destructive effect of future maladjustments between production and consumption.

The wide distribution of a Government obligation as contemplated by the system would constitute the best possible pledge of national security.

I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks a table showing the total amounts deposited to the credit of postal-savings depositors by months from the close of February 1932 to April 30, 1934.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask also that the bill itself may be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3804) to provide for the issuance of Federal thrift certificates, to encourage a program of installment investment and accumulation, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and ordered to lie on the table; and there being no objection, it was also ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3804

A bill to provide for the issuance of Federal thrift certificates, to encourage a program of installment investment and accumula-tion, and for other purposes

tion, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized, in the manner hereinafter provided, to provide for the issuance of Federal thrift certificates through any United States post office designated by him, or any member bank of the Federal Reserve System designated by him with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, hereinafter referred to as "participating banks."

SEC. 2. (a) Federal thrift certificates shall be in such form as the Postmaster General shall prescribe, and upon application to any participating bank or designated post office shall be issued in

SEC. 2. (a) Federal thrift certificates shall be in such form as the Postmaster General shall prescribe, and upon application to any participating bank or designated post office shall be issued in units of $500 or multiples thereof, but not exceeding $5,000, on a schedule of monthly, semimonthly, or annual payments. Such certificates shall bear interest, compounded on the current value of the certificate at a rate provided for in the certificate at the time of issue, but in no case exceeding 3½ percent per annum, except during periods of delinquency as hereinafter provided. Interest on installment investments shall be exempt from all Government, State, and local income taxes. Any number of certificates, up to 10, may be issued in the name of any one person, but no person may have certificates outstanding in his name which call for a total investment exceeding $600 a year.

(b) The Postmaster General, upon the payment of one installment investment, shall issue to any participating bank desiring to extend Federal thrift certificates to any of its customers making such payment, and/or any designated post office, certificates in appropriate form; and such bank or post office may register such certificates in the name of, and deliver them to, individual investors, and may, as the agent of the Postmaster General, accept subsequent installment payments on such certificates.

SEC. 3. Each certificate shall represent an interest, to the amount of its current value, in the proceeds of a trust fund, to be established by the Postmaster General, consisting of (1) obligations of the Government of the United States, (2) obligations issued by any instrumentality of the United States, and (3) obligations acquired in due course by any such instrumentality and guaranteed by such instrumentality. The total value of the securities in the trust fund, calculated at par, shall at all times at least equal the current value of all outstanding thrift certificates. Funds accumulated by the Postmaster General through the cates. Funds accumulated by the Postmaster General through the

SEC. 4. The United States hereby guarantees payment in accordance with the terms of Federal thrift certificates and the exact observance of other terms thereof.

SEC. 5. Installment investments shall be made at the bank or post office which originally issued the certificate, but such place of payment may be changed upon application of the certificate holder, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Postmaster General. Appropriate notices of installments to be paid, receipts for installments paid, and communications regarding installments past due shall be mailed to the holder under rules and regulations prescribed by the Postmaster General.

for installments paid, and communications regarding installments past due shall be mailed to the holder under rules and regulations prescribed by the Postmaster General.

SEC. 6. The holder of any certificate may postpone his installment investment for any period not exceeding 2 years, without penalty, except that during such period interest on the current value of the certificate shall be credited at the rate of 2 percent per annum in lieu of the rate fixed by the certificate. Such holder may fully reinstate his certificate at any time within the 2-year period without making up past-due payments by paying one installment; and thereupon the due dates of all future installments and the maturity date of his certificate shall be extended for a period equal to the length of time the past-due installment was in arrears. If all payments are continuously in arrears for a period exceeding 2 years, the payments may not be resumed and the certificate reinstated, but interest at the rate of 2 percent per annum will be credited to the current value of the lapsed certificate so long as the holder does not withdraw his accumulation. The current value of a lapsed certificate may be withdrawn in cash at any time, or such value may be applied as an advance payment on a new certificate.

SEC. 7. In cases of emergency, as determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Postmaster General, the holder of a certificate which is not lapsed may apply to have its current value divided into 6 equal parts, not more than 1 of which may be withdrawn in any 1 month. Any amount so withdrawn shall be deducted from the current value of the certificate, but the holder may, at his option, repay such amount. No interest shall be charged on the amount so withdrawn.

SEC. 8. Each certificate may be called by the Postmaster General at its current value on any interest-compounding day. If not so may, at his option, repay such amount. No interest shall be charged on the amount so withdrawn.

Sec. 8. Each certificate may be called by the Postmaster General at its current value on any interest-compounding day. If not so called, such certificate shall mature upon the making of the last specified installment investment, at which time (1) its maturity value shall be payable in cash, or, at the option of the holder, (2) such certificate may be extended and reextended at the same rate of systematic investment or at a new rate determined with a view to accommodating the holder's convenience and capacity.

Sec. 9. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that the sale of Federal thrift certificates shall be primarily a corporate bank function and only secondarily a Post Office Department operation; and to that end no post office shall be designated as a fiscal agent for such purposes except in counties (1) where no bank exists, or (2) where no bank has been designated, or (3) where a designated bank exists but is not functioning in a manner satisfactory to the Postmaster General.

Sec. 10. All gross operating profit, represented by the difference between the interest earned on the deposited collateral and interest credited upon the thrift certificates shall, in proportion to the securities deposited as collateral against certificates issued by participating banks, be payable to such banks; and, in the case of post office receipts, to the Treasury as part of the postal revenues, except so much thereof as may be necessary for administrative expenses of the Post Office Department under this act, including reimbursement of funds expended in connection with the issuance of certificates, and printing and engraving of the same.

Sec. 11. The Postmaster General shall prescribe rules and requthe same.

SEC. 11. The Postmaster General shall prescribe rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act.

INVESTIGATION OF CHARGES AGAINST SUPERINTENDENT OF SHILOH NATIONAL PARK, TENN.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the resignation of the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who had been appointed under the terms of Senate Resolution 198 a member of the select committee to investigate charges against the superintendent of the Shiloh National Park, Tenn.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] to fill the vacancy, occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Byrnes, on the above-named select committee.

COMMUNISTIC ACTIVITIES-REPORT BY WILLIAM GREEN

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, has made a very informative report in respect to communistic activities in the United States. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and is is so ordered.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, unanimous consent was granted me for printing in the RECORD a report to the President made by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, dealing with communistic activities in the United States. I submit the report herewith.

The report referred to, with an accompanying abstract, is as follows:

A MEMORANDUM TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. President, in these pages there is offered to you evidence of subversive activity on the part of Communists in the United States and of a direction of such activity from Moscow, where a group of international organizations, of which the Communists, or Third International, is but one, operate under the command of the one dictatorship.

The purpose of this evidence is not to serve as a basis for The purpose of this evidence is not to serve as a basis for argument against the course now being pursued by the Government, but to show the necessity—the imperative necessity, in labor's opinion—of securing positive guaranties that such activity will cease and that none of the various agencies of international Communist propaganda will function in the United States under direction by or with the assistance of the Soviet Government or its immediate subsidiary organizations.

It must be pointed out that this memorandum is not complete.

It must be pointed out that this memorandum is not complete. Engaged, as we are in the work devolving upon us under N.R.A., the necessary time for a complete survey has not been at our disposal. Nor have we been able to detach men to make inquiries and reports. Largely we have had to draw upon reports already in our files. Could we have made a complete survey of the field at this hour, it is certain that it would be possible to present a picture of astounding proportions.

The effort has been to adhere to a statement of fact, but it has not been possible in all cases to resist the temptation to offer observations on events herein recounted. However, argument is not intended. It is not deemed necessary to offer argument to you, for labor has every confidence in your determination to safeguard the United States and its free institutions, including its trade-union movement. No doubt not even the submission of these facts is necessary, but it would seem a negligence of duty did we not present this material for your consideration. It is the hope that it will be considered in the spirit in which it is offered, which is one of helpfulness. which is one of helpfulness.

Very truly,

WILLIAM GREEN. President the American Federation of Labor.

During all the years since the establishment of the Soviet regime in Russia, propaganda in the United States has been conducted not only through agencies directly set up by the Communist high command but through agencies and organizations in which non-Communists of good standing and repute have been which non-Communists of good standing and repute have been induced to participate.

Throughout the whole period Communists have made it a cardinal point to unite with every protesting minority and to engage in every effort directed against established institutions of our country. There has grown up a great group of organizations—Communists and semi-Communists.

A careful study of these organizations shows that they are so related through interlocking directorates that apparently some hundred organizations are dominated by an interlocking group of directors numbering not more than 60. In this group of 60, perhaps 10 are sufficiently influential to dominate important situations. situations.

There is no essential Communist interest in the Mooney case, There is no essential Communist interest in the Mooney case, nor is there any in the freedom of the Filipinos movement, nor in anti-injunction legislation. There is certainly none in the abolition of capital punishment; yet these are examples of the type of organizations in which there has been and is active Communist participation on a hundred or more fronts. Their tactics may perhaps be called the "tactics of irritation", since the purpose is to create dissatisfaction as widely as possible and to bring into disrepute the authorities and the established institutions of the country.

As an example, the American Civil Liberties Union may be institutions of the country.

As an example, the American Civil Liberties Union may be cited. Its announced purpose is the defense of those who fall afoul of laws when engaged in endeavors for which the law should offer protection. Its practice is almost exclusively the defense of Communists. Among those who have joined it in protest against the use of police action to suppress communism are such Americans as Prof. Charles A. Beard, Susan Brandeis, Dr. Henry Sloan Coffin, Dr. John Haynes Holmes, and Dr. John Dewey, all of them non-Communists, all belonging to various so-called "liberal" or "progressive" groups. Dr. Dewey participates in the activities of the Civil Liberties Union and heads the Peoples' Lobby, which seeks to influence legislation. This in turn is interlocked with the National Council for Prevention of War, which cannot be characterized other than as a pacifist organization. Dr. John Haynes Holmes belongs to more radical organizations than he can attend. organizations than he can attend.

To pursue the subject of interlocking directorates to its conclusion would require almost a volume. Evidence in extreme can be produced, if desired. The facts of the situation are not disputed, though obviously there is no agreement as to their disputed, though obviously there is no agreement as to their implications.

The "united front" is fundamental in Communist agitation and propaganda tactics. It means unite with every dissident cause, and it is in pursuit of this aim that Communists have penetrated and infiltrated into organization after organization, in every case bending every effort to induce each organization to bear more and more to the left, to become more and more explosive and hostile in its utterances.

When Moscow orders "Forward march!" the Communists in

When Moscow orders "Forward, march!" the Communists in

When Moscow orders "Forward, march!" the Communists in the United States execute the command, like so many companies of disciplined troops. All over the Communist world the disciplined companies do likewise. For those who do not obey there is excommunication and sometimes the sentence of death.

Sentence of death has happened, as eventually we shall see. That the Communists of America follow the orders of Moscow was clearly and candidly announced by William Z. Foster, the principal leader of communism in the United States, when he testified before the commission presided over by the Honorable Hamilton Fish, by authority of Congress.

"You take your orders from the Third International, do you?" Mr. Fish asked; and Mr. Foster replied:

"The question, 'Do we take our orders from the Communist

"The question, 'Do we take our orders from the Communist International?' is a question which reveals the utter distance of the capitalist conception of organization from that of the worker. the capitalist conception of organization from that of the worker. The Communist International is a world party, based upon the mass parties in the respective countries. It works out its policy by the mass principles of these parties in all its deliberations. It is a party that conducts the most fundamental examination of all questions that come before it, and when a decision is arrived at in any given instance this decision the workers, with their customary sense of proletarian discipline, accept and put into effect." Those who are at all familiar with Communist circumlocution and somewhat orientalized terminology will grasp the significance of the Foster definition. But Mr. Foster elected to make the situation even clearer by quoting authority. He read to the congressional committee from page 34 of the Communist International Program, this explicit threat of extinction to all who support democracy, which the Communists habitually call capitalism:

"The conquest of power by the proletariat does not mean peaceful capturing of ready-made bourgeois state machinery by means of a parliamentary majority."

Mr. Foster continued to read:

"The bourgeoisie resorts to every means of violence and terror to safeguard and strengthen its predatory property and political domination. Like the feudal nobility of the past, the bourgeoisie cannot abandon its historical position to the new class without a desperate and frantic struggle; hence the violence of the bourgeoisie can only be suppressed by the stern violence of the proletariat."

Translating the passage read by Fester

Translating the passage read by Foster, we observe that since those people that have and believe in democracy will fight to defend their freedom and their democracy, just as they fought heroically to achieve it, they must be exterminated by the terrorism of the red hosts. Because they defend their homes they must be slaughtered.

ism of the red hosts. Because they defend their homes they must be slaughtered.

That is the program for communism, not in Russia, or in China, but in the United States—in Manhattan, in old Brooklyn, in Boston, where the famous Tea Party inspired patriots and still inspires them, in Chicago, in Fort Worth, in Indianapolis, in Oshkosh, Red Wing, and Cheyenne. That is the program toward the fulfillment of which every organized Communist in America looks, as once the steel-helmetted soldiers of Das Vaterland looked toward Der Tag. To gain as much light as possible, let us quote from the Foster testimony a few more illuminating sentences. He said:

"The workers of this country and the workers of every country have only one flag and that is the red flag. * * The workers, the revolutionary workers, in all the capitalist countries are an oppressed class who are held in subjection by their respective capitalist governments, and their attitude toward these governments is the abolition of these governments and the establishment of soviet governments. * * I stated very clearly the red flag of the revolutionary class, and we are part of the revolutionary class, and we owe no allegiance to them."

Communism in America is the pet child of the Moscow master strategist, Stalin. In May 1929, in a speech, he said:

"I consider the Communist Party of the United States one of the Communist parties to which history has given decisive tasks from the point of view of the world revolutionary movement. The revolutionary crisis has not yet reached the United States, but we already have knowledge of numerous facts which suggest that it is approaching.

"It is necessary that the American Communist Party should that it is approaching.

"It is necessary that the American Communist Party should be capable of meeting the movement of crisis fully equipped to take the direction of future class wars in the United States. You must prepare for that, comrades, with all your strength and by every means; you must constantly improve and believe the that it is approaching. every means; you must constantly improve and bolshevize the American Communist Party. You must forge real revolutionary cadres and leaders of the proletariat who will be capable of leading the millions of American workers toward the revolutionary class wars."

Not until January 1930, more than 6 months after its delivery, Not until January 1930, more than 6 months after its delivery, was that speech made known to any save those who heard it. At the same time there was read a detailed report with reference to work in the United States. The occasion was the tenth session of the executive committee of the Communist International, and the author of the report was Moltov, members of the presidium of that international. Let us quote:

"The comintern has given particular attention to the situation in the Communist Party of the United States.

"A special delegation of the executive committee of the coming

"A special delegation of the executive committee of the comin-"A special delegation of the executive committee of the comintern was sent to the last congress of this party (Workers' Party, United States). Afterward for several weeks there sat at Moscow a commission of the presidium of the executive committee of the Communist International which specially studied the situation in the Communist Party of the United States. The presidium of the executive committee of the Communist Party radically renewed the direction of the American Communist Party and created within it the conditions of a real Bolshevist development of the party and a reinforcement of its authority among the working masses."

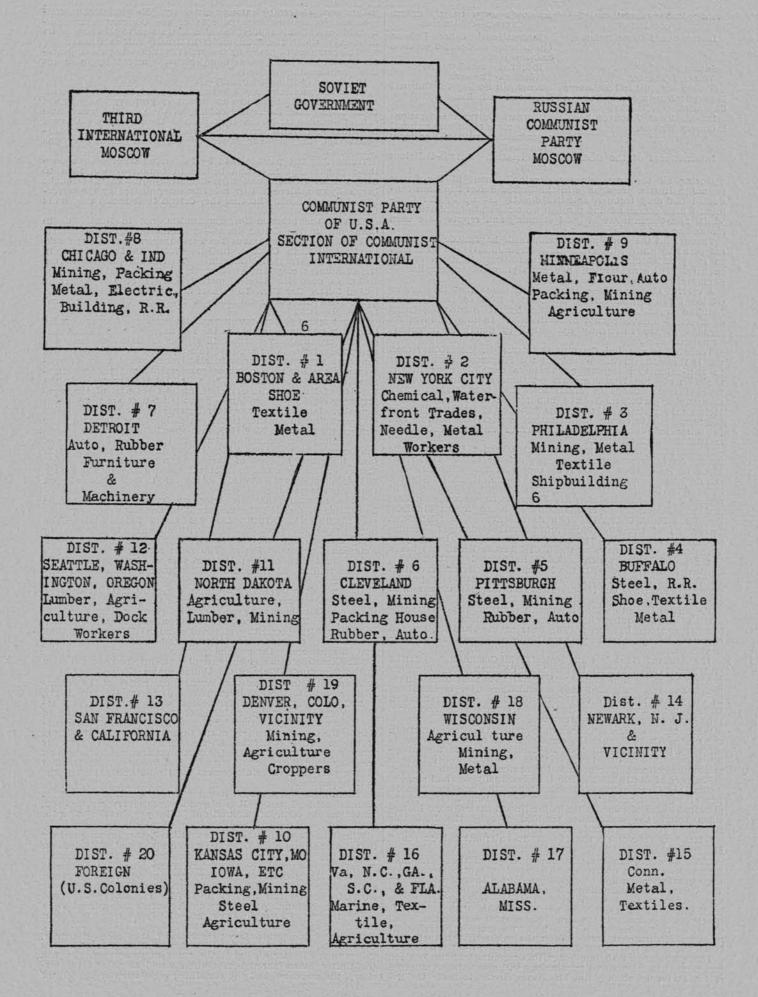

Communism is not a sect, it is not a local political party, or a national political party. It is a world revolutionary organization, united on one plan, knit around one philosophy, headed toward a single goal.

When the Communists say "revolution", they mean precisely that and nothing else. They do not mean a national election, such as tore the American Government away from the Republican Party and gave it to the Democratic Party when Mr. Roosevelt succeeded Mr. Hoover. Nor do they even, as we have seen, mean such an election as might tear the National Government away from Mr. Roosevelt and give it to Mr. Foster. Mr. Foster would not, under communism, have any use for such a government as he would inherit. He would have immediately to resign and win control all over again by force of arms.

would inherit. He would have immediately to resign and win control all over again by force of arms.

When the Communists say "revolution", they mean slaughter, destruction, terrorism, utter demolition, and the creation of a Communist dictatorship upon the ruins of democracy. To win the United States through revolution would be to add the territory, the resources, and the remaining population of the United States to the realm that now suffers under the dictatorship of which Mr. Joseph Stalin is the head. That there is no immediate prospect of such an eventuality does not change the intention of the Communists nor swerve them from their determination to achieve that object if they can find the way and the means for the doing of it. To have potential assassination in your midst is not consoling, to say the least.

And the fact that communism cannot achieve a successful revolution in the United States by no means indicates that it may not produce an abortive one. There is no reason whatever to assume that, at what they consider an opportune moment, they will not try.

There is, on the contrary, every reason to assume that they will try. And they will try, if and when they do, around or under cover of some event which deeply stirs the people—perhaps under the cover and with the false encouragement of some such movement as the bonus march or national hunger demonstrations.

To what extent the Communists may be materially prepared for a thrust in violence the non-Communist cannot know and does not know.

Revolution, or the attempt thereat, in the United States on the part of international communism is distinctly a thing that can happen. It is on the program. It is the end-all and the cure-all as envisioned by the Communist Party in America, in harmony with and in unison with the Communist Party of Russia and its intimately related copartner, the Communist International.

When the Communists of all lands execute the command. If and when the Communist International, in response to the Russian Communist dictatorship, believing that the hour has struck, sends to American communism the command, "Fire!", the guns of revolution will blaze upon our streets and the issue then will be settled in the blood of our people.

be settled in the blood of our people.

The Workers Party, the United States section of the Communist International, is merely the head and front of the red movement in our midst.

The active branch of the red movement in the American indus trial field is the Trade Union Unity League, headed by William Z. Foster, the perennial Communist Presidential candidate.

The Trade Union Unity League can scarcely be said to rank second to the Workers' Party. In name it is subsidiary, but there is no more important Communist in the ranks of the United States second to the Workers' Party. In name it is subsidiary, but there is no more important Communist in the ranks of the United States organization than Foster, though there may be and have been Communists sent to America from Moscow outranking him.

The Trade Union Unity League has no less than 28 subordinate divisions. It is important to identify these, even at the risk of being tiresome. Here is information that ought to be cataloged in the home of every American, and particularly of every American wage earner—a blacklist of hated interlopers and destroyers. The branches or divisions of the Trade Union Unity League are:

Agricultural Workers Union, Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Industrial Union; Building Maintenance Workers' Industrial Union; National Construction Workers' Union; Cleaning and Laundry Workers' Industrial Union; Goods and Packing House Industrial Workers' Industrial Union; National Food Workers' Union; Jewlery Workers' Industrial Union; National Metal Workers' Industrial Workers' Industrial Union; National Metal Workers' Industrial Workers' Industrial League; National Railroad Workers' Industrial League; National Auto Workers' Industrial Union; Lumber Workers' Industrial Union; Independent Shoe and Leather Workers' Union; Painters' Industrial Union; Rubber Workers' Industrial Union; Painters' Industrial Union; Furniture Workers' Industrial Union; Miners, Smelters, and Oil Workers' Industrial League; Unemployed Councils; Children's Trade Union League; Workers' Ex-Service Men's League; Negro section; women's section; youth section; shop neuclei; local unions.

Does this complete the list of Communist organizations and sub-

Does this complete the list of Communist organizations and sub-Does this complete the list of Communist organizations and subdivisions in the United States? Does this portray the extent of the net spread by Moscow? It does not. We shall continue with the enumeration of official Communist organizations in the United States, although the complete list can never be known outside the Communist headquarters, because of the rapid order in which new organizations are set up.

Examination of the list to follow discloses the fact that many of the organizations, names are made to interlock with a wide of the organizations' names are made to interlock with a wide chain of non-Communist organizations through the inclusion of chain of non-Communist organizations through the inclusion of a minority of non-Communist directors, or directors who are "pink" or sympathetic.

We proceed now to the list, regarding it as another chapter in the directory of invading enemy forces:

Workers International Relief; National Council for the Protection of Foreign-born Workers; American Negro Labor Congress, or the League of Struggle for Negro Rights; United Farmers League; Friends of the Soviet Union; Labor Sports Union, which is a section of the Red International of Sports Unions; John Reed Club; United Council of Working Class Housewives; United Council of Working Class Women; Workers Library Publishers; International Publishers; Young Communist League of America; Young Pioneers of America; Russian Cooperative Association; Bezboshnik, which is the Russian Godless Society; United Workers boshnik, which is the Russian Godless Society; United Workers Cooperative Association, which conducts camps; Russian Mutual Aid Society; Hungarian Sick and Death Benefit Society; International Workers Order; Proletarian Dramatic Association of America; Soviet Union Information Bureau; Amkino, United States bernach of Sovkino, promoter of Soviet motion pictures; Workers Schools; International Labor Defense, section of the International Red Aid; Sacco and Vanzetti Branch; Mooney-Billings Branch; John Porter Branch, colored; Lenin Branch; Olgin Branch; Freiheit, and other similarly named branches; Emergency Committee for Southern Political Prisoners; Independent Workers Order, which is the left wing organization within the Workmen's Circle.

In addition to this list there are foreign languages for all of the important languages, including, in the order of importance in membership strength, the following:

Jewish, Eussian (Slavic), Lithuanian, Hungarian, Finnish, Czechoslovakian, Ukrainian, Yugoslavic, Polish, German Scandinavian, Italian, Mexican, Greek, Rumanian, Armenian, Portuguese, Spanish, South American, English, Irish, Scotch, French Estonian, Lettish, Chinese, and Japanese.

Lettish, Chinese, and Japanese.

In addition to these organizations and to the 12 daily newspapers, there are 30 Communist weekly and monthly publications having second-class mailing privileges. Of these, 9 are printed in the English language, 21 in foreign languages. And 15 other publications, including 3 published in Moscow, are regularly distributed through various channels other than second-class mail. The weeklies and periodicals circulating through second-class mails have a circulation of about 110,000 copies per issue. Those otherwise distributed offer no check on their circulation, and it cannot even be approximated. Of these latter eight are in the English language.

cannot even be approximated. Of these latter eight are in the English language.

Over all of these Communist organizations and newspapers stands the Communist International, exercising its discipline, demanding and getting obedience even in the small matters, inflexible in every matter of revolutionary policy and tactics.

William Z. Foster, the active and dominating head of the Trade Union Unity League, is a member of the executive committee of the Red International of Labor Unions. He is no more ardent, however than others who occupy positions of party responsibility.

however, than others who occupy positions of party responsibility.

Moissaye Olgin, who edits the Freiheit, the Communist daily newspaper of largest circulation, testified before the committee headed by Congressman Fish: "I am a Communist and that is a revolutionist. I am fighting under the red flag to displace American capitalism by a government of workers and farmers."

Louis Bebrits, editor of Uj Elore, ranking next to the Daily Worker in circulation, testified: "I cannot imagine a revolution without the same methods as the Russian workers and farmers

The sole inaccuracy in the testimony of these two authorities is that the masses of Russian workers and farmers had nothing to say about or do with the tactics used by the Communists in overthrowing the Kerensky government set up by the council of workmen and soldiers' deputies. In fact, thousands of the victims came from among their ranks.

In examining the list of Communist organizations in the United States we have thus far taken no account of the myriad organizations called "shop nuclei" nor of Workers' Party local branches. These are in every community of consequence. Every American familiar with unions, fraternal orders, or other national groups will grasp the idea of the local branch of the Workers' Party. But the shop nuclei is another matter not so familiar to Americans.

The nuclei is just what the word implies. The principal task of the Trade Union Unity League is to organize shop nuclei. The nuclei organization is the equivalent of a secret-service organization in American industry. One man in a workshop may form a nuclei unit. Usually the nuclei is composed of 2 or 3 or 4. These nuclei members are known to each other. They do not make their nuclei identity known to their shop mates.

Nuclei members report to Communist leaders outside the plant the state of mind of their fellow workers, and the proper barrage of leafiets or speeches, or both, is turned loose. On the other hand, the nuclei members seek to sow the proper kind of discord within the shop. There is organized teamwork between nuclei members and the outside Communist organization. A part of the test of nuclei members is that they shall not reveal them. members and the outside Communist organization. A part of the task of nuclei members is that they shall not reveal themselves in such a manner as to lose their jobs. If one is discovered and discharged, an effort is made to place another Communist into the plant in his place.

Shop nuclei are created without in any way disturbing the Workers' Party branch organizations. The role of the nuclei members in the event of revolution—for that is their eventual purpose in being—would be vital. They would become the local managers, at least at the outset.

The purpose in depicting the great range and variety of Communist organizations is not to hint at any probable eventual success in revolution, for that is now out of the question, but to show the extremely thorough preparations being made by the Communist machine for an event which they believe is destined

The authority of Moscow over Communists in the United States extends to trial and punishment for offenses against orders issued by the Moscow headquarters. The death penalty has been inflicted in the United States and has been passed upon others who have escaped execution by one device or another. That the O.G.P.U. is empowered to pass the death sentence and to execute it even in foreign lands is not disputed by Communist authorities. The death penalty has been inflicted in France and Italy, as well as in the United States. This is a new and peculiar kind of extraterritoriality. The testimony of at least two witnesses that they, though living in the United States, were under a Soviet sentence of death, is a matter of record. Early in August of 1931 sentence of death, is a matter of record. Early in August of 1931 Mr. George Djamgaroff occupied the witness stand in a Federal court in Washington, D.C. He recalled that in September 1930 he had testified at length before the Fish committee regarding the activities in America of agents of the O.G.P.U. As a witness in a United States Federal court, he testified that he was under sentence to be shot; that the sentence has been imposed by the secret tribunal of the O.G.P.U. in Moscow. There is likewise the secret tribunal of the O.G.P.U. in Moscow. There is likewise the case of Mr. Basil W. Delgass, who testified in 1930 with Mr. Djamgaroff. Both, incidentally, testified under oath. Mr. Delgass testified that for 3½ years he had been vice president of the Amtorg Trading Corporation and that at the time of his testimony he was under sentence by the O.G.P.U. to be shot. His offense was in refusing to return to Russia when ordered by the Soviet to do so. His resignation was for the double purpose. Soviet to do so. His resignation was for the double purpose of escaping the necessity of giving manufactured testimony and removing himself from an organization the orders of which he could no longer obey. Though he was in New York, he was tried in Russia and sentenced to death.

The Bessedovski case in Paris is too well known to need men-The Bessedovski case in Paris is too well known to need mention here. He was the Soviet Chargé d'Affaires in Paris. His house was entered by would-be executioners; he escaped and lived to write an astounding account of O.G.P.U. intrigue. In the course of his narrative he stated that the expenses of the O.G.P.U. in the United States would not exceed $50,000,000 per year.

There is likewise the case of Voikov, tried by an O.G.P.U. court, sentenced, and shot in Poland, the country to which he had been ambassador.

Mr. H. A. Jung, of Chicago, declares that one of his agents watched the decoding of a cablegram on January 18, 1930, which carried Moscow's assurance that greater attention would be paid to the United States and that $1,250,000 would be spent on propaganda alone. If that money was expended, it can be assumed that O.G.P.U. agents supervised the operation. That they have long been on duty in the United States, even as spies in American factories, is too well known to be disputed.

As for additional assassinations, the drowning of a Russian named Chourgin, head of Amtorg, some 4 years ago, and of Sklianski, who had been but 2 days on American soil as a surreptitious arrival from Moscow, has never been explained. It has been assumed by many that Chourgin was the intended victim, Sklianski the intended executioner and the accidental covictim.

The O.G.P.U.'s threatening finger came boldly into the tradeunion movement. Mr. Benjamin Schlesinger, late president of the International Ladies Garment Workers, visited Russia in 1922. On his return he was followed by an agent of the O.G.P.U., and in his own office in New York City he was told that unless he and his union deserted the American Federation of Labor immediately Moscow agents would at once set up a rival union and exercise every effort to destroy Mr. Schlesinger, his fellow officers, and the union. On the floor of an American Federation of Labor convention Mr. Schlesinger confirmed these statements. The Moscow agent was ordered out of his office, and from that day forward clearly defined Moscow-directed efforts to destroy the International Ladies Garment Workers were in evidence.

Again in New York City in 1932 the O.G.P.U. assassination went into action. Mrs. Tatiana Kouteynikeff, a White Russian refugee, was sitting before her dressing table in her sixth floor apartment at 68 Lennox Avenue. Her husband and son were sleeping in an known, nor have the assailants been captured.

Aready I. Pogdeff, a young Amtorg agent, was found dead under the window of his room in the Hotel Cartaret in April 1930. It was reported that he had fallen or leaped to his death, but a friend, Gregory R. Bernadsky, went to the police and charged that Pogdeff had been slain by the O.G.P.U. for disobeying an order to return to Russia, and that Pogdeff had expressed the fear that he would be killed in fulfillment of an O.G.P.U. death sentence passed upon him for disobediance.

Stalin has asked: "Well, what are 400,000?"
There are many other cases of executions and of attempted exe-There are many other cases of executions and of attempted executions, including such noted cases as that of Gregory Sokolmkoff, first Soviet Ambassador to the Court of St. James; twice ordered back to Moscow, he refused to obey the second order, whereupon a trio of intended executioners went to seek him in London. His cleverness undoubtedly saved his life.

Paul Milukoff, head of the constituent assembly, disbanded by Lenin, has declared that no less than eight Soviet Ambassadors or agents have been either shot or imprisoned upon being recalled to Russia.

From a pamphlet written by George Agabekoff we take the following:

"One Chatzky was the G.P.U. first resident in America and lived there up to 1929. In 1929 he returned to Moscow and at the present time is in charge of the Anglo-American branch of the foreign department of the G.P.U.

"Inasmuch as there is not yet a Soviet legation in America, Chatzky went there as an Amtorg worker. His task in America was to familiarize himself with the attitude of the Government of the United States of America toward the Union of Soviet Republics and to endeavor to influence American public men and, if possible, members of the Government—that is, to have them assent to the official recognition of the Soviet Government.

"It is difficult for me to say whether Chatzky was successful or not in his endeavors, but on his arrival in Moscow he was much praised by those higher up."

We quote further:

We quote further:

"Reports of the English envoy to Washington as to the activities of the American Government were a permanent source of information to the G.P.U. It is necessary to say that at the service of the foreign department of the G.P.U. there were reports service of the foreign department of the G.P.U. there were reports of almost all the English representatives abroad (envoys accredited to foreign governments and commissioners to the countries under British protectorates). I was convinced of this many times. English diplomats, without their knowledge, rendered valuable service to the Soviet Government through their detailed reports to the Foreign Office * * * The reports of British diplomats to the Foreign Office * * *. The reports of British diplomats accumulated in 1929 occupied a whole big closet in the G.P.U." A special department exists in the Moscow headquarters of G.P.U. for the forging of passports and other credentials and documents. All witnesses agree that American passports are favored by this forgery machine.

It is a matter of official record, already cited, that the under-ground machine in America is never to be disbanded. The reason ground machine in America is never to be disbanded. The reason for this determination to carry on a subterranean organization, where identities are secret, becomes clearer as the role of G.P.U. is examined. G.P.U. likewise has its underground agents in America. These are unknown to the agents who come to do spy work in the guise of Amtorg agents. G.P.U. never lets its right hand know what its left is doing.

Amtorg rises to the heights of indignation and rejects any implication of secret operations.

In the records of the Fight committee there is this colloque:

In the records of the Fish committee there is this colloquy:
"The Charman. Do you know the business manager of the Amtorg, Mr. Ziavkin?

"Mr. Delgass, res; I mee film once of twice. It is a recent importation, you know; before him we had Mr. Grafpen, office manager of Amtorg.

"The Chareman. Do you know anything about Mr. Ziavkin and any positions he held in Russia, or where he came from?

"Mr. Delgass. He came from Rostov on Don. He was there and was picked up there by Mr. Bogdanov, who at that time was secretary of the Northern Caucasus Party Division. Whether he was a member of the Checka or not, I cannot tell you exactly."

But the evidence was forthcoming. Affidavits later were offered and are of record, sworn to by men who knew Ziavkin as the terror of the Don, local chief of G.P.U. men who observed his operations there and to whom he boasted of his powers. He was identified by affidavit of persons in New York who knew his position and record in Russia, two of these affiants being parents of an employee of Amtorg. The parents of this employee made their affidavit as to the record of Ziavkin at Quarantine, before they knew of their daughter's employment. Ziavkin was a high and unusually bloodthirsty G.P.U. executive in Russia, and it is beside the point that he may be said to have been removed from his G.P.U. connections before coming to Amtorg. G.P.U. does not take men into its inner councils and then remove them.

Grafpen, Ziavkin's predecessor, may or may not have been a men into its inner councils and then remove them.

Grafpen, Ziavkin's predecessor, may or may not have been a Soviet G.P.U. spy, but he was one of the leading Communist propagandists and long a prolific writer in International Press correspondence, one of the official Soviet outlets for propaganda in foreign lands. The probability is that Grafpen never was far from G.P.U. Lengthy quotations from Grafpen's authentic writings as an inner-circule Communist are in the records of the American Federation of Labor, of the American State Department, and of the Department of Justice. They have been available without recourse to any unusual effort at procurement.

Hendler, a former G.P.U. agent, now fugitive from Soviet authority, offered testimony to the effect that he had been asked to help establish secret channels between Amtorg and an arm of the Ber-

He asserts that he found the proper man, one Mikhail, who received his instructions and promptly proceeded to New York, landing illegally. He testifies further that he attended a meeting at which it was arranged to send to Amtorg three men who would pose as Amtorg employees in legitimate capacities but would report to G.P.U. capacities but would report to G.P.U. Other witnesses have identified three such men.

Amtorg has its agents in every branch of the Communist movement, not excluding the Young Communists and the Young Pioneers, and from these likewise G.P.U. recruits assistants who perform services of value. It is an established fact that the purpose of G.P.U. is to leave no portion of the vast Red machine uncovered, and it follows, almost as a matter of necessity, that G.P.U. agents are in America to spy on the work of the red leaders themselves, as well as to spy on and pervert, where possible, American institutions and operations.

We have at hand the program and the orders for Communist American institutions and operations.

We have at hand the program and the orders for Communist conduct in such outbreaks as the hunger march of last winter, the bonus march, the Illinois coal march, and other demonstrations in the growing chain of such operations.

We have just had under examination the Red operations in the Illinois coal fields. Before taking up further operations of that type, let us observe how the rules were laid down in advance. As we study these rules we shall see that these events point toward revolution when the Communists believe the time is ripe.

On July 15, 1931, the dictatorship at Moscow issued instructions to the Communist Party in the United States detailing the tactics of street fighting, the use of barricades, the methods of arming mobs, and the purposes to be held in view. A review of these instructions and of the progress thus far made in carrying them out was published in Pravda, in Moscow, on September 13, 1931, approximately 1 year prior to this time. The year thus elapsed has illuminated further the Red progress in precise pursuance of the orders so issued and thus appraised by the war lords in Moscow.

The Moscow instructions ordered the extension of Communist secret organization in the United States, a strong illegal party machinery, secret archives, secret printing presses, and the special training of groups of three and four, whose duty it should be to take the leadership in demonstrations, strikes, street fights, and all manner of demonstrations.

The theory of creating the habit of demonstration and of creat-all manner of demonstrations.

The theory of creating the habit of demonstration and of creating violence in demonstrations, gradually leading up to armed insurrection, was carried forward to a new point in these instructions. Armed fighting was specifically directed, but the Reds were instructed to procure their arms during the battles, not before.

The logical interpretation to put upon such instructions is this; If arms are not available before the battle, they can be and should be procured during the fight. If the Red troops cannot procure runs, then they should wage war with clubs, stones, and whatever.

guns, then they should wage war with clubs, stones, and whatever else may be available until guns can be procured.

It is made clear that these measures are preliminary, pending the hour of actual insurrection, at which time it may be assumed the Reds will have made provisions for effective arms and am-

The history of demonstrations since issuance of these instructions shows clearly that they have been carried out to the letter. Pertinent extracts from these instructions, issued in Moscow for the guidance of troops in America, follow here:

"The strengthening of the clever police machinery of the bourgeois governments in their fight against the Communist movement requires of this letter also requires of this latter also a more complex organization, one which is more flexible, and which works more precisely. This organization must inevitably be supported by a strong illegal party machinery. Today, the question of an illegal organization must occupy the center of attention of all the Communist parties of the capitalistic countries, without exception. The Communist parties should employ methods enabling them to reinforce, despite police repression, the revolutionary mobilization of the masses."

There are direct and specific orders for the use of every demonstration as a revolutionary movement and the sequence of events has shown that the Reds in America have followed orders. Gradually leading up to directions for the strategic infiltration of Communist secret groups into non-Communist organizations, leading up to directions for the committing of sabotage and for fighting in riots and explanations of the value of barricades, the instructions proceed as follows:

"To fulfill this task, it is necessary to create, in the first place, requires of this latter also a more complex organization, one which

"To fulfill this task, it is necessary to create, in the first place, "To fulfill this task, it is necessary to create, in the first place, immediately parallel to the legal machinery of the party which will continue to exist, an illegal machinery which will take over the functions of the legal machinery as the latter is destroyed by the police and will also fulfill the special functions arising out of the aggravation of the class war." Always the Reds call the conflict war, because they are realists—desperate, determined, realists. We go on to observe the orders set forth for the creation of the illegal machinery, which, it must be supposed, is by now perfected and in operation in operation.

"A. A place must be found for the archives of the party.

"B. Illegal printing works must be organized in which it will be possible to print the organs of the party in the case of the suppression and prohibition of the party newspapers and period-

"C. Machinery must be organized for the distribution of the illegal literature of the party.

"D. The way must be prepared for the passage to illegality of certain groups of militant directors of the party.

"E. Addresses and places must be arranged for secret correspondence and secret meetings of directing organs of the party and also for lodging illegal militants of the party enabling interviews with other militants working also legally.

"F. A minimum quantity of militants must be trained, possessing the elementary rules of the technique of illegal work (service of illegal printing works, coding, technique of liaison, written and spoken, technique of the preservation of the illegal part of the machinery of the party, etc.)."

But we have not done with this remarkable document. We read

But we have not done with this remarkable document. We read on, astonished only if we have had our eyes closed to the gathering storm and the evolution of the Communist attack:

"Similarly," we read, "measures should be taken so that:

"A. There shall be no document left in the legal premises of the party which may give cause for repressions against the party on the basis of police rules and regulations.

"B. All the militants of the party should know what are the documents which should remain secret and what information should not be given to the police.

"C. That some of the militants of the party should abstain from going to the establishments of the party which function legally. These organizations of the party should in general serve the legal possibilities of the contact and liaison of the party with the masses so that symmathizers and in general nonparty works. the legal possibilities of the contact and haison of the party with the masses, so that sympathizers, and in general, nonparty work-ers, having no contact with the organizations of the party reduced to illegality, may establish at these addresses such a liaison and transmit information of interest to the party and in the same way receive replies to questions which interest them. As institutions of the party thus existing openly one may cite the three following:

"1. The premises of the committee of the party where, at cer-"1. The premises of the committee of the party where, at certain hours, the representatives of the party are to be found who come to them for the affairs of the party. As regards these premises it should be a general rule that the militant leaders of the party should avoid being found there and the same rule should apply to meetings of the party committees and militants.

"2. Another legal means of the party no less important—quite the contrary, in fact—which should be largely made use of for open liaison between the party reduced to illegality and the masses is the legal journal of the party, supported by a large network of worker and peasant correspondents.

"3. Finally, a third organ is the Communist faction in Parliament and in the municipal councils."

These are remarkably explicit directions. They are not sugges-

These are remarkably explicit directions. They are not suggestions. They are orders. Moscow does not issue mere suggestions. Moscow demands obedience. Moscow will determine when the hour shall have struck, if ever it does, for the opening of general hostilities.

But the orders continue, leading onward to the plain, and unmistakable directions to destroy factory machinery and to block industrial operations in a manner as vital to every to block industrial operations in a manner as vital to every American workman as to every American factory manager and owner. After instructions for the naming of substitute editors to replace editors who may be arrested for allotting of funds to pay and to replace suppressed issues of party papers, we read on in these battle orders from Moscow:

"It is the duty of the party (and one of its chief permanent tasks of reorganization) to create its factions in the mass organizations directed by the social Fascists and by the frankly revolutionary leaders leaders.

"While fighting with all their strength for the possibility of carrying on their mass work openly, the Communist Parties should from now on keep one of the branches of their activities secret. This is the work in the undertakings, the work of the factory

The factory cells absolutely must organize themselves immedi-The factory cells absolutely must organize themselves immediately as illegal organizations and work with illegal methods; as, indeed, with all the work of the party, this reorganization of the factory cells must be accompanied by a maximum reinforcement of their mass work in the undertakings", by which the Reds mean factories factories.

The final paragraph of instructions which we have quoted is clearly, unmistakably, and indisputably the order of Moscow that American workmen, organized in secret units of three and four men to the unit, shall wreck and ruin American factory machinery wherever it will serve the purpose and wherever it can be done. The whole tenor of the complete order is that the Reds are to push forward in the development and enlargement of the war front, spreading violence into new channels, through a secret organization in comparison with which any other secret secret organization, in comparison with which any other secret organization America has ever known has been but play acting. In the factory they must organize illegally, and they must do illegal work. Illegal work can be no other than revolutionary work. It is backed by the implacable hatred of Moscow and the subjects of Stalin in America must obey. Failure to obey means excommunication at the least and execution at the most.

We have found that certain orders have been issued for the mobilization of a secret army composed of small units.

The Russian edition of the Communist International, official organ of the Third International, continues the directions in its issue of June 30, 1931, under the caption, "The Fight for the Street."

We here summarize those instructions, vital to every American, because they are today's directions to the Reds' forces in America. The present demonstrations should serve as training for civil war. The "tactique" of the organization of demonstrations should be used in opposition to all efforts to disrupt demonstrations. The first centers of assembly should be workers' quarters, labor halls, and assembly places least accessible to the police. Only occasionally are demonstrations in the centers of cities successful. But in such cases the Communist must act by surprise and form demonstration in a quasi-spontaneous manner out of elements which have, by prearrangement, arrived individually.

Demonstrations also should take place in the bourgeoisie and rich quarters.

Mark this well:

"It is especially recommended to organize marches of workers and starving poor in quarters inhabited by the rich.

"The police always seek to concentrate their forces; the tactics of the Communists should therefore consist in forcing the police to disperse their forces." It is recommended to "surprise the adversary" and "compel him to act in small groups."

"Initiative groups" are to take the leadership in demonstrations.

"Initiative groups" are to take the leadership in demonstrations and all other reds must follow the lead of such groups. The and all other reds must follow the lead of such groups. The strategy is, of course, to place closely knit groups here and there in crowds, and through the teamwork of the red secret groups assume the leadership of the entire gathering, leading it in direc-tions in which it would otherwise not go. These tactics we have already observed and discussed.

already observed and discussed.

The Communists confirm the judgment, saying, "Thus, the police will be incapable of stifling the demonstration at birth, since they will never be capable of encircling all the meeting places with superior forces." These tactics have been applied repeatedly.

"Special groups may be organized to act behind the police detachments and draw their attention away from the real center of the demonstration", the orders proceed, adding that "physical resistance" to the police is especially important. Such resistance has grown during the past 2 years.

"Nonresistance amounts to betrayal of the principles of the class war", the Reds are told, which is to say, failure to engage in such battles amounts to treason to communism, which means to Staling How means have been purpled by secret expenses. to Stalin. How many have been punished by secret agents of the G.P.U. cannot be known.

And then comes this arresting paragraph:

"It must be recalled that while, at the time of the armed insurrection, the watchword is 'the offensive at all costs', revolutionary demonstrations are only a 'training of war' and not real

The hunger marchers, the street fights, the demonstrations be-The hunger marchers, the street fights, the demonstrations before city halls, the riots, and the protest gatherings are all training operations for the war to come. Thus, the Reds have their cantonments, engaging in practice, not with dummies, but with American policemen and American civilian citizens. The aim in these preliminary demonstrations is to learn tactics, to grasp the technique of the kind of war that is expected to follow. We are told so in so many words. As, to quote:

"Consequently, in the course of these demonstrations, it is not a question of attacking at all costs, but of showing great flexibility and scientifically combining the offensive with defense and retreat."

It was shortly after these instructions were issued that J. Louis Engdahl, once a lithe and slender newspaper reporter, now grown heavy and bulky in the role of Communist leader, declared in a public speech:

"We workers say, hail to mutiny in the United States Navy. Hail to mutiny in the United States Army. Hail to mutiny in the United States air forces. When we call for mutiny, Wall Street knows it is of tremendous significance. * * * What we need is another Potemkin, to lead a revolution here. Since our armed forces are made up of workers, the Stars and Stripes, or, as they forces are made up of workers, the Stars and Stripes, or, as they call it, the Star-Spangled Banner, will in time give way to the red banner of the workers of America."

We return to the instructions from Moscow to discover the meaning of the "armed forces" to which Engdahl referred. He meant himself to be taken literally, for he spoke the truth, just as the Reds do when they discuss their war for the conquest of democracy among themselves. By their candor they deceive the most. Read now from Moscow's orders:

"As regards the arming of the demonstrators the following tactics are recommended: To publish in advance the watchword, 'armed demonstration', is to play at insurrection in an abused

'armed demonstration', is to play at insurrection in an abused fashion. It is out of the question that demonstrators demand to be armed in advance and refuse to march without arms. Those who demand arms of the Communist Party are simply incapable of arming themselves stones, arms snatched from the police, etc.).

How then are the Reds to procure arms, if not by issue in ad-ance? Observe the Red orders:

Now, experience has shown that demonstrators can arm themselves perfectly well in the course of the demonstrations (paving stones, arms snatched from the police, etc.).

"To forbid such a mode of arming is manifestly absurd. There is nothing against the spontaneous arming of the demonstrators, but only against their general arming as the result of a watchword launched in advance and in the course of a period which is not yet ripe for armed insurrection."

The Communist International, which is the tool of the Russian Communist Party and the superior of the American Communist Party, now not only sanctions, but orders violent operations in the United States—sabotage and wreckage in factories and armed clashes in the streets, in which the reds are to arm themselves as best they may but avoiding the charge of being prearmed. They best they may, but avoiding the charge of being prearmed. They are preserving the distinction of definition, so that until insurrection comes they may be classed by the authorities as mobs and not as rebels.

The instructions continue, pointing out the use of barricades. "They serve as a means of defense", it is shown, and "as a means of attack when it is possible to encircle the police by several barricades."

Detailed instructions are found for the operation of "special groups" or cells of the secret militants in demonstrations. These are to operate apart from each other, yet within communication range and in concert. "These groups as a whole should form the backbone of the demonstration. This arrests the break-up of the demonstration at the moment of police attacks and enables the organization of counter attacks. It is desirable to get the members of these special groups together in advance and distribute uniform instructions. It is forbidden to form 'organizing bureaus' for the demonstration."

reaus' for the demonstration."

Still further instructions have been issued by the executive committee of the Communist International, in which the American Communist Party is represented, ordering Communists "to intensify their drive in noncommunist" countries and ordering the cells of the secret organization to press forward in the campaign of "violence"

Moreover, these secret cells are ordered to block every effort at economic recovery from the depression, and additional special and secret instructions for this work are known definitely to have been issued.

This document has been printed in six languages, as are most of the important documents, and it orders, under date of August 15, 1931, preparation for simultaneous revolutionary outbreak in the leading capitalist countries of the world, which places the United States at the head of the list.

Propagandists are ordered to increase their subversive work Propagandists are ordered to increase their subversive work among army troops and in the navy and to organize cells of the most trusted and devoted reds "in the more important public services, railways, telegraph, telephone, electric power stations, water and gas works", which imposes a tremendous but patriotic and gladly accepted duty and responsibility upon the shoulders of America's loyal workers, and more particularly upon the shoulders of her loyal and patriotic trade-union membership, for among them is the menace best understood.

These cells are explicitly ordered "during the inevitable strikes", which may be legitimate protests upon the part of patriotic workers "to perform acts of sabotage in order to disorganize food supplies and other essentials of life." The organization of "combat forces with instructions for terrorizing" is particularly commanded.

particularly commanded.

"We are marching with Bolshevik tempo; we shall not stop", exults one of the leaders of bolshevism in Moscow, as these instructions are dispatched to the reds of the world, advising them at the same time that the "new world war" will be ordered, whether in 1931, 1932, or 1933, at an hour "most inconvenient" for the established nations of the world. And, with brutal cynicism, he concludes that the time will not make much difference to those who "will be destroyed."

It is not for the purpose of delving into history that we go back to 1922 to find the young millionaire, Charles Garland, possessed of the conviction that he must divest himself of the greater portion of his fortune and place it at the disposal of others by the creation of the American Fund for Public Service, since more institution with about $900,000, the young man ceased to be a figure of any great consequence.

While the initial capital was less than a million dollars, the fund has been able to give away outright more than a million dollars and to loan something in excess of another half million. The explanation for this is that the capital of the fund was mostly in the form of stock in the First National Bank of New North City and the constitute of the York City and the operations were for the most part confined to a period of rising bank-stock prices.

The importance of the Garland Fund at this time lies in the fact that institutions which it endowed and which it enabled to exist continue their operations on the foundation laid with the money thus provided.

In April 1923 the American Federation of Labor issued a state In April 1923 the American Federation of Labor issued a statement calling public attention to the operations of the Garland Fund, citing the character of the work and those agencies which it helped, and stating the methods which it had taken to discover these facts. Repeated reexamination of the situation has shown no reason to change anything said in that statement of 1923. The Workers' Education Bureau, an institution affiliated with the American Federation of Labor had, for the specific purpose of securing an authentic statement of the policies of the Garland Foundation, and with the full knowledge of the American Federation of Labor, applied for financial assistance. The application was filed on February 25, 1923, and an answer was received on March 26, 1923. The trustees of the Garland Foundation, over the signature of Mr. Roger Baldwin, stated:

"At last we came to the consideration of workers' education at our meeting on March 21. In view of the report we had from Stuart Chase, the board defined its policy in dealing with such applications in the following language:

The American Federation of Labor said: "It is thus made clear by Mr. Baldwin's letter that the American Fund for Public Service is interested in the promotion of 'education' only when a revolutionary purpose is to be served."

At the time of this action the trustees of the Garland Foundation were Roger Baldwin, Norman Thomas, Robert Morse Lovett, Harry F. Ward, Scott Hearing, William Z. Foster, Sidney Hillman, Mary E. McDowell, James Weldon Johnson, and Lewis Gannett. At that time, as during the intervening time, the board of trustees has been partly Communist and partly non-Communist, but always sufficiently communistic to throw the influence of the Garland wealth in that direction. Institutions which have benefited by the Garland fund are the Federated Press, whose Washington representative has been likewise the representative of the Soviet Telegraphic Agency; the pro-Communist Messenger; the pro-Communist Searchlight; and the pro-Communist Labor Age. Brookwood College has likewise been a beneficiary to the extent of, roughly, $200,000. The Fur Workers Union of New York City, which has been in constant turmoil because of Communist inroads, and which the American Federation of Labor has been compelled to completely reorganize in order to destroy Communist control, was given $45,000. The struggle with Communism on this union continues to this day, and there can be no doubt that a goodly portion of the trouble can be traced to the money given to the organization by the Garland Foundation when Communists in that union were in the ascendancy. Among the trustees during the latter years have been such well-known Communists as Robert

One of the most ambitious projects of the trustees was the establishment of the Vanguard Press in New York City, with a capital of $135,000. The Vanguard Press has been assisted materially in other ways. The Garland Foundation has caused many studies to be made, the results of which have been published by the Vanguard Press, along with a list of books literally filled with volumes helpful to the cause of revolution. The Studies of American Imperialism was one of the studies thus conducted, at a cost to the fund of $35,000 while a series of Studies on Russia cost ican Imperialism was one of the studies thus conducted, at a cost to the fund of $35,000, while a series of Studies on Russia cost $13,000. Such other institutions as the Committee on Militarism in Education, the League for Industrial Democracy, the American Civil Liberties Union, the International Labor Defense, the United Front Textile Committee, The Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, the Daily Worker, and the New Masses have been beneficiaries. Practically all of these are operating at this time, continuing the spread of Communist propaganda and conducting subversive activities in whichever row is assigned to them by the Communist high command.

by the Communist high command.

Lenin remains the great guide in the development of all Communist policies in the United States as well as elsewhere. In a book published after his death, Lenin wrote: "Whatever serves to advance class warfare is moral." He also stated: "We must know how to apply, at need, knavery, deceit, illegal methods, hiding truth by silence, in order to penetrate the very heart of the trade unions (in the United States) to remain there and to accomplish there the Communist task."

The record of Communist congrations in the United States is

The record of Communist operations in the United States is filled with examples of this duplicity; the practice of deceiving Americans for the benefit of the Communist purpose.

Americans for the benefit of the Communist purpose.

One minor but peculiarly reprehensible example was in the gathering of funds for alleged strike relief. For example, the International Labor Defense reported the raising of $89,793.20 for strikers at Gastonia. In its published reports, the I.L.D. reported payment of only $11,959.64 in actual relief, while of the remainder $10,033.87 was not accounted for in any manner.

J. Lewis Engdah, general secretary of the International Labor Defense, would not take oath to tell the truth when testifying before the Fish congressional investigating committee—"because I do not believe in bourgeois hypocrisy." Not a single Communist witness called by that committee took oath. Communist young people are taught to shield their fellows in the pursuit of Communist objectives. munist objectives Communists who have come over from Russia to the United States to work for the Amtorg Trading Corporation and other Soviet agencies have frequently renounced their Communist Party membership upon arrival here, resuming it upon departure. communist Party document, we find this: "Our illegal apparatus must be perfected down to the lowest units." Illegal work is deceptive work.

A favorite device in the campaign of deception is the misrepresentation of those opposed by them, particularly representatives of the American Federation of Labor. These are commonly designated as "fakers" and "tools of the capitalists." Chicago leaders have been called "police informers." Officials of the Chicago Federation of Labor have been termed "fake progressive leaders." The late Samuel Gompers and President Green have alike been termed "arch fakers." "Parasites" and "agents of the bosses" are terms that are commonly applied to the elected leaders of the United Mine Workers. The investigation by the Fish committee was held to be "a plot for armed invasion of Soviet Russia." American Federation of Labor officials are continuously denounced as "reformers", "fakers", and "bureaucrats", while the American Federation of Labor officials are continuously denounced as "reformers", "fakers", and "bureaucrats", while the American Federation of Labor policy is commonly called "class collaboration", so that it may sound hateful in the ears of wage earners. A case illustrating what might be termed "the very extreme of duplicity" took place about a year and a half ago at a point not 200 miles from Chicago. A manufacturer asked the civil authorities to provide protection against bombling depredations and apprehension of the bombers if possible. For some peculiar reason the case was given no attention by the newspapers. Some 24 persons were arrested and it developed that they were the very guards employed to protect the property against bombling. Confessions of four of them revealed that all of the 24 were Communists and that they were guilty of the bombing which they had been hired to prevent. Here, indeed, were armed forces on American soil.

For the past 2 years the Communist organization has conducted a continuous campaign, instructing its leaders throughout the United States i the placing of blame upon the regular trade-union leaders, this being one of their principal revolutionary tactics.

There is much evidence that for several years there has existed in the United States a criminal group under Communist control. Whether it holds membership or is in service under subsidy is not clear, nor does it matter. Evidence accumulated by the American Federation of Labor indicates that we have in our midst a skeleton terrorist force trained, instructed, and ready for expansion on short notice. The point which it is our desire to bring out is that the Communist Party in the United States, subordinate to the Third International at Moscow, is not a politisubordinate to the Third International at Moscow, is not a political party in the true sense of the word, is not crusading for the improvement of human conditions through lawful means, and that its leaders are not self-sacrificing priests of the new social ideal; but that the party and its leaders constitute an actual revolutionary war machine, refraining from the tactics of actual warfare, as we have known those tactics, only until they deem the moment to have arrived. Against all of this the American Federation of Labor has stood as the first line of defense and has borne the continuous brunt of battle

Federation of Labor has stood as the first line of defense and has borne the continuous brunt of battle.

The Soviet regime of Moscow regards the soil of all the world as its own territory, the present status of nationhood being temporary, pending dispossession of all except the proletariat.

"The Red army", the Soviets proclaim, "is the army of the international proletariat; the O.G.P.U. the police of the proletariat." And the Soviets further proclaim, "Nothing is Russian in the Soviet Union in the 'national' meaning of the word; everything is proletarian—that means international."

Further, the world is warned that, "Relying on the Soviet Union, the proletariat of each country can defend and extend its achievements even during the present reactionary period."

That the Soviets will defend and help revolutionists of other lands through the active participation of the Red army is repeatedly stated. To America the meaning of that is that, if and when there is an outbreak of sufficient revolutionary character in the United States to convince the Red chiefs of a chance of success, the Red army of the Soviets in Russia will be thrown into the conflict. into the conflict.

But in other ways the Soviet authority passes over and seeks to obliterate national boundaries. In actual fact the Soviet authority exercises ruling authority over all that part of American population which is Communist and compels obedience to its edicts, while Communists in America swear that their first allegiance is while Communists in America swear that their first allegiance is to the red flag, the symbol of Communism, and not to the American flag. The flags stand for the laws of the lands over which they float. They are symbols of nationality.

The Communist Party of Russia, or its subordinate creature, the third international, commonly and constantly issue mandatory orders which must be followed by the Communists of other nations. In England the Communists were told: "The Communists of the Communists were constantly in the Communication of the Communication munist Party of Great Britain is a section of the Communist International and is bound by its decisions." Whether Ramsay MacDonald recognizes Russia or the soviets or not, the soviets wield authority in Ramsay MacDonald's country, a new form of extraterritoriality which the world has so far but dimly come to comprehend.

When Foster and Lovestone, once bosom partners in communism, fell out over party policy, Moscow decided the issue for Foster and ordered Lovestone out. Not only that, but Moscow determined the status of all who followed Lovestone, made the law for their banishment, and enforced it.

The Communist International, an official Moscow organ, said of the Lovestone followers: "They falled to notice that the Communist International is a Leninist International, and those who manage it are Leninist managers." To Lovestone, Stalin himself "For the time being you are still formally in the majority, but tomorrow there will be no majority at all and you will be completely isolated if you try to struggle against the decisions of the presidium of the executive committee of the Communist International."

International."

That means that it was the intention of Stalin's Communist International to transform the minority of the party in the United States into the majority and to wipe out the old majority, as far as any standing in the Communist world was concerned. Pages of decisions and arguments were published at that time in the Communist newspapers of the United States upon orders from Moscow. The Moscow decision had all the effect of a Supreme Court decision.

Some 3 years ago about 200 American manufacturers and exporters were in session in New York City to determine by what means they could increase their trade with the Soviet regime in

About the same time the cables brought to America news of a supposedly secret circular containing instructions from Moscow to the Communists in the United States. These instructions were apparently so mild that no reason for secrecy was apparent. A series of demands was presented, including all of the customary demands of the avowed red propaganda. A concluding sentence demands of the avowed red propaganda. A concluding sentence said: "It is necessary to carry out the decision about a radical change in the work of the party and the lead of the united workers." Camouflage was clearly indicated. As a matter of fact, as it later came to be known, the actual instructions, as has been noted elsewhere in this memorandum, were for a growing militarization of the Communist propaganda list in the United States. With the so-called "secret instructions" in mind, let us observe the secret which took place in the Mahoning Valley about 2 years an event which took place in the Mahoning Valley about 2 years ago. In observing this event let us have in mind the recent and well-publicized operations of Communists in the steel and coal industries in opposition to codes inaugurated under the National Recovery Administration.

The activity in question centered in Warren, Ohio, ordinarily a suite and recovery administration.

quiet and peaceful community. There is in Warren a plant of the Republic Steel Corporation, a thoroughly union shop, with a col-lective agreement between the management and the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers. By infiltration and the establishment of Communist nuclei, Communists were mated Association of Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers. By infiltration and the establishment of Communist nuclei, Communists were able to perfect two distinct organizations within this plant and to create much dissatisfaction. These operations extended over a period of several months until finally in September 1932 the Communists managed through the circulation of an outright lie to precipitate a strike involving a number of the members of the regular trade union. The lie was to the effect that a wage cut had been ordered by the management in violation of its wage agreement. The strike call was so issued as to lead many men to leave their work under the impression that the genuine trade union had called the strike. Immediately, in pursuance of the customary Communist tactics, Communists from many other cities congregated in Warren. By actual observation it was estimated that more than half the pickets never worked in the mill and never saw it until they were ordered there by the Communist leaders. For several days the Communist newspapers continued to print the charge that the strike was against wage reduction.

The Amalgamated Association, the legitimate union, true to its agreement, fought the Communist invasion and finally routed it, keeping its agreement with the plant and eventually restoring operation.

What the Communists had accomplished was to inflict a heavy expense upon both the union and the plant and to mislead a considerable number of workers into purely propaganda mis-

adventure.

At the same time, Communists were working to destroy the union of longshoremen in New York to such purpose that the organization was compelled to put forth most vigorous efforts to retain its unity and its control of the situation. The fact is that the longshoremen union has never since been free from Communist invasion and that even today it is under the necessity of waging constant warfare for the protection of its membership against revolutionary operations.

In every case thus far, Communists have been in the minority.

In every case thus far, Communists have been in the minority in our unions, but the significance of this is never fully understood, unless it is remembered that Communist tactics always call for control by minorities through the use of violence, terrorism, and whatever methods may seem best designed to achieve

It would be too long a story to recount all of the struggles which our unions have had with Communist invaders, even if the facts were available. The truth is the facts are not all available and could not all be had without the expenditure of much effort and considerable time. The unions which have been cited are but a few of those which have been attacked and which have been compelled to defend themselves at heavy cost.

The United Textile Workers have been forced to expend much money, and some lives have been sacrificed.

The International Ladies Garment Workers have been compelled.

The International Ladies Garment Workers have been compelled to fight vigorously to maintain the organization in freedom from Communist influence.

Many of the building trades have been threatened in various communities, in some cases seriously. In this connection, it should be noted that the tactics of Communists and of gangsterism have been strangely identical, and it is fair to wonder whether the two are always dissociated.

The American Federation of Labor knows perfectly well, as does everyone else who has given the subject even casual study, that the Communist philosophy is completely revolutionary; that its ultimate goal can never be changed, and that its tactics are dictated at every moment by the expediency of that moment; consequently, a pledge given today does not indicate Communist performance tomorrow unless the expediency of tomorrow makes that performance then desirable. For that reason, the following radiocram which fleshed through the air in 1919 when Spartagism radiogram, which flashed through the air in 1919 when Spartacism was at its Red height in Germany, stands in the mind of labor as the text of orders held in waiting to be flashed to the United States or to any other country when Moscow deems the hour to have struck:

have struck:

"The present is the period of destruction and crushing of the capitalist system of the whole world.

"The aim of the proletariat must now be immediately to conquer power. To conquer power means to destroy the governmental apparatus of the bourgeoisie and to organize a new proletariat governmental apparatus. This new apparatus must express the dictatorship of the proletariat.

"The dictatorship of the proletariat must be the occasion for the immediate expropriation of capital and the elimination of the private right of owning the means of production through making them common property.

"In order to protect the socialist revolution against external and internal enemies and to assist the fighting proletarians of other countries it becomes necessary to disarm entirely the bourgeoisie and its agents and to arm the proletariat."

It cannot be otherwise than true today, as it has been in all of

It cannot be otherwise than true today, as it has been in all of the past, that "apparent compromises with 'bourgeois' govern-ments or countries have proved temporary and tactical." It is this proven truth which influences labor to be forever sceptical and proven truth which influences labor to be forever sceptical and forever on guard where communism and its promises are concerned. Labor feels deeply that the aims of communism must remain unchanged, and it knows that every promise communism makes is in some sense a victory for communism. The American trade-union movement has stood steadfastly against communism and all of its manifestations and operations. It has been compelled to wage unrelenting warfare to defeat the propaganda of communism within its own ranks. That warfare continues even to the present hour and it is in many respects more bitter today than at any time since the constituent assembly was overthrown in Russia by Lenin and Trotsky.

That funds have come from Russia for the financing of propaganda in the United States we can have no doubt. It perhap would require the best operations of the United States Secret Serv ice, nonexistent, to discover all of the methods used and to trace down all of the money that has been transmitted.

There is knowledge of one method used during the life of Lenin There is knowledge of one method used during the life of Lenin and under his direction. He cabled to his American representative, saying that he must at once raise $2,000,000 to pay for coal purchased from a Chicago firm. (Coal no longer is so purchased.) He asked whether the American agent could sell 5,000,000 gold rubles in the United States at 51.44 cents. One cargo of coal was approaching Vardoe, another had put to sea from New York for Murmansk, the third was due to sail for Archangel. Lenin advised his agent in New York that at the price he named the rubles should bring $2,225,000, and he directed the American agent to retain $225,000 for his own uses in the United States. Inasmuch as the agent was high in authority in the direction of Soviet propaganda, it is not to be assumed that the money was used for purely personal purposes. purely personal purposes.

The entire history of the Communist Party in the United States has been a history of opportunistic operations. It has been absolutely in accord with the philosophy of the Communist International. When it has served the purposes of international communism to be quiescent it has been thus, and when it has served munism to be quiescent it has been thus, and when it has served the same purpose to be militant and aggressive it has been thus. Repeatedly the Communist International has proclaimed the priority of the United States in its ghastly affections.

The Communist Party in the United States was organized in Chicago in September 1919. It was at that time a simple propaganda organization. While the Workers Party of today is a machine for the carrying on of active war against democracy, the first Communist Party was a party for the spreading of the belief in communism. While the propaganda was for a revolution by force, it was, to illustrate, a propaganda for the creation of the army, while the present Workers Party is the army which exists for the purpose of creating war.

The only hope of its legality was, particularly at the outset, deprived by war-time laws. It functioned as an underground organization. Most Americans now living know nothing about the operation of the secret revolutionary political party, except those who were and now may be in the Communists' underground organization. There are many evidences that the earlier underground who were and now may be in the Communists' underground organization. There are many evidences that the earlier underground Communist Party was thoroughly schooled in secret operations and for a considerable period of time published an underground newspaper, the origin of which no Government agency ever ran down. It was said of this newspaper that it never was printed twice in the same place. Not only was the Government, which then had a secret service empowered to deal with such things, unable to discover where or how this underground newspaper was published, but it was never able to find out how it was distributed, though it did possess itself of a few copies. One copy of one issue was in the possession of the American Federation of Labor at the time Senator Borah held his hearing on Communist activities.

For 2 years the underground party was the sole agency of the authorized Communist movement in the United States. In December 1929 the Workers' Party was organized as an open political cember 1929 the Workers' Party was organized as an open political party of legal standing and as a branch of the Communist International. In 1925 the name was officially changed from Workers' Party of America to Workers' Party (Communist) of America. The repeal of the war-time laws in 1924 made its open existence possible. Since 1925 the Department of Justice has had no authority nor personnel nor funds with which to conduct investigation and maintain contact with revolutionary propaganda. So far as can be learned, the organization of the legal party had no bearing on the existence of the undergrand organization which probably the existence of the underground organization, which probably continues in existence today. It was at the time specifically ordered that the underground organization be neither disorganized nor abandoned. It was ordered that it be maintained, and while it is apparently engaged in no active operations at this time it undoubtedly is ready for action at any moment. What might be the task of such an underground organization and what might be the reason for its maintenance can safely be left to conjecture. Obviously it could not be a purpose sanctioned by the laws of the Nation.

The existence of this illegal party has been all but forgotten by the public generally. However, if we are to take the records of the Communists themselves it must be not only still in existence but must be, in case of any confliction of view, the real master in the making of policies and in the enforcing of discipline.

The Communist Party, known today as the "Workers' Party", is organized into 20 districts, each with an important industry, group of industries, or group of natural resources as its center. There is nothing accidental about this form of organization by districts and industries. Establishment of the Workers' Party as a legal organization marked the beginning of a program to launch a drove of subsidiary and collateral Communist organizations in the United States. Many of these will be named elsewhere. They ramify into almost every phase of social activity, industrial activity, and community life. In the making of policy, the Workers' Party, which in turn is subordinate to the Communist International, is the guiding and dominant force.

Propaganda is continuously conducted through all of the usual

Propaganda is continuously conducted through all of the usual propaganda methods, but with the printed word occupying a leading place. There are about 12 daily Communist newspapers in the United States, of which one, the Daily Worker, is in English. The largest circulation is that of the Morning Freiheit, Jewish, with a circulation of 64,000 or more. Communist newspapers are estimated to have a circulation of about 350,000 in the United States, and the estimate is no doubt conservative.

and the estimate is no doubt conservative.

Whether the Communist International actually subsidizes propaganda in the United States by the transfer of cash at this time cannot be definitely proven, except and unless by governmental sources possessed of sufficient authority. Much credible evidence of such support has been obtained, and there is every reason to believe that this support has been continuous from the period when a decree was published by the Soviet regime appropriating 2,000,000 rubles for propaganda in the United States 2 months after the overthrow of the Kerensky government.

For the sake of the record and to indicate the point of view, which, of course, has not changed, that decree here follows:

"An ordinance assigning 2,000,000 rubles for the needs of the revolutionary internationalist movement.

The official record shows publication of this ordinance or decree, which it was, in no. 31, Gazette of the Temporary Workers and Peasants' Government, December 13, 1917.

It is only a year since Joseph Stalin, addressing the American commission and the executive committee of the third international, said: "The Third International has enabled the Communist Party of America to reach a stage where it can actively prepare the masses for a future revolution."

To be sure Moscow dreams in excess of performance, but Moscow does not dream or speculate as to the direction in which it cow does not dream or speculate as to the direction in which it plans performance when performance becomes possible. Whatever may have been the temporary meanderings necessitated by circumstances and expediency there has been from the beginning a constancy of direction, of program and of effort toward the Bolshevik aim of a Communist world.

Before his exile, and while he was still one of the three most powerful figures in Moscow. Troteki said that the proletarian powerful figures in Moscow, Trotski said that the proletarian revolution will always form a basis of Soviet foreign policy, and thus far he has been right about it.

There are times when the Communists say one thing and mean another, for that is a fundamental of them. When they talk about world revolution, however, they are talking about the one thing in which invariably they say what they mean.

SOVIET FOREIGN POLICY STATED

On September 11, 1933, the New York Times published excerpts On September 11, 1933, the New York Times published excerpts from a pamphlet issued in Russia by the executive committee of the Russian Communist Party, of which Stalin, dictator of Russia, is head, in which pamphlet, The Basis of Soviet International Policy, is set forth. It reads, in part:

"A fundamental condition of trade is for us the recognition by residue countries of the state monopoly of Soviet foreign trade.

foreign countries of the state monopoly of Soviet foreign trade.

* * Recognition of the monopoly of foreign trade in the U.S.S.R. is a most important instrument in our relations with the

"In consequence of our agreements, capitalist countries not only give extraterritorial privileges to our trade delegations, but allow our various trading organs to establish branches in foreign centers, such as the network created by the Soviet oil industry. Moreover, the agreements give the U.S.S.R. most-favored-nation

"The task of Soviet foreign policy is to exploit the liberal and pacifist tendency of certain groups of the bourgeoisie and of industrial circles interested in trade with the U.S.S.R., thus prolonging the breathing space and insuring an inflow of foreign credits, machinery, and materials for the industrialization of the U.S.S.R. For this purpose the U.S.S.R. energetically confronts the aggressive military plans of its enemies with proposals for the present to let both systems live peaceably together.

"This is only a temporary measure, required by the anomalies of both systems. Soviet proposals for coexistence of these systems have already spread confusion among imperialists. * * *

"We must politically exploit economic discords among our enemies. Discord between Great Britain and France was one of the reasons why France did not break with the U.S.S.R. in 1927, when Great Britain did. Soviet foreign policy remains based on revolutionary prospects abroad, and the Soviet government therefore maintains constant contact with the foreign proletariat."

In order to clarify certain developments in New York City, it may be permissible to recall that on April 29, 1930, the fast modmotorship Kalenin docked at Montevideo from Soviet bearing a cargo of hard coal, cement, pine lumber, evergreen oak, chemical products, and potato starch. In due course of time the Kalenin cleared for home, carrying hides, livestock, and wool from Uruguay and Argentina.

Of small concern to Americans, perhaps, that one motorship which sailed away from her home ports 31/2 years ago; of small concern except for the fact that this voyage was one of a chain

Soviet operations in South America have expanded since that time, and South America has taken its place in the Soviet scheme of things as political district no. 9. In order to further its operations a trading institution called Yuzhamtorg was set up in Montevideo as the Uruguayan counterpart of Amtorg in New York

At that time, M. Theunis, presiding officer of the year-old League of Nations Economic Conference, was saying: "Either Bolshevism will spread over the entire world or else it will collapse. There is no middle course. Let us beware! Bolshevism is not a system reserved for the Russian people alone."

Karl Radek, leading Soviet journalist, was predicting that within 10 years the Soviet Union would embrace all of Asia and most of

The Literary Digest, in a remarkable letter to its readers, was proclaiming that "the hordes of Communist Russia are pressing toward their objective with a tread that shakes the world."

Shortly Yuzhamtorg was removed to a scene of larger operation in the Argentine, and in due course of time Argentine police raided the institution. Four trucks backed up to the doors of Yuzhamtorg in Avenida Mayo in Buenos Aires, departing thereafter loaded with records and 160 prisoners.

Among the prisoners was one Boris Kraevsky, founder and chief of Yuzhamtorg. Kraevsky formerly was the assistant chief of the Soviet commissary department of the Red army in Siberia. If the Soviet commissary department of the Red army in Siberia. If the once was discharged from the Red army for irregularities, that may have been for Soviet reasons. In any event, here he was in a post of high command, denoting no loss of confidence on the part of Moscow.

This interests America, for Kraevsky has played his game in this country. From 1924 to 1925 this man was vice president of Amtorg in New York. He left New York to open Yuzhamtorg and to become its head. In 1926 he returned to Amtorg in New York. When a little later Uruguay, tempted by trade, recognized the Soviets, Kraevsky returned to South America as Red ambassador and trade agent to Uruguay.

In 1930 he was in Brazil, and was arrested by the Brazilian Government and ordered deported as a propagandist and plotter. Enroute to Europe Kraevsky attempted to debark on Argentine soil, but the attempt was frustrated. In 1931 he regained admission to the United States, presumably through regular channels and upon recommendation of the law firm of Simpson, Thatcher & Bartlett, again becoming vice president of Amtorg. In due time the United States Labor Department suggested to

In due time the United States Labor Department suggested to Mr. Kraevsky that he leave the country for this country's good. This he did, again becoming head of Yuzhamtorg in the Argentine, where he was picked up in the raid.

Yuzhamtorg agents were busily engaged in propaganda in Brazil, Uruguay, Chile, and Bolivia. Many Kraevsky agents were recognized by Rio de Janeiro police after the revolution, and some of them were shot.

But back to the raid. In the safe in Yuzhamtorg offices more than a million dollars in money was found. Securities were found. And the police found receipts for money paid to agitators, one of them showing a payment of $212,000!

Moreover, the documents showed what had long been surmised, which was that the Soviets had bought on long-term credits in which was that the Soviets had bought on long-term credits in some South American countries commodities which they sold for cash in other South American countries. Not only were these documents found, but almost immediately the government of the country seized two ships consigned to Yuzhamtorg containing $25,000 worth of copper shipped from Chile.

These are facts customarily overlooked by those who seek to promote Soviet interests. They illustrate the fact that always what cannot be done by direct methods is attempted by indirection, with an utter disregard of that morality which is expected to mark the conduct and the relations of civilized nations.

The Red propagandist does not always come riding in blood and nunder. He does not always come plowing through obvious intrigue.

In the motion-picture field, for example, Soviet propaganda operates under the guise of legitimate entertainment. It is not suggested here that a complete report on Communist operations in the motion-picture and theatrical fields is possible. In the brief time available only a review of some of the better known facts can be presented, and these are as of some months ago.

Motion-picture operations in the United States are conducted through Soviet companies organized in this country but under the direction of the State Motion Picture Trust of Moscow. No motion pictures are made in Russia, exported from or imported into Russia except through the State Motion Picture Trust. The first great propaganda picture to be sent to the United States from Communists was The Cruiser Potemkin. The showing of this picture was more or less an experimental venture, but it paved the way for a continuous unreeling of Red-tinged films. For the distribution of Soviet and pro-Soviet pictures the American Proletkino was launched along with two small ventures, known as the "Workers' Film and Photo League of America", operated by the Workers' International Relief. The other venture was operated by the International Labor Defense. Both are American branches of Moscow international organizations.

Communist and pro-Communist pictures have been freely advertised in Communist publications and the following is a list of some of the pictures in those two categories which have been

In addition to acclaiming the out-and-out Communist pictures of which are produced by Communists and some of which are produced by American companies, the Communists lend their support to every picture that attacks American conditions. Included in this category are such pictures as An American Tragedy, the Theodore Dreiser film of morbidity and lysistrata.

Establishment of theaters maintained for the showing of Comby motion pictures. Filmarte Theater in Hollywood was the first of these, to be followed by Artef Theater in New York, announced at its opening as the first "permanent" workers' theater in the United States.

Serge Eisenstein, who came to the theaters of the United States from Russia touted as a master producer of pictures, had said candidly that the Soviets produce no pictures that do not carry a propaganda message. Eisenstein produced Ten Days That Shook the World, which, like most of the films named in the list just quoted, was produced in Russia under Sovkino, the Soviet motion-picture trust.

Ten Days That Shook the World was written by John Reed, one of the first Americans to go to Russia as a Communist zealot. The John Reed Club of Communists and procommunists in New York is named for him.

Tom Petty, Chicago Tribune motion-picture critic, has said: "Nobody seems to have paid the slightest attention to Soviet movies. Nevertheless, they spread more Soviet propaganda in a day than all the cracker-box Bolsheviks and Red parades germinate in a year.'

Joseph Stalin has said: "I think, comrades, that the Communist Party of America is one of the few Communist parties in the world upon which history has placed tasks of decisive importance from the point of view of the international revolutionary movement. I think the moment is not far off when a revolutionary crisis will be unleashed in America; when that revolutionary crisis comes in the United States it will mark the beginning of the end of the world capitalism."

For achievement of its ultimate objective, Communist reliance, in the United States as everywhere, is on physical force. Through a continuous stream of propaganda it seeks to weaken both the Army and Navy, although it concentrates its principal attack on the industrial field. The reason for this is obvious.

Demonstration in the industrial field intended to be cumula-

Demonstration in the industrial field intended to be cumulative, as has been shown, leads in the minds of the Communist generals to the final grand mass political strike.

Earl Browder, one of the leading Communists in the United States, gives the following authoritative explanation:

"Reviewing the great Russian revolution on its twelfth anniversary, we obtain a deepened understanding of the tremendous role of the political mass strike as a means of the mobilization of the working class and its preparation for assuming state power. Lenin described this role, saying:

"This means is the revolutionary strike the tenesious strike."

"This means—is the revolutionary strike, the tenacious strike which springs from one place to another, from the one end of the country to the other, the repeated strike—the strike which lifts the backward elements to a new life of struggle for an economic improvement—the strike which brands and stigmatizes every striking act of the rule of violence, of arbitrariness and of crime of czarism-the demonstration strike, which hoists the Red flag in the streets of the capital, which carries revolutionary speeches and revolutionary slogans into the crowd, into the mass of people!

"Is such a strike weapon, as described by Lenin, something foreign to American workers, something strange to our own ex-foreign to American workers, something strange to our own experience? By no means! Exactly such movements have spontaneously developed from the mass movements of the American proletariat. What Lenin adds, for America, is only the element of consciousness, of system, of organization, of direction by a revolutionary party, the Bolsheviks. The political mass strike itself has been, and will be, produced by the elemental forces of the American working class. What we must add to it to bring it to full development is the element of conscious direction and understanding." understanding."

Here is a revelation of the Communist purpose behind the continuous business of demonstrations, parades, protests, mass meetings, and outbursts of every nature. It is to create a habit, a willingness, a technique, a continuity, and a state of mind. Unquestionably these continuous demonstrations are the Communist equipment of military training camps equivalent of military training camps.

Events that have served this purpose over a long period include the Sacco-Vanzetti case, the Mooney case, and various other cases of alleged murder, not to mention unemployment, which has proof alleged murder, not to mention unemployment, which has produced its numerous hunger marches.

Following the ousting of the bonus army from Washington, the Communist Party and the International Labor Defense, both of them American subsidiaries of Moscow, ordered all of their branches to organize demonstrations throughout the country.

"This bloody attack on the starving veterans", said Carl Hacker, national secretary of the International Labor Defense, "is part of the intensive drive toward war and attack on the Soviet Union. Telegrams have been sent to all branches of the International Labor Defense, calling for immediate protest demonstrations before Federal buildings, post offices, etc., in every town and city in the United States. These demonstrations will call upon the working class to join in the Nation-wide demonstration August 1 planned against preparation for war and attack on the Soviet Union."

That there was no August 1 Nation-wide demonstration did not

That there was no August 1 Nation-wide demonstration did not That there was no August 1 Nation-wide demonstration did not matter to Hacker or any other Communist generalissimo. The thing was, at the moment, to inflame men and arouse passions in immediate demonstrations. The Communist Party joined in the denunciations and also called for demonstrations and for preparation for the great demonstration of August 1, by which time something else evidently had replaced the issue in Communist head-quarters; for if it was held it missed fire as a national event. But all this business of demonstration falls in line with what Stalin, the archdictator, calls preparing the masses in America.

But all this business of demonstration falls in line with what Stalin, the archdictator, calls preparing the masses in America "for a future revolution." It has no other purpose.

Demonstrations are held upon any pretext and often upon purely manufactured pretext; all of them are under the inspiration of such declarations as this from Rykov, one of the Red leaders of Moscow, who certainly speaks by line and verse:

"Do not forget our task is to internationalize communism.

Our Red army is the advance guard of the Komintern (Communist International), and when the time comes, at a sign from the International), and when the time comes, at a sign from the latter, it will begin its great victorious march, which will make an latter, it will begin its great victorious march, which will make an epoch in history. Never lose sight of this end! We shall help with all our force the brilliant and final victory of communism in the world. The Red army—immense, disciplined, and imbued with the spirit of Lenin—will be its principal architect."

If it seem strange that the mob on the village corner, the throng milling through Wall Street, the parade down La Salle Street, or the picket line before the White House has its place in a plan laid so far ahead, let it be remembered that there are men who are making of world revolution a business as systematic as ever Napoleon made of his campaigns, as carefully devised as any business every laid to penetrate a foreign field—and with the most diabolical purpose and program yet devised for man's conquest over man. over man.

For the last 2 years the Communist organizing program has called for the formation of a movement along semimilitary lines as best suited to meet what had conceived to be possible needs of the future.

Communism has its vocabulary, constantly changing, much like our own. Into this vocabulary there came, with the inception of this new program, the word "cadre." Of course, the word means the core of a military organization, a skeleton group around which the core of a military organization, a skeleton group around which a regiment may be built, and it has no other meaning.

The development of new cadres was ordered in resolutions for the seventh national convention of the Communist Party in America in 1930 following the orders of Moscow explicitly. The resolutions were prepared under the direction of Moscow for application in the United States of the philosophy and the latest tactics devised in the Communist capital.

In this document the Communists examined deeply into the american economic structure, taking advantage of every weakness and pointing out every opportunity for destructive criticism.

The party criticized itself also because its leaders knew the route they were expected to take. For example, they ordered "No more labor-party talk", because it was believed the movement had passed that stage. Organization "on the basis of shops" was ordered, so that the Communist organization might be in position to take command in industrial dependent on the passed that stage.

to take command in industrial demonstrations.

A party overhauling was ordered to weed out the right wing.
Only militants were to remain. Here follows a group of specific organizing and disciplinary instructions contained in these resolutions bearing the seal of Moscow and adopted for action in the

"A. Every single member of the party must be assigned specific work in the party and in proletarian mass organizations. The nucleus executives shall direct and check up the work of every party member.

"B. The functioning of every committee, committee member, and party member must be checked up continually.

"C. Ruthless political criticism of all errors and deviations must provide the base for serious and continuous self-correction.

"D. Committees and functionaries who persist in errors and deviations must be removed from the leading cadres as unfit for

"E. The practice of burdening active comrades with a multiplicity of functions must be discontinued.

"F. The shortage of forces thus created must be repaired by a systematic drawing of new proletarian elements into the leading systematic drawing of new proletarian elements into the leading cadres of the party.

"G. All leading party committees are obligated to be most concrete in their plans and instructions for work to the lower units. Unclearness, ambiguity, and generalization lead to misunderstanding and to delays in the carrying out of instructions. The need of the hour is clarity of instructions and promptness of execution."

Destruction of the American Federation of Labor unions was given much attention in the resolutions and has been an uppermost part of Red hostilities against all things American since their adoption as the Red plan of attack. There is this further paragraph:

paragraph

"A definite turn in all plans of work in the revolutionary unions and in the Trade Union Unity League must be urged and carried through by the Communists. Special efforts must be made to draw Negro workers into the leadership of the revolutionary unions. Decided efforts must be made to increase manifold the activities of the Communist factions in the reactionary trade unions. It is necessary that the party pass very definitely over from the period of talk to the stage of action in the accomplishment of its tasks in the organization of the unorganized masses. The progress of the party on the read to a mass party of revolutionary action must be measured by the growth of the organization and the influence of the Trade Union Unity League." A Negro membership amounting to 20 percent of the total was then claimed.

"The whole party declaration bristles with 'revolution', with stern orders for the forming of cadres—skeleton groups around which regiments may be formed—yielding to discipline, action, action, toward revolution.

"The convention called for leaders for the regiments of the action, action, toward revolution.

"The convention called for leaders for the regiments of the line. The recent session of the Red International of Labor Unions laid the greatest stress upon this point" and "the mass struggles we are now carrying on are producing many new working-class fighters. These must be drawn into leadership."

And, further: "The line (policy) of the Red International of Labor Unions must be applied in practice, all unclarity eliminated, and resistance to it sharply combated. There must be more attention given to the question of strike strategy." And more attention has been given. A policy of fomenting a steady stream of strikes against the constituted leadership of the American Federation of Labor has ensued, not to win advantages for the workers but to encompass the destruction of the legitimate unions. The coal fields have witnessed many of these revolutionary strikes against true trade-unionism. To quote: "Special concentration must be made on the mining, steel, machinery, and meat-packing industries."

And, again, in these resolutions the persistent pounding for organization in the shop, where the Reds see their war basis: "Shop nuclei must be built and made to function in the shops."

And, also, the order for the wolves to burrow underground in And, also, the order for the wolves to burrow underground in the secret caves of the stealthy and the treacherous and the treasonable. To quote: "The illegal apparatus of the party must be immediately completed." And, as a logical consequence, and in sequence: "Our perspective must be for the defeat of the American Federation of Labor * *."

A personal friend, a man of careful judgment and keen powers of observation, returned from St. Petersburg, Fla., in July and told this story:

"I had a small account in a St. Petersburg bank. Shortly after July 4 I began to get telephone calls about the bank. I would be summoned to the telephone and I would be advised to beware of that bank. I would be asked if I didn't know the bank was shaky. These calls were repeated for some days, Always the person calling would utter his warning and then hang up the telephone. He never gave a name or waited for a reply. I know this was the work of Communists."

The story brought by this informant fits into the mass of evidence now accumulated to show that for months Communists have waged a campaign to wreck banks, as one striking means of weakening democracy.

The Nation is familiar with the fact that secret-service agents The Nation is familiar with the fact that secret-service agents discovered the Red plot against banks in Pontiac, Mich. The Nation does not know so well that the bank-wrecking campaign began months earlier and continues to this day. It is first-page, double-column news in the Dally Worker of September 6 that "83 banks suspend in August." The significance of this is in the fact that the Red bank-wrecking crew was officially advised to "refer to Dally Worker for bank failures."

The evidence discovered in the Michigan raid disclosed that Reds had been active in an organized campaign to ruin banks in Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, and that in the territory covered by this section of the Red bank-wrecking crew there were 32 bank failures within a few weeks.

First traces of the bank-wrecking plan of communism were discovered in 1930, when Novy Mir, a Russian language weekly Communist newspaper, put forward the proposal. Novy Mir started the drive on banks, following which there were runs on New York banks. The Daily Worker found the project good and took it up. It has been up since that time, and banks have been going down. going down.

The purpose of the campaign is clear. The Communist newspapers themselves make it so, if there were room for doubt. To cause banks to fail weakens the American industrial system and increases the disgust and unrest of Americans already the victims of unemployment. Moreover, bank failures retard recovery. Bolshevik propaganda has a continuous chain of "capitalist failures" to point out as reasons for turning to communism.

But the insinuations published in the Communist newspapers were only the froth on this sea of trouble. The real work was done by a secret corps, working under secret orders.

The whispers and the telephone calls were the chief means of spreading fear of banks. That such attacks on banks are criminal has not deterred the Reds, but probably has increased the effectiveness of their operations.

In the Detroit case Communist circulars were found clearly establishing the source of the campaign. "Communist Party of U.S.A., district 7", was the caption of the circular. "Grand Rapids section" appeared in smaller type. "Read the Daily Worker, the official party paper", said the circular.

And then we read:

"1. Refer to Daily Worker for bank failures. Pound these failures into the minds of your audiences and without saying it in so many words suggest that it is only a matter of time (damn short) when Grand Rapids banks will go the way of all others that are now failing.

"2. Concentrate rumors upon one banking institution. When it fails it will be an easy matter to organize small depositors. Get out leaflets on mimeograph calling out small depositors to a public meeting."

In 1931 a Communist meeting was held in the National Press Building in Washington, D.C. Reports published by Communist newspapers said that "crashes of banks" were among the subjects discussed. Bulletins issued at about the same time by a research organization under Communist influence or control declared that between December 1 and 6, 1931, 38 meetings were held by Communists in district no. 2, and that in these 38 meetings "the insecure condition of the banks was talked over and the comrades were advised to warn their friends of what is coming." Com-munist Brodsky shortly thereafter went to Philadelphia and soon after banks began to go to the wall.

Simultaneously with bank runs in New York and Gary, there were runs on Philadelphia banks in December 1931. A Philadelphia bank offered a reward of $10,000 for information leading to the arrest of the instigator of that particular run, and the State secretary of banking announced officially that "organized propagandists in the city have picked out certain banks which they are seeking to destroy."

In New York City, following Communist orders, a leading Communist was able to form a "committee of workers' deposits" after failure of a bank in Manhattan having four or five Brooklyn after failure of a bank in Manhattan having four or five Brooklyn branches, and he was able even to get a Brooklyn paper to print an article by him daily, in all of which he sought to keep the bank-failure situation alive, undoubtedly as part of a plan to extend the menace to other banks. Mass meetings were held in which depositors were advised to transfer their money to Russia. On April 5, 1931, the Newark (N.J.) Sunday Call published an article entitled "Red Circulars Follow Closing of Two Banks—Pamphlets, Calling Bankers Thieves, Scattered in Linden—Urge Confiscation."

Confiscation.

On May 11, 1931, banks were threatened in a circular received by one Chicago bank. This circular was headed "48-Hour Ulti-matum to Chicago Banks."

In the Michigan arrests letters were taken by the police in which it was shown that Agitprop, the agitation propaganda bureau of the Communist Party, was a directing force in the campaign against banks. Letters of those conducting the campaign in Michigan to their superiors gave evidence of a campaign on a Nation-wide scale. The letters were signed "Salzman", thought to be George Rowland, reported by the police to have been active in Pennsylvania while banks were falling there, and also in Chicago while runs were in progress there. These reports were addressed "H. G.", and it is a decidedly interesting fact that the letters "H. G." are the initials of Harry Gannes, who is the head of the agitation and propaganda bureau of the Communist Party and, of course, one of William Z. Foster's important lieutenants. He has written much about finance and banking in the Communist press. He has also been temporary editor of the Daily Worker. In the Michigan arrests letters were taken by the police in Worker

A Nation-wide opposition labor conference against industrial recovery bill and the American Federation of Labor was held in Cleveland, Ohio, August 26-27, by the Communist Party, the Conference on Progressive Labor Action, and other Communist and pro-Communist bodies to create a Nation-wide struggle against the Roosevelt-Wall Street program.

against the Roosevelt-Wall Street program.

The call was signed by over 100 of the Nation's ranking Bolsheviks under direction of Moscow authorities. Included in these were Earl Browder, reported to be the ranking official of the United States branch of the Moscow revolutionary movement, of which Stalin, Dictator of Russia, is head; William Z Foster, Ben Gold, Anna Burlak, Frank Borich, L. F. Budenz, Clarence Hathaway, Arnold Johnson. Others signing the call included Karl Lochner, A. J. Muste, James Ford, and Tom Rippett, of the Progressive Miners.

DISRUPTING LABOR

The National Marine Workers Industrial Union, a branch of the The National Marine Workers Industrial Union, a branch of the Moscow-controlled Trade Union Unity League, held its second annual convention in New York City recently. The hall was jammed to the doors with marine workers, including 98 delegates representing seamen, longshoremen, and harbor workers from New York, San Francisco, Seattle, Baltimore, New Orleans, Savannah, Norfolk, and Philadelphia. Ship delegates—that is, Red agents doing sea duty—were also represented by a delegation. Harry Hines, of San Francisco, secretary of the red union, presided, while Jackson, a Negro longshoreman from Savannah, took an important part in the proceedings.

Jackson reported to the convention that the revolutionary union had attained a membership of over 300 in Savannah alone. Greetings were received and read from the Soviet marine workers, from nine seamen arrested and held at Ellis Island, and from ship dele nine seamen arrested and held at Ellis Island, and from ship delegates abroad, as well as from the International of Seamen and Harbor Workers. Earl Browder, national secretary of the Communist Party of the United States; Jack Stachel, secretary of the Trade Union Unity League; and James Ford, candidate for Vice President on the Communist ticket, addressed the meeting.

The Communist Party of the United States (section of the Third International of Moscow) on July 7 sent out instructions to over 200 special district organizers to "strengthen the work of agitation and organization in the factories and trade unions", and to base the disputes on the unfairness of the new code plan of operations. Strikes are to be created if possible.

REDS AT PLATTSBURG

The Plattsburg, N.Y., summer training camp was the scene of vicious Communist agitation this summer. Among the volumes of Red propaganda that got into the hands of the young Americans in military training there was a regular Communist publi-cation entitled "The Plattsburg Voice", whose appeals are to Fight Against Imperialist Wars, Hands Off China and Russia, Pight Against Imperialist wars, hands oil China and Russia, Defend the Soviet, Fight Your Bosses, Abolish Military Training, War Funds for Relief, etc. The N.R.A. also was attacked by the publication as a Wall Street program. The publication was printed in New York City by the Young Communist League.

"HOMELESS YOUTH HOMES REVEALED AS SCHOOLS FOR YOUNG COMMUNISTS

"A recent investigation conducted in Sacramento, Calif., revealed that the 'Homeless Youth Homes' movement in the United States is nothing more than the establishment of recruiting centers for the Young Communist League. A dispatch appearing in the Sacramento Bee of Friday, May 12, states that 300 young members of the Young Communist League were sent out 8 months ago from the New York headquarters with complete instructions for the establishment of 'Homeless Youth Homes' throughout the country. These organizers, according to Lawrence Langan, former leader of the Sacramento organization, who was recently sentenced to serve from 1 to 10 years in prison on a statutory charge, are paid $40 a month by the New York headquarters of the Communist group.

"It can readily be seen that such a move, masquerading under the innocent name of 'Homeless Youth of America' will receive wide support and city officials and civic groups can be easily duped into lending their sponsorship to these breeding places for the spread of Communism."—(American Legion Bulletin.)

COMMUNISM AMONG THE MINERS

No group or organization in America has been more seriously beset by Communists than the United Mine Workers of America. The National Miners Union is a purely Communist organization, the sole purpose of which is to destroy the United Mine Workers of America and set itself up in the coal mining industry in its stead. On September 26, 1928, the National Miners Union national stead. On september 20, 1920, the National Miners Union national executive board held a meeting in Pittsburgh, Pa., and adopted a resolution of formal and complete affiliation with the Red Trade Union Internationale of Moscow. Pat Toohey, national secretary of the National Miners Union, immediately following that meeting, announced that action to the press.

The National Miners Union fomented strikes in western Pennin the eastern Ohio coal fields, especially in and around Bellaire. Only recently—just a few weeks ago—the National Miners Union engineered a strike in the mines of New Mexico which tied up the mines and curtailed the coal supply for railroads in the

The National Miners Union is in reality responsible for the chaotic condition in Illinois. It was the predecessor in that field of the present Progressive Miners Union. Pat Ansboury, one of the founders of the Progressive Miners Union, is well known as a Communist, and was actively in the National Miners Union movecommunist, and was actively in the National Miners Union movement in Illinois. Many letters and other documents are now in the hands of law authorities in Illinois to and from Ansboury which prove his affiliation with the Communist Party. Numerous Communist members of the National Miners Union have visited Russia for the purpose of having their "batteries recharged" so that they might return to the United States as propagandists for communism.

Communism.

Communists have also endeavored for the last several years to gain a foothold among the anthractte miners of Pennsylvania, and they have succeeded to some extent. There is little doubt that communistic influences are active in the present disturbed condition in the anthracite industry. On one occasion Albert Wageknecht, a Communist leader, made his appearance at a convention of the United Mine Workers of America at Scranton, Pa., and he was chased out of the convention and several blocks down the street by convention delegates and warned never to return

At every international convention of the United Mine Workers of America for the past several years Communists have distributed copies of the Daily Worker, published in New York, among the delegates. The Daily Worker is the official organ of the Russian Communist Party in the United States, It advocates the Soviet system of government as a substitute for It advocates the Soviet system of government as a substitute for the Government of the United States.

PROPAGANDA UNITY

At the present moment the elaboration of a general program of immediate struggle against the offensive of the Roosevelt government (its so-called "new deal") is being prepared, and will be finalized in a broad national conference, called for August 26 in Cleveland, Ohio. * * The preliminary committee sponsoring this program and conference includes such well-known names as William Z. Foster and A. J. Muste, leaders of various unions affiliated to the Trade Union Unity League (this is a Communist league), independent unions of the tendency of the C.P.L.A., independent unions without definite political connections, unemployed councils and leagues, of the movement within the American ployed councils and leagues, of the movement within the American Federation of Labor for unemployment insurance, etc. It must be clear that the policy which we are energetically carrying through in America is in the most complete harmony with that being carried through by the C.P.G.B. (i.e., Communist Party of Great Britain).

[From booklet entitled "The Developing Crisis of World Capitalism" by V. M. Molotov, assistant ex-secretary of the Communist Party of Russia, chairman of the People's Commissars of the Soviet Government, member of the Presidium of the Third International]

The world economic crisis in the bourgeois countries, on the one hand, and the victorious construction of socialism in the U.S.S.R., on the other, raise to an unprecedented degree the importance of the Soviet Union as an international revolutionary factor.

Apart from the strike movement, I must emphasize the importance of other forms of revolutionary working-class movement. Thus the unemployed movement has developed very greatly in a number of countries during recent months. Unemployed demonstrations demanding "bread and work" of the bourgeois governments and municipalities have taken place repeatedly in many towns of Europe and the United States of America. Given the establishment of firm connections between the unemployed movement and the struggle of the whole working class—one of the most important tasks of the Communist Parties—these movements may yet play a great part in developing the revolutionary class struggle. Apart from the strike movement, I must emphasize the imstruggle.

"Yet the organization of class battles under the leadership of the Communist parties is precisely the basic task of the present day. Whereas previously the work of the Communist parties amounted in the main to agitation and propaganda, today the center of gravity lies in the organization of class battles under Communist leadership. Only on this basis, on the basis of the Bolshevik organization of strike, struggle, and other forms of class battle against advancing capitalism, can and must the Communist parties genuinely win prestige and working-class confidence in their leadership of the whole revolutionary struggle of the proletariat."

"The Communist parties and their New Tasks

"The Comintern took note in good time of the regrouping of class forces which began in connection with the increased break-up of capitalist stabilization and the increased swing to the left of the working masses. It put forward as the slogan governing the tactics of the Communist parties the slogan of 'class against class.' These tactics of class against class meant that the Communist parties must begin to achieve in practice the independent leadership of class battles in irreconcilable struggle, developed all along the line, against social democracy. These tactics answered to the new conditions in which the Communist parties were working. From the period of agitation and propatics answered to the new conditions in which the Communist parties were working. From the period of agitation and propaganda the Communist parties have begun to proceed to the period of organization and leadership of the class struggles of the working class. During this period this transition has been going on from the methods of agitation and propaganda which dominated the work of the Communist parties in practice to the methods of independent leadership of the struggle of the proletariat."

"The Communist International has affiliated to it 53 Communist parties and associated as sympathizing members 3 national revolutionary parties. Among the sections of the Communist International there are some which are still quite young and weak. On the other hand, such Communist parties as the German (which, next to the C.P.S.U., is the best party of the Communist International) and also the French and Czechoslovak parties have become not only the largest sections of the comintern but genuine mass parties, already representing the most dangerous competitors of social democracy among the working masses."

"The Communist Parties and Their New Tasks

"The Commintern took note in good time of the regrouping of class forces which began in connection with the increased break-up of capitalist stabilization and the increased swing to the left of the working masses. It put forward as the slogan governing the tactics of the Communist parties the slogan of 'class against class.' These tactics of class against class meant that the Communist parties must begin to achieve in practice the independent leadership of class bettles in irgrenously like struggle de world situation are characterized by a number of recent important facts:

"1. A tremendous change has taken place in the relations of forces between the socialist and the capitalist worlds, due primarily to the increase in the relative importance of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, which is carrying out its great program of socialist industrialization, collectivization, and the cultural revolution at a tremendous rate. That country has completely established itself in the positions of socialism; the second 5-year plan provides for the final abolition of classes and for the conversion of the whole of the toiling population of the country into active and conscious builders of a classless socialist society. The successes achieved in socialist construction are securing to an increasing degree the economic independence of the Soviet Union in relation to the capitalist world, and its international might, its revolutionizing influence on the toilers and the exploited of all countries, and its significance as the basis of the world socialist revolution has increased.

STALIN'S SPEECHES ON THE AMERICAN COMMUNIST PARTY, DELIVERED IN THE AMERICAN COMMISSION OF THE PRESIDIUM OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL, MAY 6, 1929, AND IN THE PRESIDIUM OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE COM-MUNIST INTERNATIONAL ON THE AMERICAN QUESTION, MAY 14, 1929 (Published by central committee, Communist Party, U.S.A.)

"Or let us take, for instance, another fact. I refer to the talk with Comrade Lovestone that took place the other day. It is characteristic that Comrade Lovestone has also been spreading absurd rumors about this conversation of mine and making a secret of it. Why this incomprehensible passion for the 'mysterious'? * * * What did he speak about to me the other day? He asked that the presidium of the E.C.C.I. should rescind the decision to withdraw him from America. He said that he, Lovestone, would undertake to carry out the proposed decision of the presidium of the E.C.C.I. provided it would not be directed sharply against the leaders of the majority of the Communist Party of America. He promised to be a loyal soldier of the Comintern and to prove it in practice, if the Comintern would give him the necessary instructions. He said he was not looking for high positions in the American Communist Party, but only begged that he should be tested and given the opportunity to prove this loyalty to the Comintern. What did I reply to this? I told him that experiments in testing the loyalty of Comrade Lovestone to the Comintern have already been going on for 3 years but no good has come of them. I said it would be better both for the Communist Party of America and for the Comintern if Comrades Lovestone and Bittleman were kept in Moscow for a time. I said that this method of action on the part of the Communist Party of America and American Communist Party of factionalism and saving it from part of the Comintern was one of the surest means of curing the American Communist Party of factionalism and saving it from disintegration. I said that although this was my opinion, I agreed to submit the proposal of Comrade Lovestone to the consideration of the Russian comrades, and undertook to inform him of the of the Russian comrades, and undertook to inform him of the opinion of the Russian comrades.

"That seems perfectly clear. Yet Comrade Lovestone again tries to make a secret of these obvious facts and is spreading all kinds of rumors regarding this conversation.

"It is obvious that there would be no such mystification, and simple things would not be turned into mysterious legends if it were not for a policy which places the interests of a faction higher than the interests of the party, the interests of diplomatic intrigue higher than the intrests of the Comintern.

"In order to put an end to these foul methods and place the American Communist Party on the lines of Leninist policy, it is necessary first of all to put an end to factionalism in that party."

"The solution consists in the following:
"I. The actions and the proposals of the delegation of the E.C.C.I. must, in the main, be approved, with the exclusion from the proposals of those points which approximate to the proposals of Comrade Foster.

"2. An open letter must be sent in the name of the E.C.C.I. to the members of the American Communist Party setting forth the errors of both sections of the party and sharply emphasizing the question of eradicating all factionalism.

the question of eradicating all factionalism.

"3. The action of the leaders of the majority at the convention of the Communist Party of America, particularly on the question of Pepper, must be condemned.

"4. An end must be put to the present situation in the Communist Party of America, in which the questions of positive work, the questions of the struggle of the working class against the capitalists, questions of wages, working hours, work in the trade unions, the fight against reformism, the fight against the right deviation—when all these questions are kept in the shade and are replaced by petty questions of the factional struggle between the Lovestone group and the Foster group.

"5. The secretariat of the executive committee of the American Communist Party must be reorganized with the inclusion of such workers therein as are capable of seeing something more than the workers therein as are capable of seeing something more than the factional struggle, the struggle of the working class against the capitalists, who are capable of placing the interests and the unity of the party above the interests of individual groups and their bers of the American Communist Party should at last understand that the Comintern intends to fight factionalism in all seriousness.

"Such is the solution, in my opinion.

"A word or two regarding the tasks and the mission of the American Communist Party. I think, comrades, that the American Communist Party is one of those few Communist parties in the world upon which history has laid tasks of a decisive character from the point of view of the world revolutionary movement. You all know very well the strength and power of American capitalism. Many now think that the general crisis of world capitalism will not affect America. That, of course, is not true. It is entirely untrue, comrades. The crisis of world capitalism is developing with increasing rapidity and cannot but affect American capitalism. The 3,000,000 now unemployed in America are the first swallows indicating the ripening of the economic crisis in America. The sharpening antagonism between America and England, the struggle for markets and raw materials, and, finally, the colossal growth of armaments—that is the second portent of the approaching crisis. I think the moment is not far off when a revolutionary crisis will develop in America. And when a revolutionary crisis develops in America, that will be the beginning of the end of world capitalism as a whole. It is essential that the American Communist Party should be capable of meeting that historical moment fully prepared and of assuming the leadership of the impending class struggle in America. Every effort and every means must be employed in preparing for that, comrades. For that end the American Communist Party must be improved and bolshevized. For that end we must work for the complete liquidation of factionalism and deviations in the party. For that end we must work for the reestablishment of unity in the Communist Party of America. For that end we must work in order to forge real revolutionary cadres and a real revolutionary leaderend we must work for the reestablishment of unity in the com-munist Party of America. For that end we must work in order to forge real revolutionary cadres and a real revolutionary leader-ship of the proletariat, capable of leading the many millions of the American working class toward the revolutionary class struggles. For that end all personal factors and factional considerations must be laid aside and the revolutionary education of the working class of America must be placed above all.

"That is why I think, comrades, that the most serious attention must be paid to the proposals of the commission of the presidium of the E.C.C.I. for your consideration here, for the aim of these proposals is to render the Communist Party of America a healthy party, to eradicate factionalism, to create unity, to strengthen the party, and to bolshevize it."

In counterposing the Comintern to the executive committee of the Comintern, the authors of the declaration hope, as Zinoviev and Trotsky once hoped, to sever the executive committee of the Comintern from the Comintern. A ridiculous and foolish hope! The authors of the declaration apparently forget that the interpreters of the decisions of the Comintern Congress are the executive committee and its presidium alone, and not they. The authors of the declaration are mistaken if they think that the American workers will believe their interpretation rather than the interpretation of the presidium of the executive committee of the Comintern.

"Such is the true character of the declaration of the American

"There are many who think that nothing has changed in the international situation of late; that everything has remained as of old. This is not true, comrades. The fact of the matter is that we have an accentuation of the class struggle in all capitals. that we have an accentuation of the class struggle in all capitalist countries, a growing revolutionary crisis in Europe, growing conditions of a new revolutionary upward swing. Yesterday this was signalized by a general strike in Lodz. Not so long ago we had a signal from Berlin. Tomorrow we shall get signals from France, England, Czechoslovakia, America, India, China. Soon the ground will be too hot for world capitalism."

"The fight must be intensified for the forging of real revolutionary party cadres and for the selection of real revolutionary leaders of the party, of individuals capable of entering the fight and bringing the proletariat with them, individuals who will not run before the face of the storm and will not fall into panic, but run before the face of the storm and will not fall into panic, but will sail into the face of the storm. But in order to carry out this task it is necessary at once, without the loss of a single moment, for time does not wait, to set about cleaning the Communist Parties of right and conciliatory elements, who objectively represent the agency of social democracy within the ranks of the Communist Party. And we must set about this matter not at the usual pace but at an accelerated pace, for, I repeat, time does not wait, and we must not allow events to catch us unawares. A couple of years ago we might not have been so urgent about this matter, counting on the fact that the molecular process of bolshevization of the parties would gradually eliminate the right and the wavering elements, all the Branklers and Thalheimers, all and every factional wirepuller, etc. We might not have been and the wavering elements, all the Branklers and Thalheimers, all and every factional wirepuller, etc. We might not have been so urgent because there was no danger of being belated.

"But matters stand differently now. To delay now means to be late, and to be late means to be caught unawares by the revolutionary crisis. Therefore the cleansing process of the Communist Parties now proceeding is a beneficent process, strengthening the comintern and its sections. The Philistines are afraid of this beneficent process, and in their fright talk nonsense regarding the disintegration of the comintern, just because they are Philistines. Revolutionaries, on the other hand, will always welcome this beneficent process, because it is at the same time an integral part of the great cause of preparing the working class for the approaching class struggles which is now the main task of the Communist Parties of the world.

of the Communist Parties of the world.

"The merit of the draft of the commission consists in the fact, among others, that it assists the Communist Party of America in carrying this main task into effect."

"Finally, a few words as to the fate of the American Communist Party in connection with the decision adopted by the presidium of the E.C.C.I. The comrades of the American delegation regard the matter too tragically. They declare that with the adoption of the draft of the commission the American Communist Party will either perish, or in any case, will totter on the brink of a precipice. That is not so, comrades. More than that, it is absolutely ludicrous. The American Communist Party lives and will continue to live, in spite of the prophecies of the comrades of the American delegation. What is more, the American party, if it drives unprincipled factionalism out of its midst, will grow and flourish. The importance of the decision adopted by the presidium consists in the very fact that it will make it easier for the American Communist Party to put an end to unprincipled factionalism, create unity in the party, and finally enter on the broad path of mass political work. No, comrades, the American Communist Party will not perish. It will live and flourish to the dismay of the enemies of the working class. Only one small factional group will perish if it continues to be stubborn, if it does not submit to the will of the comintern, if it continues to adhere to its errors. But the fate of one small faction must in no case be identified with the fate of the American Communist Party. "Finally, a few words as to the fate of the American Commu-Because one small factional group is liable to perish politically, it does not follow that the American Communist Party must perish. And, if it is inevitable that this small factional group perish, then let it perish as long as the Communist Party will grow and develop. You look at the situation too pessimistically, dear comrades of the American delegation. My outlook is optimistic."

We have always held that to say it cannot succeed is beside the point. The point is that it makes the effort, that the effort is continuous and unrelenting, and that success or any degree thereof is purely a matter of prophecy which is no less dangerous now than formerly.

We conclude this presentation with a renewal of the plea which is our only purpose, that there be the highest possible degree of safeguard against the continuance of this destructive and revolutionary propaganda from abroad, and that in whatever relations may develop between the Soviet regime and the United States these shall not be permitted to serve as a cloak for the undoing of our free institutions.

CONCLUSION

It is no complete picture that has been offered here and it is doubtful whether any complete picture of Communist subversive activities in the United States can be drawn by anyone at this time. There are no agencies, except voluntary agencies, keep-this time. There are no agencies, except voluntary agencies, keeping watch over the situation.

There is much confusion in many circles as to the extent of Communist effort and a great deal of this confusion is created purposely by the Communists themselves.

This we do know: Wherever Communists can gain a foothold in trade unions they seek to capture those unions. Where they cannot get a foothold in existing unions they seek to organize new unions. In practically all of the basic industries strictly Communist labor organizations have been created. These organizations do not enter into agreement with their employees, except in rare cases where agreement is meant to serve as subterfuge. The purpose of Communist labor organizations is not to safeguard and improve the present order but to undermine it and destroy it. There is a tremendous and growing activity in the field of education, particularly through Communist schools and Communist summer camps.

We know that in the newspaper and book-publishing world, particularly in New York City, which is the center of influence in that world, Communist influence is tremendous.

We know that we see a constant revolutionary menace.

"10. The Communist International stands over all these Communist organizations and newspapers, exercising its discipline and demanding and receiving obedience in every matter of revolutionary policy and tactics, fighting under the red flag 'to displace American capitalism by a government of workers and farmers'.

"11. The formation of revolutionary shop nuclei is the principal task of the Trade Union Unity League. It is a Communist secret-service organization in American industry, reporting to Communist leaders outside the plants the state of mind of fellow workers and the proper barrage of leaflets or speeches, or both, to be employed to sow discord within the shops. In the event of revolution, their role would be local managers. The nuclei supplement Workers Party branch organizations.

"12. O.G.P.U. Moscow spies are in American factories and in the trade-union movement. This secret tribunal, spread throughout the world, is empowered to pass the death sentence and execute it here and in foreign lands. A former member, Bessedovski, when giving an astounding account of the O.G.P.U. intrigue, stated that its expenses 'in the United States would not exceed $50,000,000 per year'. Cases of assassination in the United States under its auspices by name, date, and place are recited.

"13. United States Government departments are penetrated by the O.G.P.U. subterranean organization obtaining and utilizing State confidential informations for the benefit of the Soviet regime.

the O.G.P.U. subterranean organization obtaining and utilizing State confidential informations for the benefit of the Soviet regime.

"14. Communist rules for demonstrations, such as the hunger march, the bonus march, the Illinois coal march, and a chain of others, are unquestionably designed for military training, gradually leading up to an armed insurrection. Here is a revelation of the Communist purpose behind the continuous business of demonstrations, parades, protests, mass meetings, and outbursts of every nature. It is to create a habit, a willingness, a technique, a continuity, and a state of mind. Arms are not to be supplied until after civil war has been started. The methods employed in preliminary street battles involve the use of handy bricks, knives, lead pipe, clubs, and guns taken from the police. History shows that these orders have been literally carried out in our country.

"15. The instructions to party members include methods of extending illegal party machinery, secret archives, secret printing presses, coding, technique of liaison, secret meeting places, and secret correspondents' addresses, secret lodgings for illegal militants of the party enabling interviews with other militant Communist workers, and the special training of groups of 3 and 4 for leadership in strikes, street fights, and other demonstrations pending the hour of actual armed insurrection.

"16. The training for civil war involves certain orders issued for the mobilization of a secret army composed of small units."

"16. The training for civil war involves certain orders issued for the mobilization of a secret army composed of small units. In addition to these orders, the Communist International, the official organ of the Third International, in the issue of June 30, 1931, gives directions upon the fight for the street. These dehalls, gives directions upon the inght for the street. These detailed instructions advocate assembly in workers' quarters, labor halls, and assembly places least accessible to the police and also organization of marches of workers and starving poor in quarters inhabited by the rich. It is recommended that the tactics of the Communists should consist in forcing the concentrated police forces to disperse and to compel them to cover the Communist organization of small groups.

"17. Evidence accumulated by the American Federation of Labor shows the existence of a criminal group under Communist control, comprising a skeleton terrorist force, trained, instructed, and ready for expansion on short notice.

"18. The Communist Party in the United States, subordinate to the Third International at Moscow, is not working for improvement of human conditions through lawful means, but it is an actual revolutionary war machine, against which the American Federation of Labor has stood as the first line of defense and has borne the continuous brunt of battle.

"19. The astounding revelation of detailed orders directs caution against leaving documentary evidence and methods to be employed to insure secret conferences of members of the Communist Party as well as secret party meetings of committees and militants. The orders include directions to destroy factory machinery and to block industrial operations, vital alike to every American workman and factory owner.

"20. Mutiny is advocated in the United States Army and Navy and in the air forces.

"21. Propagandists are ordered to organize cells of the most trusted and devoted Reds in the more important public services railways, telegraph, telephone, electric-power stations, water and gas works. "33. The basis of Soviet international policy, as presented in a pamphlet issued recently in Russia by the executive committee of the Russian Communist Party, is set forth. Its program of intrigue is revealed in part by the following quotation:

"'The task of Soviet foreign policy is to exploit the liberal and pacifist tendency of certain groups of the bourgeoisie and of industrial circles interested in trade with the U.S.R., thus prolonging the breathing space and insuring an inflow of foreign credits, machinery, and materials for the industrialization of the U.S.R. For this purpose the U.S.R. energetically confronts the aggressive military plans of its enemies with proposals for the present to let both systems live peaceably together. both systems live peaceably together.

"'This is only a temporary measure required by the anomalies of both systems. Soviet proposals for coexistence of these systems have already spread confusion among imperialists. " "We must politically exploit economic discords among our enemies. Discord between Great Britain and France was one of the reasons why France did not break with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1927, when Great Britain did. Soviet foreign policy remains based on revolutionary prospects abroad, and the Soviet Government therefore maintains constant contact with the Soviet Government therefore maintains constant contact with the foreign proletariat.

"34. Active participation of the Red army of Soviet Russia in aiding revolutionists in other countries is presented by quoting directly from Soviet proclamations:

"'The Red army is the army of the international proletariat, the O.G.P.U. the police of the proletariat. Nothing is Russian in the Soviet Union in the national meaning of the word; everything is proletarian, that means international.' To America the meaning of that is that if and when there is an outbreak of sufficient revolutionary character in the United States to convince the Red chiefs of a chance of success the Red army of the Soviets in Russia will be thrown into the conflict. will be thrown into the conflict will be thrown into the conflict.

"Soviet authority seeks to obliterate national boundaries. It rules over that part of the American population which is Communist and compels obedience to its edicts, while Communists in America swear that their first allegiance is to the red flag, the symbol of communism, and not to the American flag. The Communist Party of Russia, or its subordinate creature, the Third International, commonly and constantly issues mandatory orders to be followed by the Communists of other nations. This authority wielded by the Soviet is a new form of extraterritoriality which the world has so far but dimly come to comprehend.

"35. The Daily Worker, the Communist official organ in the United States, freely gives the Communist operations in the industrial field. Quotations are given by date, referring to various trades. Its effort to prevent the operation of the National Industrial Recovery Act is emphasized in the issue of October 26, 1933, as follows:

"'ROOSEVELT N.R.A. SLAVE CODES SEEN AS PASCIST MERGING OF TRADE UNIONS WITH GOVERNMENT MACHINE-TRADE-UNION THEORIES OF PERKINS, JOHNSON JUST LIKE HITLER'S

"'The Roosevelt government, behind all its smooth hypocrisy, moves grimly forward to the naked, military dictatorship of the capitalist class.

"It is out of the increasing recognition that the N.R.A. economic program is being swept into discard by the onrush of the crisis, out of the recognition that the coming winter, as a result, will witness immense, wide-spread working-class resistance to the wage slavery and exploitation that Roosevelt prepares for open class warfare.

class warfare.'

"The issue of October 28, 1933, states:

"'The Daily Worker has consistently day by day, since the first promulgation of the N.R.A. provisions, exposed their vicious anti-working-class character, exposed them as a charter of slavery for American workers, exposed them as a part of the war preparations of the Roosevelt government.'

"Instructions issued by the executive committee of the Communist International to the secret police are quoted to 'block every effort at economic recovery.' This document, printed in six languages, under date of August 15, 1931, orders preparation for a simultaneous revolutionary outbreak in the leading capitalist countries of the world, placing the United States at the head of the list.

"The Daily Worker also disclosed the connection between the Communist Party of the United States and the Third International in its issue of October 28, 1933, column 1, page 1, as follows: "Easley knows very well that the Soviet Government has no responsibility for the Daily Worker, which is the organ of the Communist Party of the United States, which like the Communist Party of the United States, which like the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, is a section of the Communist International.

"Disciplinary instructions under the direction of Moscow, involved in resolutions as the seventh national convention of the Communist Party of America, adopted for action in the United States, follow:

"A. Every single member of the party must be assigned specific work in the party and in proletarians' mass organizations. The nucleus executives shall direct and check up the work of every party member.

"'B. The functioning of every committee, committee member, and party members must be checked up continually.

"'C. Ruthless political criticism of all errors and deviations must provide the base for serious and continuous self-correction.

"D. Committees and functionaries who persist in errors and deviations must be removed from the leading cadres as unfit for

"'G. All leading party committees are obligated to be most concrete in their plans and instructions for work to the lower units. Unclearness, ambiguity, the generalization lead to misunderstanding and to delays in the carrying out of instructions. The need of the hour is clarity of instructions and promptness of execution.'

"Destruction of the American Federation of Labor unions was given much attention in the resolutions and has been an uppermost part of red hostilities against all things American since their adoption as the red plan of attack. There is this further paragraph:

"A definite turn in all plans of work in the revolutionary unions and in the Trade Union Unity League must be urged and carried through by the Communists. Special efforts must be made to draw negro workers into the leadership of the revolutionary unions. Decided efforts must be made to increase manifold the activities draw negro workers into the leadership of the revolutionary unions. Decided efforts must be made to increase manifold the activities of the Communist factions in the revolutionary trade unions. It is necessary that the party pass very definitely over from the period of talk to the stage of action in the accomplishment of its tasks in the organization of the unorganized masses. The progress of the party on the road to a mass party of revolutionary action must be measured by the growth of the organization and the influence of the Trade Union Unity League."

"A Negro membership amounting to 20 percent of the total was then claimed.

"The convention called for leaders for the regiments of the line.

'The recent session of the Red International of Labor Unions laid the greatest stress upon this point' and 'the mass struggles we are now carrying on are producing many new working-class fighters. These * * * must be drawn into leadership.

"And further: 'The line (policy) of the Red International of Labor Unions must be applied in practice, all unclarity eliminated, and resistance to it sharply combated. There must be more attention given to the question of strike strategy.' And more attention has been given. A policy of fomenting a steady stream of strikes against the constituted leadership of the American Federation of Labor has ensued, not to win advantages for the workers but to encompass the destruction of the legitimate unions. The coal encompass the destruction of the legitimate unions. The coal fields have witnessed many of these revolutionary strikes against true trade unionism. To quote: 'Special concentration must be made on the mining, steel, machinery, and meat-packing indus-

"And again, in these resolutions, the persistent pounding for organization in the shop, where the Reds see their war basis; 'shop nuclei must be built and made to function in the shops.' And also the order for the wolves to burrow underground in the secret caves of the stealthy and the treacherous and the treasonable. To quote: 'The illegal apparatus of the party must be immediately completed.' And as a logical consequence and in sequence: 'Our perspective must be for the defeat of the American Federation of Lahor. * * *'

Labor * * *."

"That the Communists of America follow the orders of Moscow was clearly and candidly announced by William Z. Foster, the principal leader of communism in the United States, when he testified before the commission presided over by the Honorable Hamilton Fish, by authority of Congress, as follows:

"'The question, "Do we take our orders from the Communist International?" is a question which reveals the utter distance of the capitalist conception of organization from that of the worker.

The Communist International is a world party, based upon the

The Communist International is a world party, based upon the mass parties in the respective countries. It works out its policy by the mass principles of these parties in all its deliberations. It is a party that conducts the most fundamental examination of all questions that come before it, and when a decision is arrived at in any given instance, this decision the workers, with their customary sense of proletarian discipline, accept and put into

Like the feudal nobility of the past, the bourgeoisie cannot abandon its historical position to the new class without a desperate and frantic struggle; hence the violence of the bourgeoisie can only be suppressed by the stern violence of the proletariat.

"Communism in America is the pet child of the Moscow master strategist, Stalin. In May 1929, in a speech, he said:
"'I consider the Communist Party of the United States one of the few Communist parties to which history has given decisive tasks from the point of view of the world revolutionary of the few Communist parties to which history has given decisive tasks from the point of view of the world revolutionary movement. The revolutionary crisis has not yet reached the United States, but we already have knowledge of numerous facts which suggest that it is approaching.

"It is necessary that the American Communist Party should be capable of meeting the moment of crisis fully equipped to take the direction of future class wars in the United States. You must prepare for that, comrades, with all your strength and by every means; you must constantly improve and bolshevize the American Communist Party. * * * "

"Not until January 1930, more than 6 months after its delivery, was that speech made known to any save those who heard it. At the same time was read a detailed report with reference to work in the United States. The occasion was the tenth session of the executive committee of the Communist International, and the author of the report was Moltov, member of the presidium of that international. Let us quote:

"The comintern has given particular attention to the situation in the Communist Party of the United States.

"A special delegation of the executive committee of the comintern was sent to the last congress of this party (Workers Party, United States). Afterward for several weeks there sat at Moscow a commission of the presidium of the executive committee of the Communist International, which specially studied the situation in the Communist Party of the United States. The presidium of the executive committee of the Communist Party radically renewed the direction of the American Communist Party and created within it the conditions of a real Bolshevist development of the party and a reinforcement of its authority among radically renewed the direction of the American Communist Party and created within it the conditions of a real Bolshevist development of the party and a reinforcement of its authority among the working masses.'

"To prove that the Communists instigate strikes, there are recited in this American Federation of Labor document instances in the Mahoning Valley and in the steel and coal industries in opposition to the codes inaugurated under the National Recovery Administration.

"The statement is made that in every case thus far Communists have been in the minority in our unions, but the significance of this is never fully understood unless it is remembered that Communist tactics always call for control by minorities through the use of viclence, terrorism, and whatever methods may seem best designed to achieve the end.

"It would be too long a story to recount all of the struggles which our unions have had with Communist invaders, even if the facts were available. The truth is the facts are not all available and could not all be had without the expenditure of much effort and considerable time. The unions which have been cited are but a few of those which have been attacked and which have been compelled to defend themselves at heavy cost.

"The United Textile Workers have been forced to expend much money, and some lives have been sacrificed.

"The International Ladies' Garment Workers have been compelled to fight vigorously to maintain the oversization in fraction.

"The international Ladies' Garment Workers have been compelled to fight vigorously to maintain the organization in freedom from Communist influence.

"Many of the building trades have been threatened in various communities, in some cases seriously. In this connection it should be noted that the tactics of Communists and of gangsterism have been strangely identical, and it is fair to wonder whether the two been strangely identical, and it is fair to vonder whether the two are always dissociated.

"One activity centered in Warren, Ohio, ordinarily a quiet and peaceful community. There is in Warren, a plant of the Republic Steel Corporation, a thoroughly union shop with collective agreement between the management and the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers. By infiltration and the astablishment of Community rushed. mated Association of Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers. By infiltration and the establishment of Communist nuclei, Communists were able to perfect two distinct organizations within this plant and to create much dissatisfaction. These operations extended over a period of several months until finally in September 1922 the Communists managed through the circulation of an outright lie to precipitate a strike involving a number of the members of the regular trade union. The lie was to the effect that a wage cut had been ordered by the management in violation of its wage agreement. The strike call was so issued as to lead many men the regular trade union. The lie was to the effect that a wage cut had been ordered by the management in violation of its wage agreement. The strike call was so issued as to lead many men to leave their work under the impression that the genuine trade union had called the strike. Immediately, in pursuance of the customary Communist tactics, Communists from many other cities congregated in Warren. By actual observation, it was estimated that more than half the pickets never worked in the mill and never saw it until they were ordered there by the Communist leaders. For several days the Communist newspapers continued to print the charge that the strike was against wage reduction.

"The subtle methods employed by the Communists were revealed in connection with the bombing outrages at an industrial plant not remote from Chicago where it was disclosed that the guards hired by that plant to protect it actually were Communists who had insinuated themselves into the employment of that industrial concern but acting under the orders of the Trade Union Unity League, had proceeded toward bringing about the destruction of the plant. After a long series of bomb outrages and explosions, their identity was discovered and arrests were made.

"No group or organization in America has been more seriously beset by Communists than the United Mine Workers of America. The National Miners Union is purely a Communist organization, the sole purpose of which is to destroy the United Mine Workers of America and set itself up in the coal-mining industry in its stead. On September 26, 1928, the National Miners Union national executive board held a meeting in Pittsburgh, Pa., and adopted a resolution of formal and complete affiliation with the Red Trade Union International Miners Union, immediately following that meeting announced that action to the press.

"The National Miners Union fomented strikes in western Pennsylvania coal fields—at Avella and other points. It did the same in the eastern Ohio coal field, especially in and around Bellairs. Only recently—just a few weeks ago—the National Miners Union engineered a strike in the mines of New Mexico which tied up the mines and curtailed the coal supply for railroads in the territory.

"The National Miners Union is in reality responsible for the chaotic condition in Illinois. It was the predecessor in that field of the present Progressive Miners Union. Pat Ansboury, one of the founders of the Progressive Miners Union, is well known as a Communist and was actively in the National Miners Union movement in Illinois. Many letters and other documents are now in the hands of law authorities in Illinois to and from Ansboury which prove his affiliation with the Communist Party. Numerous Communist members of the National Miners Union have visited Russia for the purpose of having their batteries recharged' so that they might return to the United States as propagandists for Communism.

they might return to the United States as propagandists for Communism.

"Communists have also endeavored for the last several years to gain a foothold among the anthracite miners of Pennsylvania, and they have succeeded to some extent. There is little doubt that communistic influences are active in the present disturbed condition in the anthracite industry. On one occasion Albert Wageknecht, a Communist leader, made his appearance at a convention of the United Mine Workers of America at Scranton, Pa., and he was chased out of the convention and several blocks down.

vention of the United Mine Workers of America at Scranton, Pa., and he was chased out of the convention and several blocks down the street by convention delegates and warned never to return.

"At every international convention of the United Mine Workers of America for the past several years Communists have distributed copies of the Daily Worker, published in New York, among the delegates. The Daily Worker, the official organ of the Russian Communist Party in the United States, always contains vicious, scurrilous attacks upon the United Mine Workers of America and seeks to create dissension among its members.

seeks to create dissension among its members.

"These are mere illustrations. It would be impossible to present any complete picture of Communist subversive activities in the United States, as we have no secret service for this purpose and must depend entirely on voluntary agencies to keep watch.

"There is, indeed, much confusion in many circles as to the extent of Communist effort, and a great deal of this confusion is created purposely by the Communists themselves.

"This we do know! Wherever Communists can gain a foothold in trade unions they seek to capture those unions. Where they in trade unions they seek to capture those unions. Where they cannot get a foothold in existing unions they seek to organize new unions. In practically all of the basic industries strictly Communist labor organizations have been created. These organizations do not enter into agreement with their employees except in rare cases where agreement is meant to serve as subterfuge. The purpose of Communist labor organizations is not to safeguard and improve the present order but to undermine it and destroy it.

"There is a tremendous and growing activity in the field of education, particularly through Communist schools and Communist summer camps.

"Communist subversive activities extend to the church, to the stablishment of so-called 'Sunday schools', which confine their

"No authority knows or possibly ever will know in what direction the Communist effort will extend next or at what hour the Communist high command will consider it expedient to launch into the field of open violence.

We know that in the newspaper- and book-publishing world, particularly in New York City, which is the center of influence in that world, Communist influence is tremendous.

"We know that we see a constant revolutionary menace.

"This presentation to President Roosevelt concludes with a renewal of the plea against the continuance of destructive and revolutionary propaganda by the Soviet regime in the United States."

THE AIR MAIL-ADDRESS BY SENATOR AUSTIN

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be extended in the RECORD an address on the subject of the air mail, delivered by the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] before the Union League Club of New York on June 14.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On February 20, 1934, Manhattan awoke to the startling infor-On February 20, 1934, Manhattan awoke to the starting information that her gallant argosies of the air had all been destroyed. This bad news was rendered more alarming by the circumstance that the destructive agency was not force majore, storm, fire, or any other of the so-called "acts of God", but was the intemperate, illegal, and hasty act of her officers of Government.

She saw her millions of treasure, which formerly flowed into her exchange and hasty avery morning cut off. She realized that she saw her millions of treasure, which formerly hower into her exchanges and banks every morning, cut off. She realized that a courier who, overnight and while she slept, had delivered her mail as far west as Omaha in the same time that normal mail was delivered within her own city limits was lost to her.

But, more appalling than any of these material things, she suffered that loss of confidence in her Government which is excited by either failure of government to govern, or by misgovernment, tyranny, force, abuse of power, reckless disregard of law, blindness to the rights of the governed, and contempt of the authority of the governed. authority of the governed.

Now, what I have figuratively stated concerning New York City is allegorical of the entire United States of America.

The destruction of the air-mail institution was a great injury to the people of this country who had become accustomed to the accelerated speed of transmission of mail by air and transportation of passengers and express by air. However, this injury could be remedied.

On the other hand, the realization that this destruction was political maneuver, inspired by the desire to discredit a Republican administration which had created a wonderful air-mail and passenger service, and that there were additional Democratic interests who coveted contracts already let to others, magnified the injury.

The trend of Government for a year and a half away from free institutions and toward centralization of power in the Executive had theretofore been tolerated on the ground of emergency, and in the belief that these fundamental variations were temporary and not intended to change the structure of Government.

The cancelation of the air-mail contracts now suddenly brought The cancelation of the air-mail contracts now suddenly brought to the attention of the people the psychological change which had occurred in the minds of their governors. It plainly showed how power had bred more power. This act exposed in the raw the real attitude of men in high place toward the humble people of the United States, and toward their fundamental rights. For here was an act of sheer force: In the midst of an investigation of the air mail by a special committee of the Senate, before the evidence was all in—even before any evidence at all had been introduced by the air-mail operators or any findings had been considered by the special committee—all of the 29 air-mail contracts, held by nine different contractors, were canceled on the alleged ground that the operators were guilty of fraud, collusion, and conspiracy in the making of the contracts.

alleged ground that the operators were guilty of fraud, collusion, and conspiracy in the making of the contracts.

This cancelation was made by the Postmaster General of the United States with the approval of the President. No hearing by any judicial tribunal was permitted the operators. No hearing was accorded the operators by the Postmaster General or the President, although it was requested in writing. No opportunity for severance of defenses of the nine different and independent contractors was afforded. All of them were condemned as crooks en bloc. A whole group of defendants was judged guilty together. This judgment of them was made in their absence without affording them an opportunity to be confronted by their accusers ing them an opportunity to be confronted by their accusers

and witnesses.

Now, these contractors were the representatives of thousands of individual stockholders who had contributed their capital to the building up of this industry. Some were poor people whose capital invested in this enterprise consisted of meager savings of years of hard toil. But, whether these citizens enjoy the emotional advantage of poverty or suffer the prejudicial circumstances of wealth, they all had rights which they supposed were secure in the Bill of Rights and Constitution of the United States.

They had the right to contract and have their contract held sacred under the law. They had the right to own and keep their property safe from confiscation by their Government. They had the right to be heard upon the question of public good if their Government should need or require their property for pub-lic use. They had the right to have their property valued by an independent and impartial tribunal, if their Government should intend to take it by the power of eminent domain away from them. They had the right to administration of justice by an independent coordinate department of government. They had the right of exemption from bills of attainder. They had the right of equal protection of the laws. right of equal protection of the laws

Only 10 days ago the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Brandels, held unconstitutional the clause in the Economy Act repealing all laws granting or pertaining to yearly renewable term insurance for veterans and restated the familiar doctrine that the Government is subject to law as individuals are,

"On the other hand war-risk policies being contracts are "On the other hand war-risk policies being contracts are property and create vested rights. " "The repeal, if valid, abrogated outstanding contracts; and relieved the United States from all liability on the contracts without making compensation to the beneficiaries. "Second. The fifth amendment commands that property be not taken without making just compensation. Valid contracts are property, whether the obligor be a private individual, a municipality, a State, or the United States. Rights against the United States arising out of a contract with it are protected by the fifth States arising out of a contract with it are protected by the fifth amendment (United States v. Central Pacific R. Co., 118 U.S. 235, 238; United States v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 256 U.S. 51, 64, 67). When the United States enters into contract relations, its rights and duties therein are governed generally by the law applicable to contracts between private individuals. That the contracts of war-risk insurance were valid when made That the contracts of war-risk insurance were valid when made is not questioned. As Congress had the power to authorize the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to issue them, the due-process clause prohibits the United States from annulling them, unless, indeed, the action taken falls within the Federal police power or some other paramount power.

"Punctilious fulfillment of contractual obligations is essential to the maintenance of the credit of public as well as private debtors.

"The United States are as much bound by their contracts as are individuals. If they repudiate their obligations, it is as much are individuals. If they repudiate their obligations, it is as much repudiation, with all the wrong and reproach that term implies, as it would be if the repudiator had been a State, or a municipality, or a citizen (The Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U.S. 700, 719.)" Suddenly the trend of government in hostility to all these rights was exposed to them. With startling damage, these rights were all transgressed by their Government.

No single act of officials in high place has more vividly demonstrated the deviation from constitutional government and the trend toward government by force than has the cancelation of the air-mail contracts. air-mail contracts.

President Coolidge, in one of his famous references to the Constitution of the United States, said among other things:

"The Constitution represents a government of law. There is only one other form of authority, and that is a government of force. Americans must make their choice between these two. One signifies justice and liberty; the other tyranny and oppression."

There was a human element in this tragedy for which there is no remedy. The American people have such capacity for recovery; they are so resilient against the blows of misgovernment; they are so steadfast in their faith in the Republican form of government; they adhere so firmly to free institutions; they are so devoted to justice; that they can and they will remove officials who disregard their Constitution and destroy their rights. They have the ability to remedy in time such injuries.

But the American people can never restore to wives, mothers.

have the ability to remedy in time such injuries.

But the American people can never restore to wives, mothers, children, and friends, the dead pilots who gallantly gave all to save the face of the administration.

As usual in emergencies, the Army was called upon. And, as is usual with that proud branch of the Service, it responded with chin up to this call to perform the highly technical work of flying the mail. Army flyers had never had the peculiar training which is indispensable in following airways which traverse mountains, valleys, prairies, deserts, and which pierce fog. snow, rain, as well as sunshine, and which must be flown at night as well as in the day time. Army fliers were not generally acquainted with the equipment for safety in flying under such conditions. The airships which they used lacked many of the devices which experience had proved requisite to the service of the air mail. No criticism of the Army is made for this condition. The type of training for Army flying differs entirely from tion. The type of training for Army flying differs entirely from that for commercial flying. The amount of appropriation made that for commercial flying. The amount of appropriation made by the Government for training these Army pilots had been cut down by Executive order until the actual training time per day for Army pilots was only 30 minutes. Twelve of these brave pilots who undertook to carry the mail, in the brief period of 7 days, perished. This tragic result of Government by force is a warning affecting the conscience as well as the judgment of the people of America.

Every substantial departure from government by law, as distinguished from government by men, creates some injury. It may be confined to loss of property, but it may extend to loss of human life or loss of liberty. Therefore, every attack upon the Constitution ought to be resisted every time that it occurs.

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty" is not a mere high-sounding quotation. We are aware, as many times before we have been aware, that it is a truism. It is one of those stimulating, brief epigrams whose force is brought home in such crises as that of today. As a political philosophy, it is founded upon the experience of all humanity in its climb upward from the Dark Ages to an era of constitutional government.

In Great Britain, when Parliament was subservient to the King, as it was in the days of Henry VIII the rights of the people were as it was in the days of Henry VIII, the rights of the people were crushed. That reign was conspicuous for its bills of attainder. In the reign of George III the American colonists revolted for the reason that constitutional principles, so ancient that none could say when they began to exist, were overridden by a King and subservient Parliament.

Three of these rights are important to remember at the present time, when we have a Congress which obeys practically every request of the Chief Executive, namely:

First. The King could not legislate without the consent of Parliament.

Second. He could impose no tax without the consent of Parliament.

Third. He was bound to conduct the executive administration according to the laws of the land.

The last principle is the one most intimately related to the present situation. Although the first two are involved in the legislation which Congress has passed during the last two sessions.

An administration which is not the guardian of the rights of the people, especially fundamental rights, should be called to account by public opinion. The colonists, excited to revolution by violation of constitutional rights, envisaged a Government here in North America in which rights of citizens should be the paramount concern of the law and of its administrators. They abhorred the exposure of citizens to harm by groundless charges of crime, fraud, collusion, and conspiracy. They divided their Federal structure into three coordinated but independent departments in order to secure, beyond failure if possible, the administration of justice by tribunals which would be free from any tendency of other departments of Government toward force and tyranny. Their economic situation was such that they wrote into the charter of union provisions expressly protecting contracts. They aimed at an obligation which would not be regarded solely as an option to buy out of the agreement at a price to be fixed by trial or to breach by force upon suffering damages to be assessed by court. by court.

Their objective was an obligation that would insure performance of contracts. And that Constitution was framed in the midst of depression and emergency with the high purpose of securing stability and honesty whenever this country should be assailed and governors should be tempted to change the obligation or to correct the contract. tion or to cancel the contract.

One of their main purposes—the first one expressed in the pre-amble, was an indissoluble Union of States. All of the powers amble, was an indissoluble Union of States. All of the powers necessary to form this Union, and to maintain it, were written into that Constitution. Freedom, which is the most stimulating principle of any economic system designed to unify a continent, was established therein. All of the material implements of unity were encouraged; communications by rail, by post roads, post office, telegraph, telephone, aeronautics, radio, and all those other possibilities of the future which form the vision splendid of imaginative and inventive men, were encouraged and made possible by the opportunity and incentive for individual effort of the highest character and individual responsibility guaranteed in that Concharacter and individual responsibility guaranteed in that Concharacter and individual responsibility, guaranteed in that Constitution.

The national meaning of the sacredness of contracts, of the inviolability of property rights, of security in keeping the rewards which society renders for high service, was brought out in bold relief by the ruthless disregard of all of them in the cancelation of the air-mail contracts.

Attainder, confiscation, injustice, cruelty, discrimination—all of these were prohibited—but we have seen them expressed in the cancelation of the air-mail contracts and the subsequent events.

Limitation of time excludes a detailed review of the record leading up to cancelation. Graphically stated, it is as follows:

Immediately after the election in 1932, scheduled air transport companies who had no mail contract organized themselves into a society for the purpose of securing the mail contracts and subsidies which had encouraged the development of the institution under Postmaster General Brown.

The Post Office Department was hombarded by efforturers and

The Post Office Department was bombarded by attorneys and politicians to secure for their interests the opportunity to bid on such contracts. Evidence of the pressure brought to bear includes a statement by one of the operators: "I have bombarded the Post Office Department with all the National Democratic Committee-men, State chairmen, governors, Congressmen, all Democratic Senators, and everyone else in this territory who materially helps keep the Democratic donkey alive."

Mr. William W. Howes, now First Assistant Postmaster General, testified before the special committee with relation to cancelation that people came in and talked and lobbied and complained; that "there were hosts of them"; that they came down like a cloud of grasshoppers.

The apparent opportunity to discredit the preceding administration, and to gratify the urgent requests of those who kept the Democratic donkey alive, excited hasty action.

On January 30 Postmaster General Farley had testified that he had found nothing substantially wrong with the contracts, and that he had ratified them. Within 10 days thereafter the impetuous act of cancelation of all the contracts occurred, to become effective February 19.

The decision to cancel was made within 7 days after that testimony was given. Absolutely nothing had been brought out in the committee affecting this question in the meantime. Therefore, on the record, the action was arbitrary and impetuous. So far as the law went, the Postmaster General disregarded a provision of law which enabled him to cancel upon giving a notice of 45 days and a public hearing. Another law enabled the President to cancel upon giving a notice of 60 days and a public hearing, and upon payment of damages. Both of these laws were disregarded.

exercise of arbitrary power

And again:

"The right to be heard before property is taken or rights or privileges withdrawn, which have been previously legally awarded, is of the essence of due process of law."

Justification for the act was claimed by virtue of section 3950 of a statute passed in 1872, which reads:

"Combinations to prevent bids: No contract for carrying the mail shall be made with any person who has entered, or proposed to enter, into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mail, or who had made any agreement, or given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person not to bid for any such contract.

* * and if any person so offending is a contractor for carrying the mail, his contract may be annulled; and for the first offense the person so offending shall be disqualified to contract for carrying the mail for 5 years, and for the second offense shall be forever disqualified."

This statute did not grant the Postmaster General any authority

This statute did not grant the Postmaster General any authority to try the question of collusion or fraud.

This statute did not invest the Postmaster General with power to annul a mail contract.

If this statute could be interpreted to give the Government the right of a contractor to appeal to the courts for annulment, that course, if followed, would afford the citizen contractor a hearing. But it is silent about procedure.

As interpreted by the Postmaster General this statute inflicts the punishment of cancelation, disqualification for 5 years, or disqualification for life.

Mr. Justice Field, one of the great Chief Justices of the United Mr. Justice Field, one of the great Chief Justices of the United States, in Cummings v. The State of Missouri (4 Wall. 277), held that a statute was in the nature of a bill of attainder, which provided that no person could be a qualified voter "who has ever been in armed hostility to the United States", etc.—and disqualifying him from ever acting as a teacher and from certain other rights common to citizens. This distinguished justice gave us the following definition:

"A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial."

Such is the act of 1872 if interpreted as Postmaster General Farley applied it.

Each and all of the contractors had punishment inflicted on them through this act without a judicial trial.

The attainder was carried out with vengeance. The record shows that on March 8, 1934, the President sent a letter to the Chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads recommending a law disqualifying the contractors, thus:

mending a law disqualitying the contractors, thus:

"Obviously, also, no contracts should be made with any companies, old or new, any of whose officers were party to the obtaining of former contracts under circumstances which were clearly contrary to good faith and public policy."

The bill succeeding that advice made ineligible any person who, or whose predecessor asserted or had any claim against the United States because of a prior annulment of any contract by the Postmarter General. Postmaster General.

Public opinion forced a modification of this tyranny, but the attainder was perpetuated in the temporary contracts and in the legislation finally passed.

The specification for bids for the temporary service disqualified the contractors by the following condition:

"No bids shall be considered or received from any company which previously had a contract for the carriage of air mall and whose contract was annulled under Revised Statutes, section 3950 * * *."

All of the cancelations were expressly made under that section. All of the contractors were disqualified.

Specially skilled executives and officials of transport companies possessed of the knowledge which years of experience had given them were forced out of the air-mail business, and great transport companies were required to either reorganize or to create independent executivations.

pendent organizations.

Finally, during the last week, Congress has passed a revision of the air-mail laws which perpetuates the tyranny and attainder by language artfully designed to conceal from the people its vengeful

"Sec. 3 (g). Authority is hereby conferred upon the Postmaster General to provide and pay for the carriage of mail by air in conformity with the terms of any contract let by him prior to the passage of this act, or which may be let pursuant to a call for competitive bids therefor issued prior to the passage of this act, and to extend any such contract for an additional period or periods not exceeding 9 months in the aggregate at a rate of compensation not exceeding that established by this act nor that provided for in the original contract: Provided, That no such contract may be so extended unless the contractor shall agree in writing to comply with all the provisions of this act during the extended period of the contract."

Nine months added to the term of the temporary contract is quite sufficient to consolidate the position of advantage of the Government over its citizens based on the attainder. But power, fed upon power, was not content with that. By another section the time of the attainder was made unlimited, thus:

Section 6, giving the I.C.C. (one of the five different departments of Government granted power over this small industry sufficient to ruin it) certain jurisdiction provides, among other things, in (c):

in (c):

"Any contract which may be hereafter * * * extended pursuant to this act, and which has been satisfactorily performed by the contractor during its initial or extended period, shall thereafter be continued in effect for an indefinite period * * *."

The power to reduce rates and fix conditions and to terminate are made optional in the Government; but the attainder is not optional. It shall be continued.

This output to have been adequate wresking of vengence; but

This ought to have been adequate wreaking of vengeance; but it was not so considered. A complex of attainder excited the authors of this legislation to write into it the following: "SEC. 7. (d) No person shall be qualified to enter upon the performance of or thereafter to hold an air-mail contract, (1) if at or after the time specified for the commencement of mail transportation under such contract such person is (or, if a partnership, association, or corporation, has a member, officer, or director, or an employee performing general managerial duties that is) an individual who has theretofore entered into any unlawful combination to prevent the making of any bids for carrying the mails * * *."

Having proclaimed the original contractors guilty en masse, in absentia, without trial, this legislation is the superlative attainder of them.

Meantime those who met at Armegeddon have obtained their objective—they have ejected those who were in and injected those who were out.

objective—they have ejected those who were in and injected those who were out.

Efforts to preserve the status quo pending an investigation of aeronautics by a commission were flattened out under the roller of parliamentary proceedings. Permanent change of policy and service were effected before investigation.

The great underlying stimulus which the McNary-Watres Act furnished for the amazing development of the passenger service was destroyed. This was a subsidy which gave financial help and inducement for development of great ships, increased number of seats, 2-way radio, employment of copilots, and other variables promoting safety, speed, efficiency, and comfort. Now, the sole objective is carriage of the mail as cheaply as possible.

National defense is not mentioned. The objective of cheapness is opposed to this policy.

Economy is frustrated by the bidding plan which encourages reduced overhead and operating expense and curtailed development to get within the sacrificial contracts and save money. This tends to defeat the rapid progress toward self-support made under the McNary-Watres Act, under which the rates were reduced in 4 years from $1.09 per airplane mile to 39 cents.

The change in policy represented by the separation of operators and manufacturers which the new law demands palsies the arm of mechanical genius, by depriving it of the laboratory of the air, and cripples the operators by the loss of financial support from the manufacturers.

The only good thing in the act, namely, the Investigating the manufacturers.

The only good thing in the act, namely, the Investigating Commission, is rendered futile by the—Permanent wrongs done the original contractors and their stockholders.

The vested rights consolidated in the new contractors.

The abandonment of a progressive policy in aeronautics.

The commitment to cheapness.

The breaking up of unit management of transcontinental

The divorcing of construction and operation.

The reduction of service to an arbitrary limit of airplane miles.

The encouragement of speculative bidding by giving 30 days after opening of bids to any successful bidder in which to qualify for mail services

The numerous reorganizations excited by the vindictive features of the law.

The arbitrary limitation after July 1, 1938, of the aggregate cost

The arbitrary limitation after July 1, 1938, of the aggregate cost to anticipated revenue.

The arbitrary limitation after October 1, 1934, of each contractor to one primary route and to only three contracts.

These and many other provisions of the 19 sections of the act preceding the creation of the Investigating Commission will produce their effect notwithstanding the investigation.

However unfortunate may seem the material and intimate results of the cancelation of the air-mail contracts and the acts which have succeeded that, the poignancy of the event was the grave and serious doubt excited in the minds of men and women of the purpose of the new deal, which is neither Republican nor Democratic. Is it an emergency policy? Or is it a permanent departure from free institutions and a surreptitious establishment, without the knowledge or consent of the people of ideas of government which are in conflict with the breeding, the traditions, and the settled purposes of the American people?

Have we already arrived at government by force rather than government by law?

I have faith in the civic virtue and the recuperative powers of the people. From colonial times to the present they have suffered intermittently attempts to deprive them of their rights and their liberties. In the paroxysms of their distress they have always crushed the agency of their misery. So the people will again down their oppressors and recover their constitutional safeguards. The rule of the "brain trust" will be short. The restoration of law and justice will be made more stable and enduring than ever before.

PROBLEMS OF THE DAY-ADDRESS BY SENATOR M'NARY

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a thoughtful and illuminating discussion of the problems of the times by the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] delivered over the radio on June 8, 1934.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

The Republican Party has a tremendous task ahead, made the greater because of the currently unsettled condition of the country. To meet the task courageously and hopefully demands party harmony and cohesion of efforts.

party harmony and cohesion of efforts.

But the Republican Party while steadfastly adhering to its advocates of sound principles and sane fundamentals must nevertheless, in my opinion, not completely subvert the liberalization called for by present-day developments. There is no need, nor is there a demand that the party depart from the tenable grounds of methods that made this country great. The liberality I speak of is more within than outside the Republican Party. As I see it, it is a party matter. The Republicans of the conservative, industrial East must make concessions to the Republicans of the more liberal and less nonulous West and Midwest. In this the more liberal and less populous West and Midwest. In this way will come the party solidarity which will mean success.

The word Republican lends itself to many political variations and varieties of definitions without losing its original concept as a party of the people and for the people. Environmental conditions, climatic, soil, and economic forces produce mental types that must be coordinated if the party is to take its accustomed leadership in forming American political contents. tomed leadership in forming American policies and controlling

American policies,

The new deal and those of its policies which are fallacious

The new deal and those of its policies which are fallacious are on the ebb tide. More than ever before, it is the province and it is the duty of Republicans to see that the country is returned to sound principles and governmental fundamentals. It must be obvious to everyone that only by this return can the United States again be put solidly upon a sound economic footing. The country is questioning more and more where the new deal is leading us. Congress is questioning. Business, labor, and agriculture, choked by governmental regulations, are bewildered under governmental regimentation. Those rights and liberties of individuals for which the Republican Party always has fought, are being invaded; one might almost say, discarded.

The administration's program for permanency of experiments is under attack.

is under attack.

There is no doubt in my mind that because of this effort to make legislative experiments permanent the country is uncertain, commerce is choked, money is frozen, and recovery, generally, is being retarded.

Still another deterrent to recovery is the departure of the administration from sound money. Despite campaign pledges that the Democrats would maintain a sound currency "at all hazards" one of the earliest actions of the administration was to take us off the gold standard. This was followed, closely, by devaluating the dollar. Governmental contracts were no longer of the value they dollar. Governmental contracts were no longer of the value they held when made. The Government repudiated its promise to pay its manifold obligations in gold. These actions served to further the uncertainties entertained by business. No business man yet feels that he can enter into a long-term contract. He does not know what the value of the dollar will be.

The Republican Party has promised a sound currency. The difference between it and the Democratic Party is that the Republican Party has always maintained sound money. It is a difference of which business men must be thoroughly cognizant today.

It is into this complex situation that a cohesive Republican Party must step. As a party, Republicans for almost 78 years have had more to offer the American people than any other political organization. Its practical methods of attaining good government have been rewarded by the people making it responsible for the conduct of the Government for 55 of the 78 years of its existence. The party has a record of past achievements of which it is justly proud. United, it can go forward in the interests of the American people to still more and greater accomplishments.

In the session of Congress now drawing toward a close the Republican Party has been mindful of the people's problem at all times. In the face of an overpowering opposition it has sought to protect them by whole-heartedly supporting Democratic methods of possible good and by rightfully opposing projected panaceas of doubtful good. It has refrained from overcriticism, but it has not hesitated, nor will it in the future hesitate, to criticize when the occasion warrants. Criticism is wholesome when it points to a better way or discloses the fallacies in a method proposed. Partisanship can no more be allowed to perish than the party system of government can be abandoned. Without it, the country would perish. This Government is a government of political parties, and a political party necessarily is a partisan organization. Yet it cannot be charged that the Republicans in Congress have been unreasonably partisan against the present administration. They have cooperated fully and frankly in the adoption of such sound projects the administration advanced.

The Republican Party has not nor will it support unsound legislation to the detriment of the country. We have not sought to delay administration policies when they were deemed beneficial. Indeed, the majority of the Republican Members of the Senate and the House have from time to time supported administration measures which, in their opinion, were calculated to assist the country out of this stubborn and stifling depression. There have been no unnecessary speeches. There has been nothing savoring of a filibuster. The party has not criticized solely to be destructive. It has been sportsmanlike throughout.

tive. It has been sportsmanlike throughout.

Republicans, however, would be unfaithful to their trust and to the people's welfare if they had not warned the country that the President's reciprocal tariff proposal involved a great danger to American industry, labor, and the farmer. The bill is a bundle of legislative dynamite. It is a menace to small industry, a potential destroyer of the American market. destroyer of the American market.

legislative dynamite. It is a menace to small industry, a potential destroyer of the American market.

By a stroke of the Presidential pen one industry could be put out of business for the benefit of another; one section of the country impoverished for the enrichment of another. All business would be at the mercy of an Executive order. A life or death sentence could be imposed by one man's judgment, unchecked by any agency of Government.

Who can doubt what will happen to a number of industries? Many already have been declared by the administration to be inefficient. Secretary Wallace has said that the time has come for the United States to stop trying by the protective tariff to keep alive the weak and inefficient industries. Carried out, that means the death sentence for many whose efficiency would be determined by those unfamiliar with the business they conduct.

The President's proposal cannot be said to be a measure in the interest of reemployment. If our export trade were restored to its peak of $5,000,000,000 in 1929 it would mean the absorption of only about 500,000 workers, about 4 percent of the present unemployed. It can hardly be maintained that it is a measure to help the farmer. It would place him in the position of losing some of the rich domestic market at the expense of trying to get a little of the foreign markets. Some authorities have estimated that the enactment of the tariff bill will mean a 25-percent lowering of tariffs on the principal farm products.

This can be of little more benefit to the farmer than the ad-

This can be of little more benefit to the farmer than the ad-

This can be of little more benefit to the farmer than the administration of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which is but another in the series of inconsistencies of the new deal. This act was initiated by the Roosevelt administration as one of the main supports of its recovery program. It was based primarily on the assumption that overproduction was the chief cause of the collapse of agriculture. It proposed, first, for a curtailment of farm crops. It levied a processing tax as a sort of bonus for farmers to cooperate. We began to spend nearly $800,000,000 to take approximately 40,000,000 acres of farm land out of production. The Public Works Administration set aside $20,000,000 of its huge relief reserves to buy marginal lands. About the same time we entered upon trade relations with Soviet Russia. We were

The Public Works Administration set aside $20,000,000 of its huge relief reserves to buy marginal lands. About the same time we entered upon trade relations with Soviet Russia. We were expecting to negotiate with the Soviet Government to increase our foreign trade. While expressing this hope, Russia kept on increasing its own products of wheat, corn, oats, barley, and rye, an action which leaves very little of a market in prospect for the American farmer. This part of the agricultural program was the first step toward socialization of agriculture.

Agricultural exports increased considerably during the World War and declined thereafter, but were somewhat above the level of the years preceding the war until 1929–30. Since that year there has been a marked decline in agricultural exports, but the value of the exports, because of lower prices, has declined much more than the quantity. The trends in exports have varied considerably as between the different commodities. Exports of foodstuffs increased greatly during the war years as a result of a decline in European production and increased European demand growing out of war conditions. Since the war exports of foodstuffs in general have fallen off sharply. Before 1929 this was largely due to the recovery of agricultural production in European importing countries and to the expansion of agriculture in agricultural surplus countries. Since 1929 the decline in foodpean importing countries and to the expansion of agriculture in agricultural surplus countries. Since 1929 the decline in food-stuffs exports has continued, owing partly to some further increase of production and partly to the reduction of consumption in importing countries, which has resulted from the reduction of purchasing power and the rise of trade barriers. Wheat and pork exports have been particularly affected, both by increased production in European importing countries and by increased trade barriers in the principal foreign markets.

Then came the Bankhead acreage-retirement bill, substituting compulsion for voluntary action on the part of cotton growers. The act fixes the maximum amount of cotton any individual planter may produce. Punishment is provided for violation, Such a measure conceivably might work in the South, principally because there is so much tenant farming in that section of the country. But, in my opinion, it will not work among the individualistic farmers of the Northwest. This administration must not seek to fasten such a doctrine on them. The farmer of the Northwest needs protection, not more control.

The Republican Party has established that protection in the ast. Given power, it will do so again, shaking off the fear and The Republican Party has established that protection in the past. Given power, it will do so again, shaking off the fear and hesitancy which now grip business, generally, from the pulp and paper mills of the great Northwest to the textile mills of New England, the beet-sugar interests of the Middle West, and the farmers of the entire Nation. The Republican Party is not so reactionary that it cannot advance, but it is, and will continue to be, conservative enough for safety for everyone.

That has been the party record since its birth. Its policies have stood the test of time and actual application. A political party cannot survive which does not deal with questions of time. The Republican Party will not shirk this duty. As in the past, it will not seek popularity by adopting popular issues or passing fads. Common sense will dictate its course.

The late President Coolidge said in 1924, "Party means political cooperation not as an end in itself but as a means, an instrument of government. If founded upon a great moral principle and directed with scrupulous regard for its integrity, it cannot fail to sweep onward and upward, advancing always steadily and surely, a mighty constructive force, a glorified bearer of progress. That is what the Republican Party always has been and is today."

Ten years have not wrought any changes in what Mr. Coolidge said in 1924, and I leave this message with the Republicans of the Nation in the hope that it will arouse that cooperation which will insure Republican Party success.

THE JUDICIAL OPINIONS OF SENATOR THOMPSON

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article in the Nebraska Law Bulletin, May 1934, by Charles Sumner Lobingier on the judicial opinions of Mr. Justice Thompson, now a distinguished Member of the United States Senate, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Thompson].

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE JUDICIAL OPINIONS OF MR. JUSTICE THOMPSON By Charles Sumner Lobingier 1

In 1881 a young lawyer named WILLIAM H. THOMPSON came with his older brother, John R., from Iowa and opened law offices in Grand Island, Nebr. Both were distinguished among the Nebraska lawyers of that day in having law-school diplomas from the State University of Iowa. The elder brother became district judge, and the younger gradually added to the theoretical knowl-Judge, and the younger gradually added to the theoretical knowledge acquired in the law school through intensive training which comes only from long and continuous practice in the courts. For, while he engaged in other avocations—politics, business, civic activities—his one vocation was the practice of law; and he is today probably the oldest active practitioner but one<sup>2</sup> in the State.

In March 1924 the death of Justice Charles H. Aldrich left a vacancy on the supreme court which the Governor was called upon to fill. The incumbent of that office, then as now, was Charles W. Bryan, who, while not a lawyer, has shown unusual shrewdness in dealing with legal matters. His appointments to the district bench, for example, have included at least two—Hastings and Broady—who are still serving and are counted among the best in trict bench, for example, have included at least two—Hastings and Broady—who are still serving and are counted among the best in the State. For this supreme court vacancy he selected this veteran lawyer of Grand Island, with 43 years of practice in Nebraska, and appointed him on April 15. Judge Thompson qualified at once, was elected in the following November for the full term of 6 years, and served, in all, nearly 7 years. During that period he wrote a large number of opinions, many of them on important questions, which are reported in volumes 112 to 120 of the Nebraska Supreme Court Reports. When he began writing them he had already passed the psalmist's limit of threescore and ten, and they represent the accumulated experience and legal wisdom of they represent the accumulated experience and legal wisdom of his ripened years. It ought to be not only interesting but in-structive to the bar and people of Nebraska to segregate and pre-serve in one place this rare and unique collection of judicial precedents.

Judge Thompson's wide experience and knowledge of human Judge Thompson's wide experience and knowledge of human nature have enabled him to take a practical, common-sense view in construing the law and the rights of parties. This is exemplified in his opinions in Aynes v. Bentz (114 Nebr. 226), State v. Irrigation District (116 Nebr. 373); and in construing Darr's Will (114 Nebr. 116), where the statute was hailed as a relief from "the strict application of common-law canons." His application of the criminal law in cases like Pointer v. State (114 Nebr. 13), Ball v. State (114 Nebr. 117), State v. Swedland (114 Nebr. 280); Green v. State (116 Nebr. 635), and Newton v. State (119 Nebr. 583), disclosed an endeavor to reach the merits without undue stress of technical rules. On the other hand, such cases as Bundy v. State (114 Nebr. 121), Wagner v. State (114 Nebr. 171), Osborne v. State (115 Nebr. 65), Balley v. State (115 Nebr. 65), Balley v. State (115 (115 Nebr. 65), Bailey v. State (115 Nebr. 65), Bailey v. State (115 Nebr. 77), Brown v. State (115 Nebr. 325), Bourne v. State (116 Nebr. 313), and Lindley v. State

(117 Nebr. 597) show an equal solicitude for the constitutional rights of the accused. Thus in Graeme v. State (118 Nebr. 113), a prosecution for grand larceny, he held it reversible error to admit evidence of another offense so foreign to the issues, as the evidence of another offense so foreign to the issues, as the operation of a still.

Many of Judge Thompson's opinions deal with questions of constitutional law and so are especially helpful to him in his career as a Senator. In State v. Smith (114 Nebr. 653) he held that "bread and water diet", as part of the penalty for violating the prohibition law, did not constitute a "cruel and unusual punishment." In Sheridan v. Hand (114 Nebr. 813) he ruled that "due process of law" required notice to a nonresident of a proceeding to open a public road over his land. But in Herzoff v. Hommel (120 Nebr. 475) he held that the clause in the State automobile law limiting to 90 days the continuance available to a nonresident autoist in the State, while unconstitutional because discriminating between residents and nonresidents, was insufficient to invalidate autoist in the State, while unconstitutional because discriminating between residents and nonresidents, was insufficient to invalidate the law as a whole. Habeas corpus was held unavailable in McElhaney v. Fenton (115 Nebr. 299), where the sentence, though excessive, was rendered in a cause of which the court had jurisdiction. The remedy was appeal. Commitment for unjustified refusal to pay alimony was declared not imprisonment for debt in Jensen v. Jensen (119 Nebr. 469). Conviction of a felony did not deprive the convict of his right to sue, according to the decision in Bosteder v. Duling (115 Nebr. 557).

The act providing for testing tuberculosis in cattle was upheld in State v. Wallace (117 Nebr. 588). Municipal corporations afford the subject of numerous other opinions of Judge Thompson. That in Whitta v. Connor (114 Nebr. 526), gives a village ordinance the effect of "a legislative determination", and one challenging it assumes the onus probandi. But in Pierce v. Schramm (116 Nebr. 263), he pointed out that the municipal council could not "act arbitrarily and deny to one citizen privileges which it grants "act arbitrarily and deny to one citizen privileges which it grants to another under like conditions." A license tax of $15 per day on a "rolling store" was upheld in Erwin v. Omaha (118 Nebr. 331), and an intangible property tax in Mehrens v. Greenleaf (119 Nebr. 82), though the State constitution prohibited the legis-(119 Nebr. 82), though the State constitution prohibited the legislative imposition of taxes on municipal corporations, their inhabitants or property. Bute v. Hamilton County (113 Nebr. 230), upheld the State's power to tax shares in a foreign corporation whose capital stock was taxed in the State of its domicile. Hardin v. Trust Co. (119 Nebr. 307), construes the uniform negotiable instruments of law and defines the phrase "holder in due course." A mother who signed a note with her son was held not to be an "accommodation endorser" in Farmers' Nat'l Bank v. Ohman (112 Nebr. 491). The former doctrine of the Nebraska Supreme Court that a check is an equitable assignment of the drawer's (112 Nebr. 491). The former doctrine of the Nebraska Supreme Court that a check is an equitable assignment of the drawer's funds, was finally repudiated by Judge Thompson's opinion in Harrison State Bank v. First State Bank (116 Nebr. 456). The State law penalizing the receipt of public money by banks without furnishing security was applied in Dovey v. State (116 Nebr. 533), to those organized under the national banking law. The workmen's compensation law was construed and applied by Judge Thompson in Schlesselman v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (112 Nebr. 332); Schroeder v. Holt County (113 Nebr. 736); O'Donnell v. Ice Machine Co. (114 Nebr. 9); Gale v. Amusement Co. (114 Nebr. 432); Hastings v. Saunders (114 Nebr. 475); Palmer v. Saunders County (117 Nebr. 484); Matthew v. Crancer Co. (117 Nebr. 805); Sloan v. Harrington (117 Nebr. 809); Lincoln Packing Co. v. Coe (120 Nebr. 299); the bank guaranty law (declared unconstitutional after Judge Thompson had left the bench) in State v. American Exchange Bank (112 Nebr. 834); State v. Citizens' Bank (114 Nebr. 867); and Kuhl v. State Bank (115 Nebr. 848); the State drainage law in Miller v. (112 Nebr. 834); State v. Citizens' Bank (114 Nebr. 867); and Kuhl v. State Bank (115 Nebr. 848); the State drainage law in Miller v. Drainage Dist. (112 Nebr. 206); Shepherdson v. Fagin (116 Nebr. 806); and Compton v. Drainage Dist. (120 Nebr. 100); the homestead law in David City B. & L. Ass'n v. Fast (114 Nebr. 161); and Anderson v. Cusack (115 Nebr. 643); and the act for the determination of heirship, providing a limited form of administration, 2 years after the decedent's death. In re Robinson (119 Nebr. 185). He wrote opinions in several insurance cases—Coryell v. Old Colony Ins. Co. (118 Nebr. 312), explaining the difference between a friendly and a hostile fire and holding the insurer liable for the latter; Kernan v. Modern Woodmen (120 Nebr. 333), upholding the right of a mutual benefit certificate holder to change the beneficiary; and Messing v. Inc. Co. (119 Nebr. 36), construing the statute which authorizes the taxation of an attorney's fee for the insured in actions on a policy to apply to a proceeding to vacate the judgment in such an action and to include a fee in the supreme court.

to apply to a proceeding to vacate the judgment in such an action and to include a fee in the supreme court.

A notable decision in promotion of the due administration of justice is that in State v. First Bank (114 Nebr. 423), to the effect that an agreement to pay witnesses by a party is contrary to public policy and void. Kelley v. Adams County (113 Nebr. 377) applies the rule that a juror must derive his knowledge of a case from anidence regularly produced at the trial and their informaapplies the rule that a juror must derive his knowledge of a case from evidence regularly produced at the trial and that information otherwise acquired vitlates the verdict, following and quoting, Falls City v. Sperry (68 Nebr. 420), per Lobingier, C. Sallander v. Life Ins. Co. (112 Nebr. 629) is notable for modifying the evidence rule "that you must either produce a document when it is called for or never." Quinton v. State (112 Nebr. 634) upholds the trial court in discharging a jury containing one found to have been biased in a party's favor and ordering a retrial. A party's failure to testify in a civil case to matters peculiarly within his knowledge raises the presumption that such testimony would be self-disserving, under the doctrine announced in Talich v. Marvel (115 Nebr. 255) and Shepard v. Hamaker (120 Nebr. 166). The rule that long-continued practical construction of a statute by legislative and executive officials will not be interfered with unless clearly wrong is applied in State v. Bryan (112 Nebr. 692). The right of a nonsynodical congregation to discharge its pastor is upheld in St. Paul's Lutheran Church v. Stein (115 Nebr. 114). That the Nebraska trial courts are in need of supervision is indicated by the opinions of Judge Thompson in Pembroke v. State (117 Nebr. 759), reversing a conviction of murder in the second degree for want of any evidence to sustain it; and in La Ferry v. R. Co. (114 Nebr. 218), reversing a judgment for $20,000 against defendant in each case for "want of any evidence to support it." Gaines v. Warrick (113 Nebr. 235) overrules all previous Nebraska decisions to the effect that a special appearance, objecting to the lack of jurisdiction, shown by the record, is waived by answering; and State v. State Bank (116 Nebr. 223) overrules the rather famous decision in Globe Pub. Co. v. State Bank (41 Nebr. 175) (which had overruled seven previous decisions) to the effect that pending actions are affected by the repeal of a statute. Nor were all of Judge Thompson's opinions majority ones. In Fischer v. Marsh (113 Nebr. 15) he wrote a vigorous opinion, fortified by authority, dissenting from the majority decision that the State could not purchase supplies for its gasoline stations without a special appropriation therefor. He also dissented from the majority opinion, as finally adopted, in the hard-fought case of Central National Bank v. First National Bank (115 Nebr. 444), where the difficult process of tracing trust funds was involved, and in Holst v. Warner (116 Nebr. 208). By dissenting in the important case of Engen v. Union State Bank (118 Nebr. 105), Judge Thompson opened the way to a result not only highly creditable to himself but also beneficial to the jurisprudence of the whole country.

The other justices concurred in holding that the treaty with Sweden and Norway, which provided that "subjects of the contracting parties in the respective States may freely dispose of their property", rendered inapplicable to a Norwegian subj

Where the evidence was of such a character as to cause them unnecessary mortification, he discussed it in general terms or in some such way as not to make it common property. So in the divorce case of Ellis v. Ellis (115 Nebr. 685) he observed:

"We owe it to each and all connected with this unfortunate situation, not to set forth in detail, the facts reflected by the record, leading to our conclusion."

His own opinions are never overlong; extensive quotation, either from the testimony or from other opinions and textbooks. His own opinions are never overlong; he contents himself usually with summarizing the evidence and citing the authorities. There is no attempt to make a false display of industry or learning.

Judge Thompson retired voluntarily from the supreme court at the close of 1930, intending to remain for the rest of his life what his colleague, Senator Norris, later declared him to be, "a very high-class citizen." But as it proved, it was less than 2½ years before he was again called to an official station. Like the veteran Judge Maxwell, of the court's earlier days, Judge Thompson, after leaving the bench, entered the Halls of Congress. He is now serving in the United States Senate with credit to himself and honor to the State and in that distinguished gress. He is now serving in the United States Senate with credit to himself and honor to the State, and in that distinguished body he will long be remembered as the one who, like Cato in the Roman Senate, took on new burdens at 80. But to Nebraskans he will best be known as the author of the extensive and valuable body of opinions which we have here so imperfectly reviewed and which constitute his lasting monument.

THE DARROW REPORT ON THE N.R.A.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter I have received from Mr. Walter F. Cox, chairman of the committee of arbitration and appeal for Louisiana and Mississippi on the code of fair competition for the ice industry.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> CODE OF FAIR COMPETITION FOR THE ICE INDUSTRY New Orleans, La., June 10, 1934.

Hon. HUBERT D. STEPHENS.

Senator State of Mississippi,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.
DEAR SIR: If the entire Darrow report and criticism of N.R.A. is as ill-founded and as full of errors as that portion relating to the ice industry, then the entire report is wholly valueless. For instance, he claims that the code was made by large companies and that it is operated by large companies. The facts absolutely dispute this statement.

Official records, which are available to anyone on request, show that when the Government solled on industry to prequest, show that when the Government called on industry to prepare a code a representative group of ice manufacturers composed of the following were called together to prepare a tentative code:

L. W. Dawley, Southern United Ice Co., Jackson, Miss., G.P.E.; Hermes Gautier, Pascagoula, Miss., G.P.E. and I.O.; B. C. Brown, New Orleans, La.; I.O.; S. H. Henderson, Ferriday, La., I.O.; J. B. Johnston, Eupora, Miss., I.O.; Lex Arnold, Sardis, Miss., I.O.; I. B. Isenberg, Greenville, Miss., I.O.; E. J. Lenz, Greenville, Miss., G.P.E.; H. R. Bodemuller, Louisiana Public Utility Co., Lafayette, La., G.P.E.; R. G. Watkins, Memphis, Tenn., G.P.E.; D. G. King, Mississippi Utilities Co., Gulfport, Miss., G.P.E.; N. A. M. Jackson, Maringouin, La., I.O.; George Breisch, Leland, Miss., I.O.; George B. Morgan, Gulf States Utilities Co., Lake Charles, La., G.P.E.; Charles Behre, Pelican Ice Co., New Orleans, La., I.O.; George B. Elton, Baton Rouge, La., I.O.; S. P. Simone, New Orleans, La., I.O.; J. L. Blackwell, Vicksburg, Miss., I.O.; Charles H. Free, Louisiana Ice & Coal Co., New Orleans, La., G.P.E.; Walter F. Coxe, New Orleans, trade association executive.

(G.P.E.—Group property executive; I.O.—Independent operator.)

You will note that there are 12 independent operators and 8 group company executives.

This association, by the way, is made up of about 60 percent independent operators.

The code as finally adonted was essentially that produced by company operators.

The code as finally adopted was essentially that produced by this group of men. The draft made by this group was, of course, revised and changed, but it was not fundamentally changed from what this group felt would be a fair and just code to the industry and the buying public and the one that was finally approved by the President on October 3, 1933.

The charge is further made that the code authority in Washington is dominated by the group interests. The code authority chairman is one Mount Taylor, for many years an operator of a 15-ton ice plant in Stephenville, Tex. Other members of the code authority are Ralph J. Hancock, independent operator, of Marietta, Ga.; M. H. Robbins, San Francisco, Calif., group company operator; Leslie C. Smith, Chicago, trade association executive; P. A. Weatherred, formerly of Houston, Tex., trade association executive; R. C. Suhn, Cleveland, group company executive.

The regional advisers are E. L. Bennett, Boston, Mass., group company executive; B. C. Brown, New Orleans, independent operator; H. W. Caldwell, Atlanta, independent operator; J. E. Collins, Tacoma, Wash., independent operator; C. W. Eggert, Denver, Colo., independent operator; R. C. Rankin, Lawrence, Kans., group company executive; A. G. Riddell, independent operator; J. W. Scott; and P. A. Weatherred, trade association executive.

The Darrow Board criticisms of the ice code were, briefly:

(1) That article XI relative to control of production is monopolistic. The fact was not mentioned that this industry's greatest competition comes from mechanical refrigeration and not from other ice plants, and that the Government, through the T.V.A., has appropriated several millions of dollars to spend in promoting the sale of small mechanical refrigerators. This program on the part of the Government itself is going to drive out of the ice business many small independent manufacturers.

(2) That the ice meantfacturers by selling ice at the platform business many small independent manufacturers.

(2) That the ice manufacturers by selling ice at the platform lower than delivered is discriminating against his dealers. The fallacy of this argument is offset elsewhere in the Darrow report by the statement that in the pressing industry there should be a lower price for cash-and-carry trade. It is a self-evident fact that the cost of selling where the customer comes and gets ice is considerably less than when it is delivered to the home. The difference in price at the platform and from delivery vehicles is not only made in instances where independent dealers are delivering ice but in cities where there are no independent dealers, and the ice company delivers its own product.

In considering the Darrow report and the effect of codes upon

In considering the Darrow report and the effect of codes upon industry, the following facts are pertinent: 1. One year ago the average wage paid by the ice companies about 15 cents an hour. 2. Today the average wage being paid by ice companies is about  $27\frac{1}{2}$  cents an hour.

3. A year ago we were employing 30 percent less labor than is being employed today.

4. Last year 870,000 of the 1,200,000 tons of ice sold to Louisiana-Mississippi people were sold at prices of $2 per ton below the prevailing market prices.

This year there are no large destructive ice wars in existence.
 The price of ice has not been raised one-half of 1 percent as compared with the lowest prices reached during the depression. We hope that the statement of these facts will serve to remove any misconceptions that might have arisen in view of the unsup-ported charges made by the Darrow Board.

Yours very truly,

COMMITTEE OF ARBITRATION AND APPEAL,

WALTER F. COXE, Chairman.

THE UNKNOWN SOLDIER-TRIBUTE BY HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a sermon preached at the Riverside Church, New York, November 12, 1933, by Harry Emerson Fosdick, entitled "The Unknown Soldier," delivered on November 12, 1933. This is a remarkable address upon a subject of vital interest to the people of this country.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be

printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It was an inspired idea to deposit the body of an unrecognized soldier in the national memorial of the Great War; and yet, when one stops to think of it, how strange it is! Yesterday, in Rome, Paris, London, Washington, and how many capitals besides, the most stirring military pageantry, decked with flags and exultant with music, centered about the bodies of unknown soldiers. That is strange. So this is the outcome of western civilization, which for nearly 2,000 years has had Christ, and in which democracy and science have had their widest opportunity, that the whole Nation pauses, its acclamations rise, its colorful pageantry centers, its patriotic oratory flourishes, around the unrecognizable body of a soldier blown to bits on the battlefield. That is strange. It was the war lords themselves who picked him out as a symbol of war. So be it! As a symbol of war we accept him from their hands.

You may not say that I, being a Christian minister, did not know him. I knew him well. From the north of Scotland, where they planted the sea with mines, to the trenches of France I lived with him and his fellows—British, Australian, New Zealander, French, American. The places where he fought, from Ypres through the Somme battlefield to the southern trenches, I saw while he still was there. I lived with him in dugouts, in the trenches, and on destroyers searching for submarines off the shores of France. Short of actual battle, from training camp to hospital, from the fleet to No-Man's Land, I, a Christian minister, saw the war. Moreover, I, a Christian minister, participated in it. I, too, was persuaded that it was a war to end war. I, too, was a guilible fool and thought that modern war could somehow make the world safe for democracy. They sent men like me to explain to the Army the high meanings of war and, by every argument we could command, to strengthen their morale. I wonder if I ever spoke to the Unknown Soldier.

One night, in a ruined barn behind the lines, I spoke at sunset

One night, in a ruined barn behind the lines, I spoke at sunset to a company of hand-grenaders who were going out that night to raid the German trenches. They told me that on the average no more than half a company came back from such a raid, and I, a minister of Christ, tried to nerve them for their suicidal and murderous endeavor. I wonder if the Unknown Soldier was in that here there wight that barn that night.

Once in a dug-out which in other days had been a French wine cellar I bade Godspeed at 2 in the morning to a detail of men going out on patrol in No-Man's Land. They were a fine company of American boys, fresh from home. I recall that, huddled in the dark, underground chamber, they sang:

"Lead, kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom, Lead thou me on. The night is dark, and I am far from home-Lead thou me on."

The night is dark, and I am far from home—Lead thou me on."

Then, with my admonitions in their ears, they went down from the second- to the first-line trenches and so out to No-Man's Land. I wonder if the Unknown Soldier was in that dug-out.

You here this morning may listen to the rest of this sermon or not—as you please. It makes much less difference to me than usual what you do or think. I have an account to settle in this pulpit today between my soul and the Unknown Soldier.

He is not so utterly unknown as we sometimes think. Of one thing we can be certain: He was sound of mind and body. We made sure of that. All primitive gods who demanded bloody sacrifices on their altars insisted that the animals should be of the best, without mar or hurt. Turn to the Old Testament and you find it written there: "Whether male or female, he shall offer it without blemish before Jehovah." The god of war still maintains the old demand. These men to be sacrificed upon his altars were sound and strong. Once there might have been guessing about that. Not now. Now we have medical science, which tests the prospective soldier's body. Now we have psychiatry, which tests his mind. We used them both to make sure that these sacrifices for the god of war were without blemish. Of all insane and suicidal procedures, can you imagine anything madder than this, that all the nations should pick out their best, use their scientific skill to make certain that they are the best, and then in one mighty holocaust offer 10,000,000 of them on the battlefields of one war?

I have an account to settle between my soul and the Unknown Soldier. I deceived him. I deceived myself first, unwittingly, and

Of another thing we may be fairly sure concentre the Target and the compensate of the same than the concentre of the target and the concentre of the compensate for the compens

Of another thing we may be fairly sure concerning the Unknown Soldier—that he was a conscript. He may have been a volunteer, but on an actuarial average he probably was a conscript. The long arm of the Nation reached into his home, touched him on the shoulder, saying, "You must go to France and fight." If someone asks why, in this "land of the free", conscription was used, the answer is, of course, that it was necessary if we were to win the war. Certainly it was. And that reveals something terrific about modern war. We cannot get soldlers—not enough of them, not the right kind of them—without forcing them. When a nation goes to war now, the entire nation must go. That means that the youth of the nation must be compelled, coerced, conscripted to fight.

When you stand in Arlington before the tomb of the Unknown Soldier on some occasion, let us say, when the panoply of military glory decks it with music and color, are you thrilled? I am not—not any more. I see there the memorial of one of the saddest things in American history, from the continued repetition of which may God deliver us!—the conscripted boy.

He was a son, the hope of the family, and the Nation coerced him. He was a lover and the deepest ambition in his life was not desire for military glory or hatred of another country or any other idiotic thing like that, but love of a girl and hope of a home. He was, maybe, a husband and a father and already, by that slow and beautiful gradation which all fathers know, he had felt the deep ambitions of his heart being transferred from himself to his children. And the Nation coerced him. I am not blaming him; he was conscripted. I am not blaming the Nation; it never could have won the war without conscription. I am simply saying that that is modern war, not by accident but by it never could have won the war without conscription. I am simply saying that that is modern war, not by accident but by necessity, and with every repetition that will be more and more the attribute of war.

Last time they coerced our sons. Next time, of course, they will coerce our daughters, and in any future war they will absolutely conscript all property. Old-fashioned Americans, born out of the long tradition of liberty, some of us have trouble with these new coercions used as short cuts to get things done, but nothing else compares with this inevitable, universal, national conscription in compares with this inevitable, universal, national conscription in time of war. Repeated once or twice more, it will end everything in this Nation that remotely approaches liberty.

If I blame anybody about this matter, it is men like myself who ought to have known better. We went out to the Army and explained to these valiant men what a resplendent future they were preparing for their children by their heroic sacrifice. O, Unknown Soldier, however can I make that right with you? For sometimes I think I hear you asking me about it:

Where is this great, new era that the war was to create? Where is it? They blew out my eyes in the Argonne. Is it because of that now from Arlington I strain them vainly to see the great gains of the war? If I could see the prosperity, plenty, and peace of my children for which this mangled body was laid down!

My friends, sometimes I do not want to believe in immortality. Sometimes I hope that the Unknown Soldier will never know.

My friends, sometimes I do not want to believe in immortality. Sometimes I hope that the Unknown Soldier will never know.

Many of you here knew these men better, you may think, than I knew them, and already you may be relieving my presentation of the case by another picture. Probably, you say, the Unknown Soldier enjoyed soldiering and had a thrilling time in France. The Great War, you say, was the most exciting episode of our time. Some of us found in it emotional release unknown before or since. We escaped from ourselves. We were carried out of ourselves. Multitudes were picked up from a dull routine, lifted out of the drudgery of common days with which they were infinitely bored, and plunged into an exciting adventure which they remember yet as the most thrilling episode of their careers.

nitely bored, and plunged into an exciting adventure which they remember yet as the most thrilling episode of their careers.

Indeed, you say, how could martial music be so stirring and martial poetry so exultant if there were not at the heart of war a lyric glory? Even in the churches you sing, "Onward Christian soldiers, marching as to war." You, too, when you wish to express or arouse ardor and courage use war's symbolism. The Unknown Soldier, sound in mind and body—yes! The Unknown Soldier a conscript—probably! But be fair and add that the Unknown Soldier had a thrilling time in France.

The because he may have had. Listen to this from a wounded Soldier a conscript—probably! But he fair and add that the Unknown Soldier had a thrilling time in France.

To be sure, he may have had. Listen to this from a wounded American after a battle: "We went over the parapet at 5 o'clock and I was not hit till 9. They were the greatest 4 hours of my life." Quite so! Only let me talk to you a moment about that. That was the first time he went over the parapet. Anything risky, dangerous, tried for the first time, well handled, and now escaped from, is thrilling to an excitable and courageous soul. What about the second time and the third time and the fourth? What about the dreadful times between, the long-drawn-out, monotonous, dreary, muddy barrenness of war, concerning which one who knew said "Nine-tenths of war is waiting"? The trouble with much familiar talk about the lyric glory of war is that it comes from people who never saw any soldiers except the American troops, fresh, resilient, who had time to go over the parapet about once. You ought to have seen the hardening-up camps of the armies which had been at the business since 1914. Did you ever see them? Did you look, as I have looked, into the faces of young men who had been over the top, wounded, hospitalized, hardened up—over the top, wounded, hospitalized, hardened up—over the top, wounded, hospitalized, hardened up—over the top, wounded, hospitalized, hardened up—four times, five times, six times? Never talk to a man who has seen that about the lyric glory of war.

Where does all this talk about the glory of war come from, anywar?

Where does all this talk about the glory of war come from, anyway?

"Charge, Chester, charge! On, Stanley, On: WOLD words of Marmion.
That is Sir Walter Scott. Did he ever see war? Never. Chester, charge! On, Stanley, on!" were the last

"How can man die better Than facing fearful odds, For the ashes of his fathers, And the temples of his gods?"

That is Macaulay. Did he ever see war? He was never near one. "Stormed at with shot and shell, Boldly they rode and well, Into the jaws of Death, Into the mouth of Hell Rode the six hundred."

Rode the six hundred."

That is Tennyson. Did he ever see war? I should say not. That is where the glory of war comes from. We have heard very little about it from the real soldiers of this last war. We have had from them the appalling opposite. They say what George Washington said, it is, "the shame of mankind." The glory of war comes from poets, preachers, orators, the writers of martial music, statesmen preparing flowery proclamations for the people, who dress up war for other men to fight. They do not go to the trenches. They do not go over the top again and again and again. Do you think that the Unknown Soldier would really believe in the lyric glory of war? I dare you; go down to Arlington and tell him that now.

Nevertheless some may say that while war is a grim and murder-

Nevertheless some may say that while war is a grim and murderous business with no glory in it in the end, and while the Unknown Soldier doubtless knew that well, we have the right in our imagination to make him the symbol of whatever was most idealistic and courageous in the men who went out to fight. Of course, we have. Now, let us do that. On the body of a French sergeant killed in battle was found a letter to his parents in which he said,
"You know how I made the sacrifice of my life before leaving."
So we think of our Unknown Soldier as an idealist, rising up in answer to a human call and making the sacrifice of his life before leaving. His country seemed to him like Christ himself, saying
"If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Far from appealing to his worst, the war brought out his best—his loyalty, his courage, his venturesomeness, his care for the downtrodden, his capacity for self-sacrifice. The noblest qualities of his young manhood were aroused. He went out to France a flaming patriot and in secret quoted Rupert Brooke to his own soul:

"If I should die, think only this of me:

"If I should die, think only this of me: That there's some corner of a foreign field That is forever Engalnd."

That is forever Engalnd."

There, you say, is the Unknown Soldier.

Yes, indeed, did you suppose I never had met him? I talked with him many a time. When the words that I would speak about war are a blistering fury on my lips and the encouragement I gave to war is a deep self-condemnation in my heart, it is of that I think. For I watched war lay its hands on these strongest, loveliest things in men and use the noblest attributes of the human spirit for what ungodly deeds! Is there anything more infernal than this, to take the best that is in man and use it to do what war does? This is the ultimate description of war—it is the prostitution of the noblest powers of the human soul to the most dastardly deeds, the most abysmal cruelties of which our human nature is capable. That is war.

Granted, then, that the Unknown Soldier should be to us a symbol of everything most idealistic in a valiant warrior, I beg of you, be realistic and follow through what war made the Unknown Soldier do with his idealism. Here is one eyewitness speaking:

of you, be realistic and follow through what war made the Onknown Soldier do with his idealism. Here is one eyewitness speaking:

"Last night, at an officers' mess there was great laughter at the story of one of our men who had spent his last cartridge in defending an attack. 'Hand me down your spade, Mike,' he said; and as six Germans came one by one around the end of a traverse, he split each man's skull open with a deadly blow." The war made the Unknown Soldier do that with his idealism.

"I can remember", says one Infantry officer, "a pair of hands (nationality unknown) which protruded from the soaked ashen soil like the roots of a tree turned upside down; one hand seemed to be pointing at the sky with an accusing gesture. * *
Floating on the surface of the flooded trench was the mask of a human face which had detached itself from the skull." War harnessed the idealism of the Unknown Soldier to that!

Do I not have an account to settle between my soul and him?
They sent men like me into the camps to awaken his idealism, to touch those secret, holy springs within him so that with devotion, fidelity, loyalty, and self-sacrifice he might go out to war. O War, I hate you most of all for this, that you do lay your hands on the noblest elements in human character, with which we might make a heaven on earth, and you use them to make a hell on earth instead. You take even our science, the fruit of our dedicated intelligence, by means of which we might our unselfishness, with God, and, using it, you fill the earth instead with new ways of slaughtering men. You take our loyalty, our unselfishness, with which we might make the earth beautiful, and, using these our finest qualities, you make death fall from the sky and burst up from the sea and hurtle from unseen ambuscades 60 miles away; from the sea and nurtle from unseen amouscades of finites away, you blast fathers in the trenches with gas while you are starving their children at home with blockades; and you so bedevil the world that 15 years after the armistice we cannot be sure who won the war, so sunk in the same disaster are victors and vanquished alike. If war were fought simply with evil things, like hate, it would be bad enough, but, when one sees the deeds of war done with the loveliest faculties of the human spirit, he looks, done with the loveliest faculties of the human spirit, he looks into the very pit of hell.

Suppose one thing more—that the Unknown Soldier was a Christian. Maybe he was not, but suppose he was a Christian like Sergeant York, who, at the beginning, intended to take Jesus so seriously as to refuse to fight but afterward, otherwise persuaded, made a real soldier. For these Christians do make soldiers. Religion is a force. When religious faith supports war, when, as in the Crusades, the priests of Christ cry, "Deus vult"—God wills it—and, confirming ordinary motives, the dynamic of Christian devotion is added, then an incalculable resource of confidence and power is released. No wonder the war departments wanted the power is released. No wonder the war departments wanted the churches behind them!

Suppose, then, that the Unknown Soldier was a Christian. I wonder what he thinks about it now. Practically all modern books about war emphasize the newness of it—new weapons, new books about war emphasize the newness of it—new weapons, new horrors, new extensiveness. At times, however, it seems to me that still the worst things about war are the ancient elements. In the Bible we read terrible passages where the ancient Hebrews thought they had command from Jehovah to slaughter the Amalekites, "both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass." Dreadful! we say, an ancient and appalling idea! Ancient? Appalling? Upon the contrary, that is war, and always will be. A military order, issued in our generation by an American general in the Philippines and publicly acknowledged by his counsel afterwards in a military court, commanded his soldiers to burn and kill, to exterminate all capable of bearing arms, and to make the island of Samar a howling wilderness. Moreover, his to burn and kill, to exterminate all capable of bearing arms, and to make the island of Samar a howling wilderness. Moreover, his counsel acknowledged that he had specifically named the age of 10 with instructions to kill every one over that. Far from launching into a denunciation of that American general I am much more tempted to state his case for him. Why not? Cannot boys and girls of 10 fire a gun? Why not kill everything over 10? That is war, past, present, and future. All that our modern fashions have done is to make the necessity of slaughtering children not the comparatively simple and harmless matter in Samar of shooting some of them one by one, but the wholesale destrucshooting some of them, one by one, but the wholesale destruc-tion of children, starving them by millions, impoverishing them, spoiling the chances of unborn generations of them, as in the spoiling the

My friends, I am not trying to make you sentimental about this. I want you to be hard-headed. We can have on the one side this monstrous thing or we can have Christ, but we cannot have both. O my country, stay out of war! Cooperate with the nations in every movement that has any hope for peace; enter the World Court, support the League of Nations, contend undiscourageably for disarmament, but set your face steadfastly undiscourageably for disarmament, but set your face steadfastly and forever against being drawn into another war. O church of Christ, stay out of war. Withdraw from every alliance that maintains or encourages it. It was not a pacifist, it was Field Marshal Earl Haig, who said, "It is the business of the churches to make my business impossible." And O my soul! stay out of war!

At any rate, I will myself do the best I can to settle my account with the Unknown Soldier. I renounce war. I renounce war because of what it does to our own men. I have watched them coming gassed from the front-line trenches. I have seen the long, long hospital trains filled with their mutilated bodies. I have heard the cries of the crazed and the prayers of those who wanted to die and could not, and I remember the maimed and ruined men for whom the war is not yet over. I renounce war because of what it compels us to do to our enemies, bombing their ruined men for whom the war is not yet over. I renounce war because of what it compels us to do to our enemies, bombing their mothers in villages, starving their children by blockades, laughing over our coffee cups about every damnable thing we have been able to do to them. I renounce war for its consequences, for the lies it lives on and propagates, for the undying hatreds it arouses, for the dictatorships it puts in the place of democracy, for the starvation that stalks after it. I renounce war and never again, directly or indirectly, will I sanction or support another! O Unknown Soldier, in penitent reparation I make you that pledge.

IMPROVEMENT IN HOUSING STANDARDS AND CONDITIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3794) to encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions, and to provide a system of mutual mortgage and insurance, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this is a very important measure and perhaps some Senators would like to have a statement made regarding it. I will be as brief as possible and endeavor to set forth the reasons for the passage of the bill and its main features.

The National Housing Act is a direct result of the fact that a major element in economic readjustment in the United States today is the construction industry.

The construction industry has been the most severely depressed of our large industries, and the one that has shown the least response, during the past year, to general economic recovery. The decline of residential building to but 0.1 of its former total has been more severe than the decline of construction generally.

From the point of view of unemployment, this enormous decline in the volume of construction is accountable for our largest single emergency-relief problem. The great bulk of not less than $5,000,000, and which are authorized to pur-the persons ordinarily engaged in the construction industry and related activities are still unemployed. These workers and their families constitute the largest group still dependent on public and private relief.

The construction industry normally employs more than 3,600,000 people directly; and indirectly it influences the employment of large numbers in nearly every other industry in this country.

As an indication of the influence of building on other industries, more than 1,100,000, or 0.1 of the manufacturing workers in the country, were engaged in the production of building materials, equipment, and supplies, according to the 1930 census. The value of products was $5,500,000,000, or one-eighth of all manufactured goods produced in this year. With the exception of agriculture, the construction industry is the greatest employer of men.

It has been estimated that the national wealth is $380,-000,000,000. The value of dwellings alone in this country, according to the 1930 census, represents more than onethird of the total wealth of the country. The building industry is directly related to the largest single class of outstanding long-term capital indebtedness. The total realestate mortgage debt of $43,000,000,000 is nearly as large as the combined national, State, county, and municipal debts. Approximately half of this debt, or $20,000,000,000, is represented by mortgages on individual homes alone.

The 1926 level of total construction aggregated more than $7,000,000,000. In 1933 construction totaled less than 20 percent of this. Residential building normally accounts for 50 to 60 percent of total building. Yet in 1933 residential building had declined to 9 percent of the 1926 volume. In a normal year residential building aggregated about $3,000,000,000. In 1933 less than $300,000,000 was spent on new homes. In the last 2 years not enough single homes have been built to replace those destroyed by fire alone. We have an annual need of 400,000 home units. Yet in 1932 and 1933 the Department of Labor estimates that not more than 40,000 homes were built each year, or a bare 10 percent of the requirements.

The National Housing Act is designed to accomplish two things: First, to assist in immediate recovery through rapid employment of men in a Nation-wide program of modernization, repair, and needed new construction. For this purpose we expect, under the housing plan, to make available during the coming year $1,500,000,000. In the second place, we hope to encourage permanent reforms in our mortgage structure which will insure a continuation of this employment through the stimulation of new-home building on a sound basis over a long period.

There can be no doubt as to the great importance of these two efforts. In my opinion they are essential to early and definite recovery. It is believed that the enactment of the National Housing Act will prove a major factor in economic readjustment in the United States.

When I reported the bill as directed by the committee I did not have time to prepare and submit a written report with it. I merely reported it favorably as directed. I may now refer to some detailed features of the bill which may take the place of a formal report on it.

The bill reported by the committee provides for a comprehensive program of home financing and mortgage insurance which is divided into four main parts, as follows:

First. It is provided in title I of the bill that financial institutions which make loans for the purpose of financing alterations, repairs, and improvements upon real property are to be insured up to 20 percent of the total of such loans and that loans may also be made upon the security of the obligations which are thus insured.

Second. In title II of the bill a program of mutual mortgage insurance is established under which first mortgages on residential property which are amortized may be insured up to $16,000 in any case and up to 80 percent of the appraised value of the property.

Third. Title III provides for the establishment of national mortgage associations, each of which is to have a capital of chase and sell first mortgages and to borrow money through the issue of securities up to 10 times their outstanding capital, or the current face value of mortgages which they hold, and which are insured under the provisions of title II plus cash on hand and Government obligations.

Fourth. Title IV provides for the creation of a corporation under the supervision of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board which is authorized to insure accounts of members of the Federal Home Loan Bank system, except mutual savings banks, and which is required to insure accounts of Federal savings-and-loan associations established under authority of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, such insurance to be up to 80 percent of the full withdrawable or repurchasable value of the accounts of the members of such institutions with a limitation upon insurance to any such member of $5.000.

Titles I, II, and III of the bill are to be administered by a Federal housing administrator to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who is to hold office for a term of 4 years. The insurance of financial institutions under title I is not to exceed in the aggregate $200,000,000, and the loans to financial institutions under the same title are to be based upon obligations which are so insured which in effect amounts to a maximum limit of $1,000,000,000, assuming that loans are made up to the full face value of the obligations offered as security.

The funds for carrying out the provisions of titles I and II are to be made available to the administrator by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or, in lieu thereof, the President may provide such funds or any part thereof by allotment to the administrator from any funds which are made available to the President for emergency purposes.

In connection with the mutual mortgage insurance program provided for in title II, mortgages which are offered to the administrator within 1 year from the date of their execution are to be eligible for insurance if they are amortized and comply with such further requirements as the administrator may prescribe with respect to maturities, the application of periodic payments to the amortization of principal, and provisions with respect to insurance, repairs, alterations, payment of taxes, default reserves, delinquency charges, foreclosure proceedings, anticipation of maturity, additional and secondary liens, and other similar The interest rate on such mortgages, however, is not to exceed 5 percent per annum on the principal obligation outstanding at any time unless the administrator finds that in certain areas or under special circumstances the mortgage market demands a higher rate, in which event not to exceed 6 percent may be charged.

The premium charge for insurance of mortgages, which is to be determined in accordance with the risk involved, is not to be less than one-half of 1 percent nor more than 1 percent of the original face value of the mortgage and is to be payable annually in advance by the mortgagee.

Provision is also made for the classification of mortgages and the establishment of separate groups to which mortgages having substantially similar risk characteristics and maturity dates are to be assigned.

It is also provided that the administrator may insure first mortgages covering property held by Federal or State instrumentalities, private limited-dividend corporations, and municipal corporate instrumentalities of one or more States formed for the purpose of providing housing for persons of low income which are regulated or restricted by law or by the administrator as to rents, charges, capital structure, rate of return, or methods of operation. Such mortgages need not conform to the eligibility requirements as in the case of other mortgages insured under title II, but are to contain such terms, conditions, and provisions as are satisfactory to the administrator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What does the Senator think the effect of the proposed legislation would be upon existing building-and-loan associations?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it would help them very much.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How?

Mr. FLETCHER. In the first place, it would afford them some relief in their existing situation. Some of them are not in position to meet withdrawals and all that sort of thing. They can go to the Home Loan Bank Corporation and get relief. This in itself would encourage building and encourage people in home owning and would induce them to go into every means of outlet for securing loans, building homes, and repairing homes. I think all that would have a tendency to help building-and-loan associations.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Why should a prospective home builder ever go to a building-and-loan association if he could embrace this other opportunity?

Mr. FLETCHER. Most of the building-and-loan associations—and I have always been friendly to them—are based on public interest and local cooperation. They would still continue to function so far as are concerned people acquainted with those who organize and operate them. The bill is not intended primarily to help building-and-loan associations, although I believe the effect will be just that. People who have loans in building-and-loan associations would likely, in some instances, prefer to take advantage of the opportunity afforded them under the bill. I think there are local influences which would have an effect favorable to building-and-loan associations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In further reference to the Senator's question, I may add, if the Senator will permit me to do so, that the bill sets up credit institutions which will be available to building-and-loan associations for the rediscount of their guaranteed mortgages, which will afford to them a source from which they can obtain funds which will be in turn reloaned to the home owners in their communities. It guarantees the deposits of the investors in the building-and-loan associations so as to put them on the same basis as banks whose deposits have been heretofore guaranteed, and in the bill we raise the amount to $5,000 to correspond to the guarantee of the banks so as to prevent the withdrawal of funds from building-and-loan associations into the guaranteed banks.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator at that point to inquire whether or not that invites, on the other hand, a transfer of funds from banks to building-and-loan investments, because of the higher rate ordinarily paid by building-and-loan investments.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is conceivable that it might do so in same cases; but we cannot very well guard against that in detailed legislation. All we can do is to try to put the banks and the building-and-loan associations on the same basis. It will work itself out anyway so that that advantage will not accrue to the building-and-loan associations.

Mr. BULKLEY, Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley] was chairman of a subcommittee to which this bill was referred and gave extensive hearings on it, and is thoroughly familiar with the details. With the Senator's permission, I shall be glad to have him explain this feature of the matter.

Mr. BULKLEY. The insurance of the building-and-loan deposit is not quite the same as the insurance of the bank deposit. An insured bank deposit is in effect repayable forthwith by giving to the depositor a new account in a newly organized institution against which he can immediately check, whereas the insurance of the building-and-loan account provides only for a 10-percent payment forthwith, the balance to be payable one-half in 1 year, and one-half in 3 years, without interest.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That obviously is a substantial difference in the situation.

Mr. BULKLEY. It is based on the difference in the character of the accounts, because the building-and-loan account theoretically is not repayable on demand anyway.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But I still do not see why anyone who wanted home-building credit would continue to patronize a building-and-loan association if he could embrace the advantages under this bill.

Mr. BULKLEY. To what advantages does the Senator

Mr. VANDENBERG. The advantages of credit through these new instrumentalities.

Mr. BULKLEY. But the new instrumentality has no advantage over the building-and-loan in extending credit.

Mr. VANDENBERG. None whatever?

Mr. FLETCHER. The building-and-loan is one of the instrumentalities provided for.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the new instrumentality operates somewhat as a Federal Reserve bank to afford credit to the local institutions that are lending money, and the building-and-loan associations will participate in that privilege like any other approved lending agency. The bill does not set up any local competitors with building-andloan associations or any other lending associations that deal in lending money on homes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the basis of all the building-and-loan opposition to this bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think there is any real basis, because the bill does infinitely more good to the building-andloan associations than the possible harm that they fear.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What do they think is the basis of their opposition?

Mr. BARKLEY. They thought originally-and I do not know that we have yet been able to dissipate that thoughtthat the mortgage-loan associations, which are required to have a minimum of $5,000,000 capital, were set up in order to establish a competitive loan agency across the street from the building-and-loan association; but they are not set up for that purpose. They will not engage in making direct loans on homes. They are rediscount agencies, where building-and-loan associations and other approved lending agencies can go and rediscount the mortgages they have already made on local real estate and get money so as to be able to loan more money. In my judgment, the operation of these mortgage-loan associations will result in the buildingand-loan associations being able to make more loans than they otherwise would be able to make if they could only draw their funds from small investors who put their money

Mr. BULKLEY. If the Senator will yield further, I should like to pursue that particular point.

The building-and-loan associations at first feared that active competition would be started by the proposed national mortgage associations. In view of the fact that the bill, as reported to the Senate, permits the national mortgage associations to issue debentures only to the extent of 10 times their capital stock instead of 15 times, as was proposed in the original draft, and the debentures may be based only upon guaranteed mortgages, as provided by another title of the bill, and on investments in Government securities, at least a large part of the building-and-loan associations, I can assure the Senator, feel that the competition will not be dangerous. I know personally of a change in the attitude of some of the building-and-loan people. I am not sure whether or not that represents the unanimous opinion of the building-and-loan interests.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President-

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, are they not fearful lest the rate of interest at which the home builders will get mortgages will be less?

Mr. BULKLEY. I think there may be some such fear, and I think the general tendency of the whole bill may be to reduce rates of interest; but it must be remembered that the building-and-loan associations have a right to avail themselves of the insurance provisions of the bill and also of the rediscount provisions, so that they will be benefited at the same time.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator, I think, has had the same sort of letters that I have had, especially from Ohio, with special reference to Cleveland, fearing that this legislation would very largely counteract the effectiveness of the loan associations. It is the Senator's judgment that there is no foundation for that fear?

Mr. BULKLEY. My judgment is that there is no serious danger. Of course, we cannot tell exactly what the effect will be until we try it; but the best and latest judgment of the building-and-loan associations, as related to me, is that the present restrictions in the bill requiring the debentures of the national mortgage associations to be based 100 percent on insured mortgages or Government securities, and limiting those debentures to 10 times the amount of the capital stock, make a competition that is not at all dangerous to the building-and-loans.

Mr. FESS. If I could estimate what the opinion of Ohio is, as expressed by the building-and-loan associations that have written to me, I should think they were strongly opposed to this proposed legislation. Whether or not they know what it is, I do not know.

Mr. BULKLEY. The Senator is mistaken if he thinks they are opposed to the proposed legislation, because title IV of the bill is absolutely essential to the building-andloans. Some of them may be opposed to some parts of the bill; but the bill as a whole will be of great benefit to the building-and-loan associations, and it is so conceded.

Mr. FESS. It is the national mortgage feature, I think. to which they have been opposed.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is room for all of them. Mr. BULKLEY. As I say, that objection is satisfied, and I think there is a very satisfactory condition as reported in

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield there, at first the building-and-loan associations misconstrued the object of the mortgage loan associations. They thought the bill intended to set up competitive lending agencies in their communities, but that is not true. We have so restricted the mortgage loan associations that they will not make direct loans at all on real estate, and a building-and-loan association or a savings bank or any other lending institution that lends on homes can take advantage of the facility of the mortgage-loan association for rediscount purposes, and obtain additional credit to loan upon the property of its own customers; so there is no real danger of any competition.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator is giving it as his opinion that there is no real danger?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is my firm opinion; and I have come to it after much study, not only myself but in collaboration with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley] and all those who have been instrumental in bringing this legislation forward.

Mr. FESS. The difficulty, if the Senator will permit me, is that those of us who are not on the committee have not had an opportunity of going into the details.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that.

Mr. FESS. And I am very largely in the dark about the

Mr. BARKLEY. The situation is very similar to that which existed a year ago in connection with the Glass-Steagall Act, which every banker feared was going to do something to him. As a matter of fact, it has done a great deal for the bankers; and if it had not been for that act many of the banks that are now open would have been

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, was it not the function of the Federal home loan bank, which we organized a year or two ago, to provide this rediscount privilege, using the Senator's analogous language?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it was. Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the difference between that system and this?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, however, the home loan bank that we created a year or two ago provides a sort of central bank for a district, whose subscribers must be building-and-loan associations. Out of the 11,000 building-and-loan associations in this country, only 2,500 have become stockholders in the home loan bank; and, besides that, the rediscount facilities that we set up here are much broader, and may be taken advantage of by other lending associations outside of building-and-loan associations.

Insofar as a building-and-loan association holding stock in the home-loan bank that has been in existence for a year is concerned, it may be able to obtain all the credit and the rediscount it needs from its home-loan bank. It may not. On the other hand, there are some 8,000 building-and-loan associations that are not in the Home Loan bank system. and are not eligible for rediscount privileges with the home-loan bank, and if they are approved, if their condition is such as to meet the standard set, they will be able, without regard to their membership in the loan bank system, to obtain this rediscount privilege through these mortgage-loan associations.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to know if the Federal home loan bank system will continue in operation along with this new system.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes; we do not interfere with that at all. It will go on just exactly the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9046) to discontinue administrative furloughs in the Postal Service; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Sweeney, Mr. Brunner, Mr. Lamneck, Mr. Kelly, and Mr. Doutrich were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 822. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to amend section 217, as amended, of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States', approved March 4, 1909", approved January 11, 1929, with respect to the use of the mails for the shipment of certain drugs and medicines to cosmetologists and barbers;

S. 1508. An act providing for the final enrollment of the Indians of the Klamath Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon;

S. 3096. An act for the relief of John T. Garity;

S. 3446. An act to authorize the Postmaster General to receive, operate, and to maintain for official purposes, motor vehicles seized for violations of the customs laws;

S. 3765. An act to enable the Postmaster General to withhold commissions on false returns made by postmasters; and S. 3766. An act to amend the act entitled "An act authoriz-

S. 3766. An act to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Postmaster General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for loss by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty", approved March 17, 1882, as amended.

The message further announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H.R. 7212. An act to remove the limitation upon the extension of star routes:

H.R. 7301. An act to authorize the Postmaster General to charge an additional fee for effecting delivery of domestic registered, insured, or collect-on-delivery mail, the delivery of which is restricted to the addressee only, or to the addressee or order: and

H.R. 8919. An act to adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H.R. 194. An act to refund to Caroline M. Eagan income tax erroneously and illegally collected;

H.R. 8517. An act to provide for needy blind persons of the District of Columbia;

H.R. 8639. An act to repeal certain laws providing for the protection of sea lions in Alaska waters;

H.R. 9143. An act providing educational opportunities for the children of soldiers, sailors, and marines who were killed in action or died during the World War; and H.R. 9622. An act to amend subsection (a) of section 23 of the District Alcoholic Beverage Control Act.

ANNUAL CONSIDERATION OF PERMANENT APPROPRIATIONS— CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the conference report on House bill 9410, which was submitted by me last evening and is on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following report, which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9410) providing that permanent appropriations be subject to annual consideration and appropriation by Congress, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 209.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 79, 80, 81, 82, 84, 85, 86, 89, 93, 98, 99, 101, 204, and agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 1 to 38, inclusive: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 to 38, inclusive, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Amend the amended section to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. (a) Effective July 1, 1935, the permanent appropriations under the appropriation titles listed in subsection (b) of this section are repealed, and such portions of any acts as make permanent appropriations to be expended under such accounts are amended so as to authorize, in lieu thereof, annual appropriations from the general fund of the Treasury in identical terms and in such amounts as now provided by the laws providing such permanent appropriations, except that any appropriation for 'Adjusted losses and contingencies, postal fund', is authorized to be made from the postal revenues. Any unobligated balances remaining in the permanent appropriations under these accounts on June 30, 1935, shall be covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury: Provided, That in addition to amounts in lieu of the permanent appropriation 'Meat inspection, Bureau of Animal Industry (fiscal year)' there is authorized to be appropriated such other sums as may be necessary in the enforcement of the meat-inspection laws (U.S.C., title 21, secs. 71 to 96, inclusive).

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 83: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83. and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 8. Effective July 1, 1935, the appropriation account on the books of the Government entitled 'Recreation Fund, Army' (8T078) is abolished and the balance thereof shall be covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury: Provided, That an amount equal to the amount so covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury is hereby authorized to be appropriated from the general fund of the Treasury in the event of war, for the recreation, amusement, comfort, contentment, and health of the enlisted personnel of the Military Establishment."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. (a) Effective July 1, 1935, credit shall be made to the replacement accounts appearing in subsection (b) of this section of only such amounts as represent sales of stores, materials, and supplies at actual cost to the War Department.

"(11) Replacing barracks and quarters (fiscal year) (8-209).

"(12) Replacing water and sewers at military posts (fiscal year) (8-233)."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 88: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, Renumber the section to read "11"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "12"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "13"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "14"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 94: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 94, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "16"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 96 and 97: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 96 and 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Amend subsection (a) of the amended section to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. (a) Effective July 1, 1935, the appropriation accounts appearing on the books of the Government and listed in subsection (b) of this section, as well as appropriation accounts bearing similar titles on the books of the Government, are abolished, and any unobligated balances under such accounts as of June 30, 1935, shall be covered into a trust fund receipt account in the Treasury to be designated 'Unclaimed moneys of individuals whose whereabouts are unknown.' Any appropriations to which expenditures under such accounts have been chargeable theretofore are hereby repealed. There are authorized to be appropriated, annually, from such account such sums as may be necessary to meet any expenditures of the character now chargeable to the appropriation accounts abolished by this section. The Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as the case may be, shall submit with their annual estimates of appropriations an amount necessary to meet expenditures properly chargeable to this account."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 100: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "18"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 102, 103, and 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 102, 103, and 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Amend the amended section to read as follows:

"SEC. 19. Effective July 1, 1935, moneys received as: Patent Office fees; unearned moneys, lands (Interior Department); reentry permit fees (Labor Department); naturalization fees (Labor Department); and registry fees (Labor Department); and held in the official checking accounts of disbursing officers, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to appropriately designated trust-fund-receipt accounts and shall be available for refunds, and for transfer of the earned portions thereof into appropriate receipt-fund titles on the books of the Government: Provided, That donations, quasi-public and unearned moneys carried in official checking accounts of disbursing officers and of others reand agree to the same with an amendment as follows: | quired to account to the Comptroller General (including clerks and marshals of the United States District Courts), administered by officers of the United States by virtue of their official capacity, shall be deposited similarly into the Treasury as trust funds and are hereby appropriated and made available for disbursement under the terms of the trust."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 105 to 201, inclusive: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 105 to 201, inclusive, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Amend the amended section to read as follows:

"SEC. 20. (a) The funds appearing on the books of the Government and listed in subsections (b) and (c) of this section shall be classified on the books of the Treasury as trust funds. All money accruing to these funds are hereby appropriated, and shall be disbursed in compliance with the terms of the trust. Hereafter moneys received by the Government as trustee analogous to the funds named in subsections (b) and (c) of this section, not otherwise herein provided for, except moneys received by the Comptroller of the Currency or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, shall likewise be deposited into the Treasury as trust funds with appropriate title, and all amounts credited to such trust fund accounts are hereby appropriated and shall be disbursed in compliance with the terms of the trust: Provided, That, effective July 1, 1935, expenditures from the trust fund 'Soldiers' Home, Permanent Fund' (8t184) shall be made only in pursuance of appropriations annually made by Congress, and such appropriations are hereby authorized: Provided further, That personal funds of deceased inmates, Naval Home, now deposited with the pay officer of the Naval Home, shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the trust fund account 'Personal Funds of Deceased Inmates, Naval Home' (7t989): Provided further, That on June 30 of each year there shall be transferred to the trust fund receipt account directed to be established in section 17 of this act, such portion of the balances in any trust-fund account hereinbefore or hereafter listed or established, except the balances in the accounts listed in subsection (c) of this section, which have been in any such fund for more than 1 year and represent moneys belonging to individuals whose whereabouts are unknown, and subsequent claims therefor shall be disbursed from the trust fund receipt account 'Unclaimed moneys of individuals whose whereabouts are unknown', directed to be established in section 17 of this act.

"SEC. 21. Hereafter all checks drawn on the Treasurer of the United States, except those issued on account of public-debt obligations and transactions regarding the administration of banking and currency laws, shall be payable only until the close of the fiscal year next following the fiscal year in which such checks were issued, and the amounts of all such checks properly due and payable which have not been presented for payment within such period shall be deposited into the Treasury to the credit of a trust fund account entitled 'Outstanding Liabilities (fiscal year)', designated by fiscal years in which the checks were issued. The balances in the outstanding liabilities account now carried on the books of the Government, representing the amounts of unclaimed checks, shall be transferred to the account 'Outstanding Liabilities, 1934', and any balances remaining therein, or in any succeeding fiscal year account, unclaimed for 2 fiscal years after the deposit therein shall be covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury: Provided, That the balances to the credit of the outstanding liabilities account of any fiscal year which has not been covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury shall be available to pay claims on account of any check, the amount of which has been included in any balance so covered into the surplus fund."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 203: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 203, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "22"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 205: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 205, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "23"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 206: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 206, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 24. The Comptroller General of the United States shall cause a survey to be made of all inactive and permanent appropriations and/or funds on the books of the Government, and also funds in the official custody of officers and employees of the United States, in which the Government is financially concerned, for which no accounting is rendered to the General Accounting Office; and he shall submit to the Congress annually, in a special report, his recommendations for such changes in existing law relating thereto, as, in his judgment, may be in the public interest."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 207: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 207, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "25"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 208: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 208, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "26"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 210: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 210, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "27"; and the Senate agree to the same.

CARL HAYDEN, JOHN H. OVERTON, FREDERICK STEIWER, Managers on the part of the Senate. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN, THOS. S. MCMILLAN. GLOVER H. CARY, E. W. Goss, R. B. WIGGLESWORTH, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, this is the bill providing that certain permanent appropriations shall hereafter be subject to annual approval by Congress. I might state that generally the matters in dispute between the House and the Senate have been adjusted to the substantial satisfaction of the Senate conferees. One of the principal items in dispute was with respect to the Smithsonian Institution funds. They are not disturbed. The naval hospital fund is not disturbed. The national-bank examiners are to receive their salaries as heretofore. The civil-service retirement fund and all other retirement funds are not disturbed. Payments to the States will be generally made in the manner now provided by law.

I move the adoption of the report. The motion was agreed to.

DIVERSIFICATION OF PRISON INDUSTRIES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the amendments of the Senate nos. 1 and 2 to the bill (H.R. 9404) to authorize the formation of a body corporate to insure the more effective diversification of prison industries, and for other purposes, and agreeing to the amendment of the Senate no. 3 with the following amendment:

Strike out the proviso beginning in line 25 of page 2 of the Senate engrossed amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. ASHURST] moved that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, ask for a conference, and that conferees be appointed; and that order was entered. I move that that order be vacated. and then I shall move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is the bill?

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, it is a bill relating to the creation of a corporation known as the "Prison Industries Corporation."

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS. I may say that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George], joint author of the bill, agrees to this

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS. Now I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to Senate amendment no. 3.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT IN HOUSING STANDARDS AND CONDITIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3794) to encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions, to provide a system of mutual mortgage insurance, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, are there any committee amendments to the bill under consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are no committee amend-

Mr. BORAH. I spoke to the chairman of the committee last evening about an amendment on page 32. In line 5, I move to strike out the word "fifty" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment. I think it would be all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 32, line 5, to strike out the word "fifty" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred", so as to read:

Each applicant for such insurance shall also file with its application an agreement that during the period that the insur-ance is in force it will not make any loans beyond 100 miles from its principal office;

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to have some member of the committee describe very briefly the process of obtaining a loan by one who desires to build a home or by a home owner who desires to repair his property. Just what would he have to do, under the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is no difference in the process from that which he undergoes now. He goes to his local lending agency, whether it be a building-and-loan association, a savings bank, or a homestead association, and makes his application, just as he does now.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, he goes to a private financial institution first?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true, he goes to a private financial institution, makes his application, and gets the loan.

Mr. WALSH. Why should it be easier for him to get a loan at a private financial institution, under the operation of the proposed law, than it is now?

Mr. BARKLEY. Because of the ability of the private financial institution, to insure deposits, for instance, building-and-loan associations. Because the bill provides for the guaranty of approved mortgages, more private capital will be induced to go into these lending institutions for the purpose of putting loans on homes, and, in turn, those mortgages can be rediscounted at the mortgage-loan association which we are setting up under the bill.

Mr. WALSH. It is because the savings banks and the building associations in my State which make loans on homes, and other banking institutions, will have a security by reason of assurance made by the Government as to the now?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct. As a matter of fact, the private mortgage market is frozen and has been for a number of years.

Mr. WALSH. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BARKLEY. This will operate somewhat in the fashion of priming the pump, to get private capital reinvested in mortgage loans. Because of the insurance features and guaranty features, men who lend money on real estate will feel freer and safer in investing money in mortgage loans than they feel they are now.

Mr. WALSH. But there are provisions in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, and also in the laws of several States, through several State financial institutions which have been set up, to take care of mortgages on homes. Yet that has not resulted in an increase in the building of homes or in expenditures to make repairs. Am I correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not engaged in lending money on homes.

Mr. WALSH. It is engaged in lending money on mortgages on homes through loans made to banks and mortgage

Mr. BARKLEY. Only to banks and financial institutions, but not directly on mortgages. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation, of course, has rendered a great service in the refinancing of homes upon which all sorts of lending associations, including banks and building associations and cooperative associations, such as the Senator has in his State, have had loans.

Mr. WALSH. It makes the loan direct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The agreement then is between the home owner and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct. The process by which a home owner can obtain a loan will be no different, after this bill shall be enacted, from what it is now, except that it will be easier for the home owner to obtain a loan, because it will open up a channel for credit by reason of insurance and guaranty and amortization features, which will take the fear very largely out of the home owner, as well as out of the investor.

Mr. WALSH. It will have greater effect in taking the fear out of the investor than in taking it out of the home owner. Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. That is really what needs to be done; to have the fear taken out of the investor.

Mr. WALSH. It will bring about a condition where there will be an inducement to an institution or an investor to lend money for building.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I did not quite understand one thing, and I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky explain it. The Senator stated that a man would apply for a loan by reason of the fact that he could anticipate an assurance that it would be easier to obtain it. How does the Government decide upon that insurance as to an individual mortgage, under the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the insurance feature, of course, carries with it the implication, as well as the obligation, of the insurance corporation, to approve of the lending agency, and of course approve of the loan. It is not contemplated that loans will be made promiscuously to those who are not in a position to repay them.

It provides for a long-term amortization, covering 20 years, instead of the 3- to 5-year short-term mortgage notes, which may or may not be renewable or renewed, and may or may not be foreclosed at the end of that period. As the Senator realizes, as the end of the period approaches, the home owner, if he has not been able to accumulate enough money to pay the mortgage at the end of the 3-year period, or the 5-year period, or make a substantial curtailment, has hanging over him the constant fear that he will be foreclosed and sold out, or that he will have to go to some other lending institution for refinancing, with considerable fees and charges incident to such a transaction.

The result will be, on the whole, that, by reason of the insurance, by reason of the guaranty, only upon approved safety of these mortgages, which assurance they have not | loans, or approved lending agencies, the home owner will be able, by reason of the enlargement of the facilities of credit, and a greater willingness on the part of men with money to invest in mortgages on real estate, to obtain the necessary funds, up to $2,000 for repairs, and, under the other sections of the bill, for larger amounts, not to exceed $16,000, with reference to existing construction or new construction.

> Mr. BLACK. I wanted to find out whether a statement I had read was correct. I have not had a chance to read the bill. I understood that the Government would guarantee 20 percent of an individual loan.

> Mr. BARKLEY. No; not of an individual loan. The Government guarantees up to 20 percent of an aggregate of loans made by any of these lending agencies, but it does not deal in individual loans. It guarantees that if there are losses, up to 20 percent, the Government will make good the losses on the aggregate amount of such approved and guaranteed mortgages.

> Mr. BLACK. Does the building-and-loan association, for instance, which has the guaranty, have a claim on the mortgaged property superior to the claim of the Government for its 20 percent?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Government's claim for the 20 percent does not, as I recall-and if I am mistaken about that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley] will correct me-go to the individual mortgage. The building-and-loan association or the lending agency, whatever it might be, which has a mortgage on an individual home, would still have a mortgage on that home, and the Government guarantees up to a maximum of 20 percent the amount of the aggregate mortgages which are guaranteed under the provisions of the act, and not as to a particular piece of property.

Mr. BULKLEY. May I get clearly the question of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]?

Mr. BLACK. I want to state very frankly that I am asking the question because I am very much interested in that particular point. As I have read, I gathered that what the Government was going to do under this bill in part was to guarantee loans on mortgages up to 20 percent of the amount, and that the Government's claim would be subordinate to that of the mortgagee, and if that is true, I would not favor the provision.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; that is not true. Mr. BULKLEY. No; that is not quite correct. There are two separate kinds of guarantees which are being undertaken by this bill. Title I provides for 20-percent guarantee of loans made for renovation and repair of homes. Not 20 percent of any one loan, but 20 percent of all of the loans made by any one approved lender. These loans are to be made by financial institutions approved by the Administrator. Title II provides a different kind of guarantee. That is a guarantee of mortgages.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves title I. I see the Government would guarantee 20 percent of a certain aggregate or pool of loans. What protection does the Government get? Is it protected both by the mortgage and the guaranty of the loan company?

Mr. BULKLEY. No; there is not necessarily any mortgage guaranty at all. It is contemplated that there will be a loss to the Government under this title, but that probably the loss will not be very great. Loans of that character made to borrowers who have character and earning capacity, with payments spread over a period of years, have proven in practice to be very good risks, and testimony was given to the committee that losses on similar risks run only to 2 or 3 percent. It is my personal opinion that the loss would be rather higher than that in this operation, but will fall still very far short of the 20-percent guarantee. But it is contemplated that the Government will suffer a loss on this.

The reason we justify this provision is that it will make possible a considerable expenditure of money on needed repairs and renovation and thereby stimulate business in trades which very much need stimulation at this time.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I might point out to the Senator from Alabama that if there is any loss the lending agency stands 80 percent of the loss and the Government 20 percent.

Mr. BLACK. That is the point I was asking about.

Mr. BULKLEY. The lending agency does not stand any loss unless it exceeds 20 percent of the total amount of the loans made by that agency. If there should be a total loss of all loans made by any one agency, then the agency would stand 80 percent of the loss.

Mr. COUZENS. That is what I meant, that it was possible under the terms of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. But it is inconceivable that there should be a total loss of the aggregate of all the loans made for repairs and for renovation.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that it is inconceivable at all, because the Government has no security, nor does the one who would advance the money have any security, for there may very well be a mortgage that will take up all the property in foreclosure. Therefore there would be nothing left to either the one who advances the money or the Government.

Mr. BULKLEY. I must say that there is abundant experience in the making of loans of that character, and that the losses do not approximate 100 percent from actual experience; they do not approximate 20 percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. It might be possible to conceive of a single transaction in which there would be a total loss, but it is certainly difficult to conceive of a total, 100-percent loss, on all the aggregate loans made for repairs and renovations under title I.

Mr. HEBERT. It would not be a total loss for all the amount that is loaned in the aggregate, naturally, but there might well be instances where neither the Government nor the lender could recover anything back.

Mr. BULKLEY. In a particular instance; yes.

Mr. HEBERT. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. But that would go to make up 20 percent of the total liability of the Government on the aggregate of all the loans out. It would be a part of it.

all the loans out. It would be a part of it.

Mr. HEBERT. May I ask the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley] a question? Is there a premium charged for that 20-percent insurance?

Mr. BULKLEY. No; there is no premium charged. Mr. HEBERT. There is no premium charged?

Mr. BULKLEY. The lender receives 20-percent insurance automatically as an inducement to make loans of this particular character. Frankly it is contemplated that the Government will lose some money.

Mr. HEBERT. Of course, the Government cannot make money on it; that is sure.

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not intended that the Government should make money on it.

Mr. HEBERT. On the subject of the insurance on these mortgages, the rate may be as high as 1 percent.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is right.

Mr. HEBERT. And the rate of the mortgage must be 5 percent. It may be 6 percent where the mortgage market justifies that rate.

Mr. BULKLEY. It must not exceed 5 percent.

Mr. HEBERT. It must not exceed 5 percent?

Mr. BULKLEY. Unless in special circumstances the Administrator finds it necessary.

Mr. HEBERT. So that the insurance premium will use up 20 percent of the mortgage interest.

Mr. BULKLEY. It is contemplated that the insurance premium is in addition to the interest. The 5 percent or the 6 percent is merely pure interest.

Mr. HEBERT. I do not quite understand the Senator.

Mr. BULKLEY. If a mortgage is made under this provision, the interest shall not exceed 5 percent, that is to say the pure interest. In addition to that, 1 percent may be added as the cost of insurance, and then, in addition to that, amortization payments shall be required, so that the borrower will have to pay 5-percent interest, plus 1-percent cost of insurance, plus approximately 3-percent amortization, or perhaps 9 percent in all.

Mr. HEBERT. I fail, Mr. President, to find any provision in this bill which would require that.

Mr. BULKLEY. The provision, I am frank to say to the Senator, does not satisfy my own mind. It is there, but not quite as clear as it should be, in my opinion. There is, however, no doubt about the intent.

Mr. FLETCHER. The home owner pays approximately 6-percent interest. The investor receives 5-percent interest. The insurance fund retains the difference of 1 percent.

Mr. HEBERT. Yes, Mr. President; but who pays that 1-percent insurance premium? I know the Senator from Ohio says that that is charged as a part of the cost of the mortgage to the mortgagor, but there is no provision in this bill that requires that to be done.

Mr. BULKLEY. I think not as clearly as it should, but, if the Senator will notice, on page 7, beginning in line 16, the language is to—Provide, in a manner satisfactory to the Administrator, for the application of the mortgagor's periodic payments—

And now in the parentheses is the important thing—(exclusive of the amount allocated to interest and to the premium charge for mortgage insurance as hereinafter provided).

I will say to the Senator that it is my purpose to offer an amendment to make that more clear, but I can assure him that the intent of the committee was to restrict the pure interest under paragraph 5 of section 203, and that the insurance premium should be an additional charge.

Mr. HEBERT. Then in that event it will cost the mortgagor 7 percent plus amortization on his mortgage if the rate permitted is 6 percent interest?

Mr. BULKLEY. If the rate permitted is 6 percent, another 1 percent could be added for insurance, but it is subject to this qualification, that the mortgagor is charged only the amount the insurance actually costs. A certain group of mortgages is insured, and if the insurance premiums paid on them are more than enough to pay losses in that group, the mortgagor gets the benefit at the end of the transaction.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, there is no provision for that in the bill, as I recollect it.

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; there is a provision for that.

Mr. HEBERT. But, on the contrary, if the insurance fund should be insufficient at any time to meet the claims upon it, then an assessment could be levied against the mortgagee.

Mr. BULKLEY. No; there is no further assessment against the mortgagee.

Mr. HEBERT. Let me read the provision to the Senator. I read from page 34, line 17, paragraph (b):

The Corporation is further authorized to assess against each insured institution additional premiums for insurance until the amount of such premiums equals the amount of all losses and expenses of the Corporation.

Mr. BULKLEY. The Senator is reading from another title, on a subject entirely different from the subject about which we are talking. He is reading from the title relating to the insurance of savings and loan accounts, and there is no such provision in title II.

Mr. HEBERT. Insurance of savings and loan accounts has reference to the insurance of mortgages, as I understand.

Mr. BULKLEY. No, sir; that is an entirely different provision. Insurance of mortgages is title 2, and insurance of savings and loan accounts is title 4. The provision which the Senator is reading has no reference whatever to insurance of mortgages. I now call the Senator's attention to the provision for reimbursing the mortgagors. It is on page 15, paragraph (c):

Whenever the credit balance in any group account-

That refers to the credit balance in the insurance fund, because it is provided that the 1-percent premium which is charged goes into a special fund, and is held as an insurance against losses that may occur in that particular group. Whenever that amount—exceeds the remaining unpaid principal of the then outstanding mortgages assigned to such group by an amount equal to 10 percent of the total premium payments which have theretofore been credited to such account, the Administrator shall terminate the insurance as to that group of mortgages (1) by paying to each of the mortgagees holding an outstanding mortgage assigned to such group a sum sufficient, if such mortgage is in good standing, to pay off such mortgage in full, the payment in each case being for the benefit and account of the mortgagor.

So if there are no losses in that particular group the insurance fund will accumulate from year to year until it will be more than the entire unpaid balances of mortgages in that group, and in that case the mortgages will be paid off by the use of that balance. So the mortgagor will presumably get some rebate out of that premium fund. It is strictly an insurance payment and not an additional interest payment.

Mr. HEBERT. That is "a consummation devoutly to be wished"; but when we have in mind the experience of the surety companies that have been insuring mortgages in the past and have all gone broke, I hesitate to think what will happen under this kind of a provision in this bill. I am not so sanguine about the profits to be derived from the insurance fund as is the Senator, or as are those who have prepared this bill.

Mr. BULKLEY. The Senator is entitled to express an opinion, of course, but it is submitted that the character of loans insured here is different from the character of loans the insurance companies had trouble with.

Mr. HEBERT. If I may add this observation, I happen to know of the experience of some of the very best-managed building and loan associations in the country, and, with all the care they have exercised in negotiating their loans. with an experience of some 30 years to guide them, with the broadest investigation that could be made before loans were negotiated, they have experienced the foreclosure of some 10 percent of the total amount of their loans in force, and upon all those foreclosures, with all the care they have exercised, they expect to lose as much as 10 percent of the amount they have loaned. That is the actual experience of some building-and-loan associations with whose business I am familiar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator will realize, though, that that situation comes about very largely because of the fact that loans were made, in part at least, during a boom period of building and construction, which was followed by the most severe depression we have ever had and the lowering of values to such an extent that the condition the Senator has described was inevitable. We are beginning this operation on the bottom of the well, and these mortgages will be paid largely from valuations that have no boom relationships. It would not be possible for the losses to anything like approximate those which have been experienced by some of the companies in previous years.

Mr. HEBERT. Of course, the cost of construction now is higher than it has been for years, as the Senator well knows. I suppose this bill contemplates that loans will be made for construction of new homes, and in that case we are going to have the boom values right back in the mortgages.

Mr. BARKLEY. The acceleration, the wild speculation in the building of homes will not be present as it was for 5 or 10 years prior to 1929.

Mr. HEBERT. I should assume that would be so, but I am taking now the experience over the years, and many of the mortgages I have in mind were mortgages which were made in normal times.

Mr. BULKLEY. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the figures he has stated would not disturb the insurance fund here proposed to be set up. Ten percent of foreclosures could easily be absorbed under the amount of insurance the bill proposes to set up. The insurance premium is 1 percent of the face of the mortgage running over the full term of the mortgage, so that if payments were made regularly by every borrower there would be a 20-percent reserve in the fund. Ten percent of foreclosures by no means represents a loss of the entire amount. Every foreclosure has some salvage value, and the losses which the Senator suggests would be easily met by this fund.

Mr. HEBERT. But, Mr. President, it must be assumed that every mortgage must take care of itself. In the aggregate we are going to have a 10-percent loss, and we are going to have a 1-percent premium. It will take 10 years to accumulate enough to take care of that loss; it will take insurance premiums over a period of 10 years to take care of the loss.

Mr. BULKLEY. The bill provides that the insurance payments are to be made for 20 years.

Mr. HEBERT. Exactly. But what is going to happen to the foreclosures which will occur the first year and second year and up to the tenth year? There will not be enough money to take care of them.

Mr. BULKLEY. The money will be advanced if the losses take place at an early date.

Mr. HEBERT. Advanced how?

Mr. BULKLEY. From the Treasury. Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, of course if there were foreclosures and losses on all the loans made, the Senator from Rhode Island would be correct, but we must figure on the law of averages, and there will be insurance premiums collected with respect to many loans where there will be no loss and no foreclosures.

Mr. HEBERT. That is true. Mr. BULKLEY. Let me say a word further. The losses are paid not in cash but in debentures running for a period of 3 years beyond the maturity of the mortgage; so that there is no cash advance required at all.

Mr. HEBERT. But ultimately the money has to be paid, just the same.

Mr. BULKLEY. If there is any loss; but the Senator's objection was that the loss might come so early that there would not be enough in the fund. I answer that by saying that the losses will be paid not by cash at all but by debentures, which will have a maturity of 3 years beyond the date of the last maturity in the fund.

Mr. HEBERT. The mortgagee will not receive the amount of his mortgage.

Mr. BULKLEY. He will not receive cash; he will receive debentures, payable 3 years after the maturity of his

Mr. HEBERT. In other words, the debentures will run for a period of 23 years.

Mr. BULKLEY. No; for whatever time the period may happen to be. If the mortgage should be for 20 years and the foreclosure happened after 2 years, then there would be 18 years yet to run on the mortgage, plus 3 years, and so the debenture would run for 21 years.

Mr. HEBERT. The mortgagee would then receive 3-percent interest on his money.

Mr. BULKLEY. For the remainder of the term after the foreclosure.

Mr. HEBERT. Yes; for the remainder of the term.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, my reading of the provision is that the debentures are for 3 years after their issuance.

Mr. BULKLEY. For 3 years after the maturity of the mortgage with respect to which the foreclosure was made.

Mr. HASTINGS. So that if the mortgage runs for 20 years, and is foreclosed at the end of 2, the debentures will run for 21 years?

Mr. BULKLEY. That is correct. Mr. HASTINGS. I did not so read it.

May I ask another question while I am on my feet? I should like to call the Senator's attention to section 3, page 4, which provides:

Sec. 3. The Administrator is further authorized and empowered to make loans to institutions which are insured under section 2, and to enter into loan agreements with such institutions, upon the security of obligations which meet the requirements prescribed under section 2.

I do not find any "requirements" described under section 2 with respect to that particular feature.

Mr. BULKLEY. The requirements are that-the obligation bears such interest, has such maturity, and contains such other terms, conditions, and restrictions as the Administrator shall prescribe.

That is found in lines 4, 5, and 6 on page 4.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is that what the Senator calls "meeting the requirements"? Is that a compliance with the language?-

Upon the security of obligations which meet the requirements prescribed under section 2.

What lines did the Senator read from under section 2?

Mr. BULKLEY. I read from page 4, lines 4, 5, and 6. There is also a limit as to the total amount of the loan which may be made—that it shall not exceed $2,000.

Mr. HASTINGS. I should not think that that can be clear to anybody who may undertake to administer this proposed law.

There is another question I should like to ask with respect to section 204, on pages 8 and 9. I find in other places in this bill that it is provided for the property being transferred to the Administrator. There is no provision which I can find in that section or pertaining to that section such as I find in other sections-language to this effect-

Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of such associations from taxation by any State or political sub-division thereof, to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

I assume if it is not in there somewhere—and I have not been able to find it—it is an oversight.

Mr. BULKLEY. I should assume so. My impression is that it is in, but, if it is not, I should be glad to support an amendment to that effect.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague the limit of the amount which the Corporation is authorized to issue. It is $3,200,000,000, is it not?

Mr. BULKLEY. That refers to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation debentures.

Mr. FESS. On page 4, under the allocation of funds, these funds are to be allocated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as I understand?

Mr. HASTINGS. No.

Mr. BULKLEY. The Senator understands, of course, that this is an entirely different provision and is not related to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation at all.

Mr. FESS. What is the meaning in line 20, on page 4, of the words-

For the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this title and title II, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall make available to the Administrator such funds as he may deem necessary.

There is no limit to that, is there?

Mr. BULKLEY. There is no limit at that point, but it is limited by the authorization to the administrator. The administrator under title I is limited to $200,000,000 of insurance on line 24, page 3, and with respect to loans provided in section 3 he is limited, in fact, to $1,000,000,000, and it is inconceivable that this amount could be anywhere nearly required, because he is authorized to loan 100 percent against any of the obligations provided for in section 2. The total amount which is possible of such obligations is $1,000,000,000, and one would have to assume that every single one of them was loaned by the administrator up to 100 percent in order to make $1,000,000,000 there. Of course, that is not the contemplation of the bill at all. The contemplation of the bill is that private capital shall advance the money. Paragraph (c) is only a reassurance to private capital that there is a way to get out from under in case of necessity.

Mr. FESS. But the limitation on the administrator is the amount that is authorized, which would be $1,000,000,000.

Mr. BULKLEY. Theoretically it would be $1,000,000,000, but it is inconceivable that it could be any such amount.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, in connection with section 4, is it contemplated that directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall have anything to say about it?

Mr. BULKLEY. Not the slightest, and they do not need to do so, because they can issue additional bonds to make up whatever they turn oyer.

Mr. HASTINGS. But their judgment is not sought nor is it necessary to get it?

Mr. BULKLEY. No.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is just a way of getting the money? Mr. BULKLEY. Exactly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Usually in setting up these agencies it has been deemed advisable to have some kind of administrative board for the purpose of having the benefit of counsel to some degree. What is the idea of concentrating all the perfectly enormous authority in one administrator instead of some kind of administrative group?

Mr. BULKLEY. As the bill passed the House it did provide for a board. The Senate committee thought it better to concentrate the responsibility in one man.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is there any place in the bill, a provision under which the administrator is required to report either to Congress or to the President in respect to his operations?

Mr. BULKLEY. There should be.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I did not find it as I looked through the bill

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, further answering the question about the board, in the House bill, and originally in the Senate bill, which is now before the Senate, provision was made for a board of from 5 to 7 chosen from various departments; in other words, an ex-officio board drawn from other activities where men are already overworked.

We had some experience years ago in the creation of a power commission which was ex officio, composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of the Interior. Of course, they were busy with their respective duties in the Cabinet, and they appointed an executive clerk who maintained an office, and that executive clerk really became the power commission. We later had to create a real Power Commission, which is now in existence.

It was the feeling of the Senate committee, and also of others who had part in the framing of the legislation, that ex-officio boards have not been satisfactory; that in a matter of this sort somebody has to accept responsibility, and that it would be better to have an administrator at whom responsibility could be pointed, and from whom responsibility could be exacted, than to have an ex-officio board which might of necessity turn over its work to some executive clerk, who would, after all, be the administrator of the act.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agreed we do not need an exofficio board, but is there not a large amount of discretion and judgment to be exercised by the administrator in respect of the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. There is undoubtedly, especially with respect to the approval of lending agencies and things of that sort. There is very great discretion and, of course, consequently very great responsibility.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator be willing under any circumstances to do away with the Federal Reserve Board and concentrate all its powers and authorities in a Federal Reserve administrator?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not sure that the situation is at all analogous. I should not want to answer that question categorically without giving it further consideration. The fact that we have a Federal Reserve Board representing districts, in a sense, its members coming from different parts of the country, with power to control the credit of the country, it seems to me is quite a different situation than is involved in the administration of an act designed to afford facilities for lending agencies, the reemployment of labor, and the movement of heavy materials, to start again the activities of business in a line which is terrifically depressed, is at the bottom of the list now in industrial activities.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree with all the Senator said respecting administrative acts, but it seems to me there are acts of discretion and judgment and maintenance of general policy which are involved.

Mr. BULKLEY. Surely the Senator would concede that the Federal Reserve Board deals much more with questions of general policy than this administrator would.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. BULKLEY. So it would hardly be a fair comparison. It is possible to take the view, as the House did, that it would be better to have a board. That is a respectable opinion. The Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate thought it would be better to concentrate the responsibility, and regard it as an administrative job and give it to one man.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Am I to understand the House bill provides for a board?

Mr. BULKLEY. It does.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Can the Senator indicate to me any point in the bill where it is provided that the administrator is responsible to anybody under the text of the Senate bill?

Mr. BULKLEY. I think it quite possible there is no provision in the bill for a report. I think there should be such a provision. I fully agree with the Senator. I regret to say we have been under some haste in getting the bill reported, and I think the Senator has indicated a defect.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not see that the administrator is even responsible to the President after he once gets started in this adventure.

Mr. BULKLEY. We will take care of that.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to invite the Senator's attention to section 301, which provides for a corporation which shall have $5,000,000 paid in before it begins to do business, and, as I recall, it has the right to issue bonds and debentures for 10 times that amount.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is a private corporation.
Mr. HASTINGS. That would make a $55,000,000 corporation. Section 305 provides that the administrator shall have power to provide for examination of associations.

order its liquidation and the winding up of its affairs in any case in which the administrator finds that the association is violating any provisions of this title or of any rule or regulation thereunder, or any case in which he finds that the association is conducting its business in an unsafe and unbusinesslike

Section 306 provides:

The administrator shall have power to provide by rules and regulations for the liquidation, reorganization, consolidation, or merger of national mortgage associations, including the pow to appoint a conservator or a receiver to take charge of the affairs of any such association, to require an equitable readjustment of its capital structure, to release it from the control of a conservator or receiver, and to permit its further operation.

Was it the intent to give to the administrator full authority to stop this $55,000,000 corporation from operating, to appoint a receiver for it under his own ruling?

Mr. BULKLEY. Under the conditions laid down in the bill, of course.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is practically the same power the Comptroller of the Currency has over all national banks.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Comptroller of the Currency does not do it himself. When a bank fails a receiver is appointed under order of the court.

Mr. BULKLEY. No; he appoints the receiver. Mr. HASTINGS. Is it not done under authority of the court?

Mr. BULKLEY. No; the Comptroller appoints the receiver.

Mr. HASTINGS. All right. I think the Senator is wrong about that; but assuming that to be correct I want to find out whether it is the purpose here to give to the Administrator the full power which ordinarily would belong to a court with respect to these $55,000,000 corporations. I ask the

Mr. BULKLEY. It is the intent to give the power that is clearly laid down in the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is precisely the power the Comptroller of the Currency has now over national banks. National banks are not wound up and receivers are not appointed by courts. The Comptroller of the Currency appoints the receivers. He determines whether the capital structure of the bank has been impaired. He determines whether there shall be reorganization. He determines the terms of the reorganization. He charters any new bank that might be built on the ruins of the one which is in receivership. The power and authority that is conferred here is the same that the Comptroller of the Currency has over all national banks of the country.

Mr. HASTINGS. If that be true, it is a law which has been enacted during this excitement, and I did not know anything about it.

Mr. BULKLEY. Oh, no; it has been the law all the time. Mr. HASTINGS. Let me say to the Senator that since I have been here I have had from Middletown, Del., many complaints, and I submitted those complaints to the Comptroller of the Currency, with respect to winding up the affairs of a bank for which a receiver has been appointed, and that was done through the Federal court at Wilmington.

Mr. BARKLEY. There may be instances in which a creditor would go into court and ask for the appointment of a receiver. I do not know how long it has been the law, but not since I have been a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency do I recall any institution like a national bank which has gone into receivership where the Comptroller of the Currency did not make the appointment of the receiver and pass on questions of reorganization, consolidation, merger, and all such things.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am just trying to find out whether or not the effort is made here. I think it has been done, and, so far as I see, it is complete. No person having invested his money in this $55,000,000 corporation can go to a court for any purpose with respect to winding up the corporation, or with respect to any injustice that may have been done to him; but he is solely dependent upon such rules and regulations as may be made by some inexperienced administrator-I mean, inexperienced in that sort of litigation and that sort of winding up of corporations.

I just wanted to call that to the Senator's attention.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I have been somewhat surprised that so eminent a lawyer as the Senator from Delaware is not aware that the Comptroller of the Currency may appoint receivers of national banks.

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, I did not say that.

Mr. BULKLEY. Let me read from the act of June 3, 1864. That act provides that on becoming satisfied, as specified in certain sections-that any association has refused to pay its circulating notes as therein mentioned, and is in default, the Comptroller of the Cur-rency may forthwith appoint a receiver, and require of him such bond and security as he deems proper.

That is any national bank.

Mr. HASTINGS. I did not dispute that; but the bill goes much further than that. The bill not only provides for the appointment of a receiver, but it provides for such rules and regulations with respect to this corporation as the administrator may think necessary for winding up the whole thing, without any opportunity of any interested party to go into court at all, as I read the bill.

The point I was making, the distinction between this case and the one I pointed out to the Senator from Kentucky, is that when the receiver appointed by the Comptroller sells the property, he has to have the sale confirmed by the court. The Comptroller names the receivers, but they are all under the direction of the court. After that I think there are certain limitations, and the Comptroller himself does have certain authority which does not ordinarily apply to an individual, for instance; but certainly when the corporation is to be wound up and its assets sold and distributed, it is done under the supervision of the court. Here this administrator over a huge corporation, a $55,000,000 institution. is given the right to do everything in connection with it that could possibly be done under a court, without the supervision of any court.

Mr. BULKLEY. We have not given him the right to do anything to any corporation that now exists.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is true. Mr. BULKLEY. And nobody is required to make any investment in this corporation unless he is entirely satisfied with the provisions of the measure we are here

Mr. HASTINGS. I desire to say to the proponents of this bill that if they are interested in making the corporation a success, and in getting the $5,000,000, plus fifty more million dollars, it seems to me I am doing them some service if I call to their attention the fact that under there conditions it may not be possible to get anybody to pay in the $5,000,000. I think the suggestion the Senator made is correct. I doubt whether anybody would do so under such circumstances.

Mr. BULKLEY. If they did, certainly they could not complain that the power was extreme.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio one or two questions.

I have had a great many telegrams from loan associations expressing fear in regard to the operation of this measure. I presume the Senator and the committee also have received such telegrams.

Mr. BULKLEY. Many of them.

Mr. BORAH. Were these associations heard, or were their objections taken into consideration?

Mr. BULKLEY. Oh, yes; their representatives have been heard. Of course, we could not hear every association.

Mr. BORAH. I mean, were they given an opportunity to present the matter?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes, Mr. President; and modifications have been made which, as I have already stated, are satisfactory to at least a large part of the savings-and-loan associations, and I am not sure but that they would practically all be satisfied.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, bearing upon that point, what was the attitude of the building-and-loan associations respecting the rate of premium to be charged for this insurance?

Mr. BULKLEY. Their representatives indicated that they thought the rate was quite high; but of course the answer to that is that any insurance rate is higher than the expected losses. The insured gets the benefit of it in the long run if it proves to be more than is necessary.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the rate provided in the bill?

Mr. BULKLEY. It may be not less than one-half of 1 per cent and not more than 1 percent, according to the estimation of the risk of the particular group of mortgages in-

Mr. VANDENBERG. My understanding is that that is seriously objected to by the building-and-loan associations. Is that correct?

Mr. BULKLEY. I think we are talking now about another thing; about the insurance of savings-and-loan accounts. Is that what the Senator means?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is what I mean.

Mr. BULKLEY. Then the rate is one-half of 1 percent on the insured accounts and kindred obligations, plus the right to assess an additional one-quarter of 1 percent in case the losses justify it.

I will say to the Senator that the one-half of 1 percent is intended to build up a reserve fund, and is not intended to go on permanently. By the terms of the bill they are to cease to assess the one-half of 1 percent when the reserve fund shall have been built up to 5 percent. My own personal opinion is that the one-half of 1 percent, plus a possible additional one-quarter of 1 percent, is unduly high. I should prefer to see the additional quarter waived at this time, and provide for a straight assessment of one-half of 1 percent out of which losses may be paid, such assessment to continue until the fund shall have reached 5 percent, and to be revived if at any time in the future the fund shall fall below 5 percent.

Mr' VANDENBERG. The building-and-loan associations consider that the one-half of 1 percent is exorbitant and burdensome; do they not?

Mr. BULKLEY. They consider that it is high, but I do not know that they would characterize it as exorbitant and burdensome if we should cut out the other one-quarter of 1 percent, and under the circumstances I have related, that it should be only until the reserve fund shall be built up

Mr. VANDENBERG. While I am on my feet I should like to ask the Senator one further question regarding a previous colloquy that we had. I am interested in the Senator's opinion respecting what will happen as respects competition between banks and building-and-loan associations after this new insurance goes into effect.

The ordinary building-and-loan association pays 4, 5, or 6 percent upon deposits. As the Senator knows, when we set up the F.D.I.C. we found it absolutely necessary to limit the rate of interest to be paid upon insured deposits to 3 percent, and probably in the long run it will have to be reduced to 21/2 percent in order to make the cost of the insurance livable to the banks. All right. Now, suppose day after tomorrow a bank with the Government's insurance behind it is paying a depositor 21/2 percent, and a building association with the same governmental responsibility behind it is paying a depositor 5 percent. Why should anybody put his money in a bank, or leave it in a bank?

Mr. BULKLEY. We provide in the bill that an insured institution may not issue securities which guarantee a definite return or which have a definite maturity. Of course we cannot prevent them from paying out to their shareholders whatever their earnings may be, and the Senator would not want to do that. If their earnings happen to be very good, that may be an inducement to depositors to invest their money there; but they are prohibited by the bill from guaranteeing any definite return at all. So it is all contingent on what they earn.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I know the Senator has wholly the same interest that I have in the F.D.I.C., and I take it that his considered conclusion is that there is no competition hazard of the type I have been indicating by my questions.

Mr. BULKLEY. My considered conclusion is that we have handled a difficult situation in the best way we know how, and that there is nothing that can be said to be certainly wrong about this. Experience may show us something new.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, is there any hope here of getting lower interest rates for the borrowers?

Mr. BULKLEY. I think the tendency will to reduce interest rates to the borrowers.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Referring to these loan companies that pay as high as 5 and 6 percent, is there any way to bring that down? Does not the Senator think that is an unjustified profit?

I have letters from people in Minnesota who have borrowed money from the Home Loan Corporation. They say that the Corporation borrows money for 3 percent and charges them 5 percent. They protest against charging so much for simply collecting interest on a loan.

Mr. BULKLEY. For the most part, those who have loans from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation are paying a lower interest rate now than they were before the Home Owners' Loan Corporation took them over.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator consider that this housing bill is supplementary to the loan law that is now

Mr. BULKLEY. It is; and that is the purpose of it. I have no doubt the effect of it will be to reduce interest rates, but I should hesitate to make any specific prediction as to just how much it might accomplish that end.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. We have, for instance, the same problem in connection with farm mortgages. So far as I am informed, the interest on farm mortgages has not been reduced, although the mortgage bonds are now guaranteed by the Government and the bonds carry a very low rate of interest.

Mr. BULKLEY. That will be a problem to take up in connection with the farm-credit discussion.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. In the State of California we have a very stringent law relating to building-and-loan associations, one which probably is different from the laws of most of the States of the Union.

Under section 403 of the bill the Senator will observe the words "issue certificates which guarantee a definite return or which have a definite maturity", and so on.

California associations will be affected by the retention of this language unless some sort of ameliorating amendment can be obtained. More than 90 percent of the business of our building-and-loan associations is on the basis of a fixed rate of interest. Not only that, but our law requires that the certificates which are issued shall state the definite rate of interest.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether that rate of interest is stated without regard to whether it shall have been earned by the association or not, or is it subject to the earnings of the association?

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not entirely clear. At any rate, it is required that the interest shall be stated in the certificate.

I can state that with finality.

Mr. BULKLEY. If it is subject to its being earned, it would not contravene the intent, at least, of this provision. If it is stated that a certain rate of interest is to be paid at all events, whether earned or not, the Senator can readily understand that it would be subject to the criticism already suggested by the Senator from Michigan, that we would be in the position of having the Government guarantee a 4-percent rate, or some other rate, on a particular transaction, when the earnings might not justify it. Of course, there is no intent to damage the associations of California, and I hope the Senator will give his attention to helping us perfect this measure in such a manner that, consistently with sound principles, we may bring those associations in.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wanted to suggest to the Senator that he might glance at the amendments desired during the time of the debate, if he has the opportunity, first, in section 403, to strike out the last two words on line 6, and all of line 7.

Mr. FLETCHER. On what page?

Mr. JOHNSON. Page 32, and the first two words of line 8, as follows: "issue certificates which guarantee a definite return or which have a definite maturity or."

Inasmuch as we are required to state a definite rate of interest in our certificates, the provision which stands in the bill now, which I have just suggested might be stricken out, would exclude the very large majority of the building-and-loan associations of the State of California, and the amendment suggested, to strike out the provision, would not injuriously affect or damage seriously building-and-loan associations of any State, so far as I am aware.

Mr. BULKLEY. It would leave us wide open to the criticism made by the Senator from Michigan, that we would then be in the position of having the Government guarantee a fixed return without being satisfied that it was justified.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have great respect for the Senator from Michigan, and for the criticism he indulges, but I am not entirely clear that it would be particularly persuasive in this matter.

Mr. BULKLEY. I do not intend to rest it entirely on the Senator from Michigan. I am glad to accept responsibility for agreeing with him.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection, if one of these associations guaranteed, say, 5 percent, and it earned only 3, would the Senator have this guarantee apply to a transaction of that sort?

Mr. JOHNSON. If it did not equal its earning power, of course I would not wish it, because of the possibilities; but that cannot occur under the peculiar law of the State of California. Yet they require that the rate of interest shall be stated.

There is another provision, fixing a 50-mile limit.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, we have already agreed to extend that to a hundred miles.

Mr. JOHNSON. In a State of such wide expanse territorially as ours a 50-mile limit would be a practical absurdity, and I assume the same would apply to a State like Texas, and probably to a State like Ohio.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Arkansas raised that question a while ago, and, inasmuch as the bill as it passed the House contains no limit, we felt that we could iron that out in conference and fix a satisfactory limit. It may be that, under the special circumstances, even a hundred miles would be too small a limit; but we have expanded the provision to a hundred-mile limit, which is still subject to adjustment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand that an amendment has already been agreed to in the Senate expanding the limit to 100 miles.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And that in the bill as it passed the House there is no limit.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. So that the only matter in conference will be whether the limit shall be eliminated, or whether the Senate provision shall be agreed to, or some further expansion than that made.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thank the Senator. I was not aware that the matter had been attended to, and I knew that the Senate committee bill fixed a 50-mile limit.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I, myself, suggested an amendment, and I think the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl] offered an amendment which was incorporated in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that if the striking out of the definite-return provision to which I have referred cannot be had, there may be an alternative, which would not be unsatisfactory; that is, in line 8, to insert the words—

Provided, That this requirement shall be waived in the case of State-chartered associations in States where the law requires a definite rate of interest to be stated will not.

Mr. BULKLEY. I assure the Senator that it is the purpose of the committee to try to work this matter out in such a way as to be satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I say that I do not believe that the building-and-loan associations of California would be seriously affected by this provision, and I think the Senator will agree that it would not be fair for the Government to insure an association, and, after that—and this is what it says—after it becomes an insured institution allow the association to issue certificates guaranteeing a certain rate of interest. That would open the door wide. The Government would insure an association, and after that the association would agree to pay its members any amount of interest. That, of course, would be bad.

Mr. JOHNSON. The law of the State of California safeguards the rate of interest which shall be declared. I have no doubt that it is based upon earning capacity and the like, although I did not answer categorically the question of the Senator from Ohio, because my recollection may be faulty with respect to that. But it safeguards it. I think probably the law in our State is more stringent than and undoubtedly different from that of any other State in the Union.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very likely it would not be interfered with.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am seeking to prevent difficulty, if that be possible. I have this morning received a telegram from an ex-Governor of our State for whom I have a very great respect, who is tremendously exercised, because he thinks, just as this memorandum which has been afforded me states, that with the measure in its present form we would practically exclude the vast majority of the building-andloan associations in the State of California, and I know that there is no such intent.

Mr. BULKLEY. Let me suggest to the Senator that, inasmuch as we are all somewhat impelled by the desire to get through today, that there is no such provision as this in the bill as it passed the House, and it is therefore a matter which can be dealt with in conference, and perhaps we could do it more expeditiously in the way than by trying to resolve it further on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. That may be quite appropriate, and it may be that we could present to the conference the statement of our position-and I have it before me here-and ask the conference to consider, please, the particular matter.

Mr. BULKLEY. I hope the Senator will take that course, under the particular circumstances.

Mr. JOHNSON. I win do that in the interest of the saving of time. I do not want to offer a vast number of amendments here and have to argue them all with the Senator and take up the day in that sort of thing. That is far from any purpose of mine. So I shall submit to the Senator, if I may, the proposed amendments, when the bill goes to conference, and ask that he please consider them in the light of the singular law which exists in our State-more stringent than that in other States of the Union.

Mr. BULKLEY. Of course, we will work that out. Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not want to consume any more time in this particular connection, important as it is, than is absolutely necessary, but I wish to mention the fact that I have been listening very intently from the very start of the discussion to the discussion between the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from California. I feel that our situation in New Jersey is comparable with that described as existing in the State of California, if not exactly like it in all particulars.

I have had in mind the necessity of certain amendments which I would have had to offer and insist on if the bill remained in its present form, and would have the effect which we all feel in New Jersey it would have, in respect to our building-and-loan associations.

If that feature of the bill can be safeguarded, and the Senator and others who will be the conferees have it in mind and will positively take care of it, I, of course, am very glad to follow the good example of the Senator from California under the present peculiar circumstances prevailing on the last day of the session. And in doing so with him, rely on this important matter having the proper and necessary attention in conference.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I recognize what a dangerous course it is to pursue; that it is our duty to present our amendments here and fight them out; but I recognize, too, that we are at the very end of the session now-all of us are perfectly worn to the bone and ragged nervously, and are anxious to get away, and I do not know that there would be time to argue the amendments.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, that is exactly the point. I much prefer to have this matter settled on the floor, but because of the peculiar circumstances I hope that both the Senator from California and the Senator from New Jersey will trust to the good intention and the intelligence of the conferees.

Mr. JOHNSON. The only thing I ask is this: May I have the Senator's assurance that he will consider these matters if they are presented to him?

Mr. BULKLEY. Of course we will consider them, and with the purpose of trying to work out something that will be entirely satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BULKLEY. Of course, we do not know how to guarantee results.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I desire to conclude by saying that I am very glad to subscribe to the situation which has been described, and I do it with the realization that the Senator, while he cannot guarantee the results, he will do something really effective in this important connection.

Mr. BULKLEY. It is certainly our intent to work the provision out to the Senator's satisfaction.

Mr. BARBOUR. And my support of the measure, if given, will be based on the feeling that the Senator will do as much as can be done under those circumstances, and that something will be done.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is our hope and our intention.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator indicate to me what in his judgment would be the simplest way for me to raise the issue to take the Senate's judgment as to whether this enormous new enterprise should be run by one isolated administrator or by a board, as is provided in the House bill?

Mr. BULKLEY. One simple way would be to take the House provision and offer it as a substitute for the title.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Except that the changes run all the way through the bill, and I dislike to undertake to invade the whole fabric of the legislation.

Mr. BULKLEY. I can hardly advise the Senator how to tear down our bill, but I think what I suggested might be one thing to do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Take one vote on one title; take three or four votes on different titles; that would settle it, I think.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think that would not be as satisfactory as it would be if we could have the Senate's judgment as to whether this perfectly enormous power is to be put in the hands of one administrator. We have gone a long way in the matter of giving these concentrated powers before, but I do not think we ever approximated any such thing as this bill portends. Does not the Senator agree with me?

Mr. BULKLEY. I think that is a somewhat true statement. It is a large power, no doubt, but it is primarily an administrative power. I agree with the committee report that it would be better to concentrate the responsibility and give it to one man.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to make certain that I understand this title III correctly. I read it with some care, and, as I gather from it, it merely creates a corporation and provides that before it can begin business it must pay in $5,000,000 in cash, and then may borrow 10 times the amount.

Mr. BULKLEY. No; the bill does not create a corporation. It authorizes private individuals to incorporate themselves, and then provides that if $5,000,000 shall have been paid in for stock, debentures may be issued to the extent of 10 times that amount.

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course, that could be done now without any legislation such as this.

Mr. BULKLEY. Under certain State laws.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. BULKLEY. I think so.

Mr. HASTINGS. What is the particular advantage in putting it in here?

Mr. BULKLEY. It was considered that Federal control of such institutions would be of value from the point of view of the Federal Government, and that a national charter might be of value from the point of view of investors. Naturally this bill, however framed, will not prevent people from going ahead and incorporating under State charter if they think it is more advantageous to do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I hope the Senator will forgive me for these questions. It is a very technical subject, and it is the first time I have had an opportunity to be advised. Suppose I should move to substitute title I of the House bill for title I of the Senate bill. Is there any subject matter involved in such a motion except the establishment of a board instead of a single administrator?

Mr. BULKLEY. I should rather not answer that question offhand. I will try to give the Senator an explanation. Title I of the House bill, I am advised, includes mortgage insurance, of which we have made a separate title; but my present impression is that by striking out those paragraphs in the House bill which relate to mortgage insurance, the Senator could offer the rest of title I of the House bill as a substitute for our title I without raising any other question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have had protests from a great many communities in Wisconsin, from the building-andloan associations, directed against several provisions of the bill, but they all seem to emphasize as one of their objections the premium rate which has been fixed in this bill. This letter is typical:

The premium rate will cost annually approximately $5,000 for each $1,000,000 of assets. This is an absolutely prohibitive rate, and would raise in Wisconsin in 1 year many times the total losses occurring in Wisconsin in the past 70 years of building-and-loan experience. The premium rate must be drastically lowered and should be based upon the loss experience of the various States.

Can the Senator tell me whether any consideration was given to that suggestion?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; very careful consideration. The one-half of 1-percent premium rate is not intended to be a permanent thing. It is intended to build up the reserve to pay losses, and the one-half of 1 percent is to be continued only until a reserve of 5 percent shall have been built up. Of course, the Senator will recognize that all insurance, in order to be sound, must have some reserve, and the reserve must be built up at some time, and at the very beginning seems to be the most appropriate time for building it up.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I appreciate the necessity of reserves, but the statement contained in these letters is rather startling that in the first year the associations of Wisconsin will be asked under this premium rate as fixed in the bill to raise more money in 1 year than they have lost in 65 or 70 years of building-and-loan experience in the State.

Mr. BULKLEY. There is nothing to compel them to come in and take the insurance.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Of course; but the Senator realizes that if one association is insured and another is not, the compulsion is pretty drastic.

Mr. BULKLEY. I hope the Senator is going to help us set up a system which will be safe and sound, and which will really work through the years. I have already expressed the opinion on the floor, in answer to another inquiry, that when we add on top of that one-half of 1-percent premium the right to assess another one-fourth percent in case of losses, we are going to rather an unnecessary extreme.

It seems to me that the one-half of 1 percent would be quite sufficient and that losses could be paid out of that fund, and provision could be made that the one-half of 1 percent should continue to be paid until such time as the fund should reach 5 percent, whether it should take 10 years or a little longer, and then have the assessment revived if at any time in the future the fund should fall below 5 percent. But I hope the Senator is going to permit us to make such requirements as are necessary to set up a fund that will be adequate and will invite the confidence of the country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am in entire sympathy with the idea of erring on the safe side, but at the same time it seems to me, under the terms of the bill as it is now reported, that in these stressful times there is being laid a tremendous burden upon institutions in my State, for example, which have had this splendid record behind them.

Mr. BULKLEY. We cannot discriminate in favor of one State or another. We are making a national law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I appreciate that; but the Senator himself admits that he thinks the maximum available in the bill for premiums is, in his judgment, excessive.

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; I am frank to say that I will myself vote for an amendment to strike out that additional quarter percent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to offer an amendment after the committee amendments have been disposed of. Are there any committee amendments?

Mr. BULKLEY. There are some perfecting amendments.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then I will await the time of the disposition of the committee amendments.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BULKLEY. I yield the floor.

ADMINISTRATIVE FURLOUGHS IN THE POSTAL SERVICE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9046) to discontinue administrative furloughs in the Postal Service and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. McKellar, Mr. Hayden, and Mr. Schall conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 551) for the relief of A. W. Holland.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4253) for the relief of Laura Goldwater.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9145) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Rochester, N.Y., August 14, 15, and 16, 1934, and at the national convention of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War to be held at Colorado Springs, Colo., during the first week in July 1934.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3739) to authorize the President to transfer to the Government of Haiti without charge to that Government certain property of the United States in Haiti, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 59) to provide for the expenses of delegates of the United States to the Ninth Pan American Sanitary Conference, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2414) for the relief of Frank Salisbury, executor of the estate of Emerson C. Salisbury, deceased.

The message further announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H.R. 2418. An act for the relief of certain claimants at Leavenworth, Kans., occasioned through damage to property inflicted by escaping prisoners; and

H.R. 2669. An act for the relief of Paul I. Morris.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 46) providing that the provisions of S. 3696 be incorporated and printed in the proper place in the Canal Zone Code, H.R. 8700, prior to its enrollment and signature, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 9091. An act to amend the laws relating to proctors' and marshals' fees and bonds and stipulations in suits in admiralty:

H.R. 9861. An act to amend the Railway Labor Act, approved May 20, 1926, and to provide for the prompt disposition of disputes between carriers and their employees;

H.R. 9867. An act amending the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of 1935; and H.J.Res. 366. Joint resolution to simplify the administration of air-mail routes and contracts.

REGULATION OF BEVERAGES IN CANAL ZONE

Mr. GORE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a concurrent resolution coming over from the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (H.Con.Res. 46), as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of S. 3696, entitled "An act authorizing the President to make rules and regulations in respect to alcoholic beverages in the Canal Zone, and for other purposes", shall, with necessary editorial changes, be incorporated and printed in the proper place in the Canal Zone Code (H.R. 8700) prior to its enrollment and signature.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H.R. 9829. An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act with respect to the processing tax on hogs, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

H.R. 9867. An act amending the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of 1935; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

IMPROVEMENT IN HOUSING STANDARDS AND CONDITIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3794) to encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions, to provide a system of mutual mortgage insurance, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the amendment

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, in the proper place in title V, to insert subdivision (6) of section 2 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act as amended, so as to read as follows:

(6) The term "home mortgage" means a mortgage upon real estate, in fee simple, or leasehold under a lease for not less than 99 years, having a period of not less than 50 years to run from the date the mortgage was executed, upon which there is located a dwelling for not more than three families, and shall include, in addition to first mortgages, such classes of first liens as are commonly given to secure advances on real estate by institutions authorized under this act to become members, under the laws of the State in which the real estate is located, together with the credit instruments, if any, secured thereby.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in what respect does that change the provision?

Mr. BLACK. I will explain it very briefly, Mr. President. This is the suggestion about which I appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency in connection with the original Home Loan Bank Act.

I may state that under the original Home Loan Bank Act or subdivision 6 of section 2, it was provided that no loan should be made except under a renewable lease for a period of not less than 99 years. In other words, no loan could be made even on a 99-year lease or a 50-year lease. That has very injuriously affected only one community in the United States, and that is the town of Fairhope, Ala., which is perhaps the only single-tax colony in the world. The people of Fairhope, Ala., own their land by cooperative organization. They give each other a lease for 99 years. It is not renewable, although it is, of course, understood that the corporation is perpetual and the owners will continue to occupy their properties. They went there in order to get away from what they considered to be land speculation and land monopoly.

I understood that the Committee on Banking and Currency thoroughly agreed that this amendment should be adopted, and when I approached the Senator from Ohio yesterday he stated to me that the amendment had been adopted. On looking up the bill, however, he and I discovered that the amendment had been adopted only insofar as the proposed new legislation is concerned, but in the rush there was a failure to adopt the amendment insofar as the old legislation is concerned. The result would be that under the new legislation the owners of the Fairhope leases would come within the new legislation, but unless this amendment shall be adopted they will not come within the old legislation. That is the whole case.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is it proposed to make the bill retroactive?

Mr. BLACK. It is not a question of making it retroactive. Not a single loan has been made in that community. All I want is to have the privilege accorded to these people in the future of getting the benefit of loans.

I will again state to the Senator that the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, after the amendment was presented to them by me, called the attorney for the homeloan bank and adopted the amendment insofar as the new legislation is concerned. The people of Fairhope, therefore, can come under the new housing legislation; but unless this amendment shall be adopted they will still be cut off from the benefit of the original Home Loan Act, which I do not think anyone wants to do.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am in complete agreement with everything the Senator has said, except with respect to one statement; that is, the instance of which he speaks is not the only such instance. We have a case which, I believe, is exactly similar to the one to which the Senator from Alabama has referred, and that is the Ocean Grove Association in New Jersey. Their problem is identical, I feel, with the problem of the community referred to by the Senator from Alabama. I have been in close touch with the residents of Ocean Grove, and they are very anxious that there should be done for them the service of which the Senator speaks. Knowing of this situation, I myself had thought of preparing certain amendments; but I later learned that the Senator had in mind the one he is now presenting, and I was content with that. So I simply join him in his amendment.

Mr. BLACK. May I state that I do not think there is any objection anywhere from anybody to this amendment. There was none before the Banking and Currency Committee when it was presented, and they suggested to me that, instead of insisting upon a special bill, the amendment be incorporated in the pending measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator, he is seeking to amend the Home Loan Bank Act and not the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act?

Mr. BLACK. The Home Loan Bank Act; that is correct. Mr. BARKLEY. There is nothing in the House bill with respect to the definition of a home owners' mortgage by way of an amendment to that act. I will say that I see no objection to the adoption of this amendment and letting it go to conference.

Mr. BLACK. May I say to the Senator my understanding is that the House amended the bill also?

Mr. BARKLEY. The House bill contained a definition of a home mortgage in section 507, which is as follows:

(c) The term "home mortgage" means a first-trust mortgage on real estate in fee simple or on a leasehold under a renewable lease for not less than 99 years, upon which there are located one or two dwellings for occupancy by not more than 8 families, 1 of which is occupied by the owner as a home or held by him as his homestead and having a value not exceeding $40,000: Provided, That any building, a portion of which is occupied by the owner as his home, shall be included in this definition.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN BUILDINGS, ETC., TO GOVERNMENT OF HAITI

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3739)

Mr. BLACK. May I state to the Senator in order that he may understand it when it gets to conference that I did not copy the exact language contained in the House bill, because I was fearful that might lead to complications, but I took the original subdivision 6, section 2, of the Home Loan Bank Act, and struck out the word "renewable", and, since one member of the Banking and Currency Committee had stated when I was there that he would want some expressed number of years for the lease to run, I added to it the words " not to expire for a period of 50 years", as it is in the House hill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not see the objection to the amendment going to conference. We can work it out there.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I think the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator proposes to amend section

Mr. BLACK. I propose to amend section 2, subdivision 6, of the original Home Loan Bank Act.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a substitute for that, is it not?

Mr. BLACK. That is not correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is the Senator dealing with this bill at all?

Mr. BLACK. My amendment deals with the old law.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's amendment applies to the Home Loan Bank Act and not to the pending measure?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator does not propose to amend section 201?

Mr. BLACK. No, I am for that; I am thoroughly in sympathy with it.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what I understood, and I did not know why the Senator wanted to amend it.

Mr. BLACK. I do not want to amend it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator proposes to add another section?

Mr. BLACK. All I propose to do is to do what we agreed to and what I understood the Senator was for in the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agreed to that.

Mr. BLACK. Very well. In drawing up this amendment, the Senator's committee protected the people who have leases such as they have in Fairhope, insofar as loans under this new bill are concerned, but the fact still remains that under the old law the people at Fairhope are deprived of obtaining any loans, and this is a new section to take care of

Mr. BARKLEY. The amendment proposes to amend the Home Loan Bank Act, but does not touch either the Home Loan Corporation Act, or this bill.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to it, but I do not want to complicate this bill or load it down.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator will not complicate it. The question came up in the House, and they thought they had covered it; that may be, but they have sent word over here that they are fearful that it may be it will not be in conference, and both sides want to protect this particular

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well; I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. In section 506 (a), page 47, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "$3,200,000,000" and to insert "$3,000,000,000", and in section 506 (b), page 47, line 15, to strike out "$400,000,000" and insert "$300,000,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kentucky. The amendment was agreed to.

authorizing the President to convey certain buildings, material, and equipment to the Government of the Republic of Haiti, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to transfer permanently and deliver to the Government of Haiti, without charge against that Government, all right, title, and interest of the Government of the United States in such hereinafter-named property, now in Haiti, as may appear appropriate to the President of the United States:

(a) Equipment, supplies, materials; (b) buildings on land belonging to the Government of Haiti and land leased from private owners; and (c) three emphyteutic leases and one permanent easement covering four parcels of land used by the United States as a radio station at Port-au-Prince, Haiti.

SEC. 2. The Government of Haiti shall assume all obligations of the Government of the United States under said leases and easements.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the President to transfer to the Government of Haiti without charge to that Government certain property of the United States in Haiti."

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF DELEGATES TO NINTH PAN AMERICAN SANITARY CONFERENCE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 59) to provide for the expenses of delegates of the United States to the Ninth Pan American Sanitary Conference, which was, on page 1, line 3, after the word "hereby", to insert "authorized to be".

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. Borah conferees on the part of the Senate.

ATTENDANCE OF THE MARINE BAND AT NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT OF GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair may lay before the Senate the conference report on House bill 9145, submitted by me last evening, which is on the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following report, which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9145) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Rochester, N.Y., August 14, 15, and 16, 1934, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3; and agree to the

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In ' lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: ", and the national convention of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War to be held at Colorado Springs, Colo., during the first week in July 1934"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "encampment and convention"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment of the title:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of said bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment to the title of the bill proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"An act to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Rochester, N.Y., August 14, 15, and 16, 1934, and at the national convention of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, to be held at Colorado Springs, Colo., during the first week of July 1934"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The report was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT IN HOUSING STANDARDS AND CONDITIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3794) to encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions, to provide a system of mutual mortgage insurance, and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I now want to raise the fundamental question respecting the authority which is to administer this proposed act and I want to do it in the fashion suggested through the kindness of the Senator from

After conference with the drafting clerk, I am offering a portion of title I of the House bill as a substitute to title I of the Senate bill. I am offering that portion of title I of the House bill which deals solely with the definition of the administrative authority. Therefore, Mr. President, in offering this amendment in the nature of a substitute, as I understand the situation, I am raising the fundamental question whether this stupendous new enterprise shall rest exclusively, solely, and entirely in the jurisdiction of and upon the responsibility of one single administrator, who is not even held responsible textually either to the President or to Congress. I am raising the question whether this billion dollar advance shall rest solely and exclusively in the hands of one administrator or whether we will at least protect it to the extent of creating such a board of directors, so to speak, as the House of Representatives has recommended. As I understand, that is the only question involved in the form in which I have submitted the amendment. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that it is presented in that form on the advice given me by the legislative counsel.

So, Mr. President, I am moving the substitute, which I ask unanimous consent may not be read because it would take needless time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the reading will be waived.

The amendment offered by Mr. Vandenberg is as follows:

TITLE I-NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

SECTION 101. This title may be cited as the "National Housing Act.

SEC. 102. There is hereby created a body corporate to be known as the "Home Credit Insurance Corporation", which shall be an instrumentality of the United States, and which shall have an instrumentality of the United States, and which shall have power to adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal; to sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal; to prescribe, amend, and repeal, by its board of directors, bylaws, rules, and regulations governing the way in which its general business may be conducted and the powers granted to it be exercised and enjoyed; and generally to do all things, not inconsistent with the terms of this title, as are customary and usual for corporations to do generally.

The principal office of the corporation shall be located in the District of Columbia, but there may be established agencies or branch offices in other cities or localities in the United States.

The corporation shall have a capital stock of not to exceed $200,000,000 subscribed for by the Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the United States. Payments on such subscriptions shall be subject to call in whole or in part at any time by the board of directors. Receipts for payment for or on account of such stock shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States and shall be evidence of the stock ownership of the United States. In order to enable the Treasury to make such payments States. In order to enable the Treasury to make such payments when called, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed, upon written request of the President, to alloized and directed, upon written request of the President, to allocate and make available to the Secretary of the Treasury the sum of $200,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, however, That in lieu of calling upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for such funds, the President, in his discretion, is authorized to provide the same or any portion thereof by allotment to the Treasury from such funds as may be available or as may hereafter be made available to him for experience purposes.

The management of the corporation shall be vested in a board of directors consisting of not less than five nor more than seven persons to be selected by the President from among the officers and directors of any existing board, commission, corporation, independent establishment, or executive department of the United States. Nothing in any other law shall be construed to prevent any such officer or director so selected from serving as a director of the corporation. Directors shall serve without additional compensation and shall hold office for a term of 1 year and until compensation and shall hold office for a term of 1 year and until their successors are appointed. Whenever a vacancy shall occur among the directors, the person appointed to fill such vacancy shall hold office for the unexpired portion of the term of the director whose place he is selected to fill.

The board of directors shall, without regard to the provisions of any other law, appoint such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as are necessary for the transaction of the business of the corporation, fix their compensation, define their duties, require bonds of such of them as the board of directors may designate, and provide a system of organization to fix responsibility and promote efficiency. No such officer, employee, attorney, or agent shall be paid compensation at a rate in excess of the rate provided by law in the case of the members of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The corporation, with the consent of any provided by law in the case of the members of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The corporation, with the consent of any board, corporation, commission, establishment, executive department, or instrumentality of the Government, including any field service thereof, may avail itself of the use of information, services, and facilities thereof in carrying out the provisions of this title, and any such information, services, or facilities are hereby authorized to be so made available. The corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as executive departments of the Government, and shall manner as executive departments of the Government, and shall determine its necessary expenditures under this act and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditure of public funds.

SEC. 103. The corporation is authorized and empowered, upon terms and under rules and regulations to be determined by the board of directors, to insure such banks, trust companies, perboard of directors, to insure such banks, trust companies, personal finance companies, mortgage companies, building-and-loan associations, installment lending companies, and other financial institutions as may apply for credit insurance and be approved as eligible by the board of directors, against losses which may result to any such financial institutions in consequence of loans and advances of credit to real-estate owners, and purchasers of obligations representing loans and advances of credit to real-estate owners by such institutions made and entered into after the effective date of this act and prior to January 1, 1936, upless an estate owners by such institutions made and entered into after the effective date of this act and prior to January 1, 1936, unless an earlier date is set by order of the President, for the purpose of enabling such owners of real estate to make alterations, repairs, and improvements thereto. The occupant or lessee of real estate, having a substantial interest, legal or equitable, therein, shall be deemed an owner within the meaning of this section. The power to insure granted herein shall be limited so that in no case shall to insure granted herein shall be limited so that in no case shall the corporation insure any financial institution against losses amounting to more than 20 per centum of the total amount of loans made by it or credit advanced by it as above provided, nor incur a total liability for such insurance in excess of the aggregate par value of the corporation's outstanding capital stock. It shall be a condition of the insurance that obligations representing loans and advances of credit to which the insurance applies shall not be for amounts in excess of $2,000, and shall bear interest, have maturities and contain such other terms conditions. terest, have maturities, and contain such other terms, conditions, and restrictions as the corporation shall determine.

SEC. 104. The corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans or agreements to lend upon the security of obligations, representing loans or advances of credit to which insurance by the corporation applies, to and with financial institutions insured under the provisions of section 103 of this title. Such loans or agreements to lend may be made for the full face value of the obligations offered as security and shall be at such rates and upon such terms and conditions as the board of directors shall deter-

SEC. 105. In order to make available to the corporation adequate resources for the making of loans and advances under the provisions of section 104 of this act, the corporation is authorized and empowered, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to issue and have outstanding its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations; such obligations to have such maturities, bear such rates of interest, and contain such other terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury shall approve. Such obligations shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the United States and shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States or by any State, or by any political subdivision of either. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to purchase such obligations and for that purpose is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the corporation's obligations hereunder.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the only question before the Senate is simply this: Under title I of the Senate bill all the authority involved in this enterprise, all the authority touching the creation of this great machine, all the authority respecting the use of literally billions of dollars of public credit, all authority under the Senate bill is concentrated in one single administrator, who is not textually responsible to the President or to Congress after once he has been appointed and confirmed.

The whole proposition rests in one single dictatorship. I do not use the term invidiously, but I use it with profound emphasis, because while heretofore we have trended in the direction of these concentrations with sometimes amazing jeopardy, I doubt whether at any time in connection with any of this character of legislation we have ever proposed to create one administrator with quite so much unlimited and unchecked power as is involved in this particular title, unless it was when we let the Secretary of the Treasury play with $2,000,000,000 without any check or audit or report of any kind or nature.

I raise the question that the matter should be managed as recommended by the House of Representatives, to wit, by a corporation managed by a board of directors whose personnel is chosen by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the language of the House bill, as I indicated a while ago, sets up a board, an ex-officio board of 5 or 7 appointed by the President from existing departments and governmental agencies. As I indicated a while ago, we have had some experience with ex-officio boards whose membership was drawn from the different departments. We know all the departments are now overworked. If the President should draw 1 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, 1 from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, 1 from the Civil Works Administration, and 1 from the Relief Administration, we know they would be drawn from agencies which are now overworked. There would be no responsibility such as there would be under the single administrator. We have sought in the Senate bill to fix responsibility.

It may be, and I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Ohio, that there ought to be an amendment agreed to, which we can do in conference or here as the case may be, requiring annual or some other regular reports to be made to Congress as to the administration of the act. That is a matter which can be easily adjusted. But certainly we want somebody with responsibility, somebody to whom we can point if anything goes wrong with the administration of the act. With an ex-officio board of five or seven members it would be very difficult to fix the responsibility on anybody. For that reason I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Kentucky, in connection with the suggestion he is now making, if he would have any objection to a provision in title I to the effect that the administrator should not hold any other Federal office.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I should not want to agree to that. Mr. STEIWER. It has been stated in the newspapers, upon what authority I do not know, that the Federal Relief Administrator would be appointed as administrator under this title. If that be true, the objection which the Senator from Kentucky just made would apply with especial force, because then we should have an ex-officio administration of the title by an officer of our Government who is dealing with the greatest emergency with which the Government deals. The title therefore and the work under it would become quite incidental to a greater work in a broader field. It would make these agencies merely tails on a kite.

I think there is force in the suggestion just made by the Senator from Kentucky that we ought not to place these important responsibilities with officials who are already overloaded and who would perform on an ex-officio basis. But I am afraid we are doing exactly that thing, and in the most pernicious way we could possibly imagine.

As the Senator knows, I favored control, under the administration of title I, by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and argued in the committee as earnestly as I could that inasmuch as that institution is furnishing the money and inasmuch as the officials of that institution have the entire confidence of Congress, we could not do a better thing than to permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take charge of the administration under title I. I was voted down, and I am not going to renew the effort here, because it would take considerable time and probably would

But now we are confronted with a choice between one administrator and a board to be appointed by the President, and it seems to me that in either case we are going to get an ex-officio administration. In both cases this very work would become incidental to other important work, and we would not be proud, after it is over, of our own part in | large amount involved and the numerous complaints and turning over responsibilities so great as these to be treated incidentally by men who are already working from 12 to 18 hours a day, and oftentimes in excess of their strength and almost beyond the range of human endurance.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Oregon, of course, I do not know who will be appointed the administrator. I saw in the paper that the prediction was made that Mr. Hopkins would be appointed, but I do not know whether that was an inspired article or whether there was any authority for it. But, assuming that he is to be appointed, we all hope that the Federal Relief Administration will in the very near future come to an end. We hope that conditions in the country will so improve that direct Federal relief may be terminated.

Whatever anybody may say or think with respect to the methods by which Mr. Hopkins has administered the relief agencies. I think no one will deny that he is one of the best administrators ever brought to Washington. The work he has been doing has brought him in direct contact with the housing situation all over the country. It has brought him in contact with conditions in various sections of the country which will have to be dealt with by the Administrator.

Besides, it is one thing to appoint one man as administrator of this activity who may now be engaged in some other activity of the Government, and it is quite another thing to appoint five or seven men so that every time we want to do anything we have to call a town meeting in order to get a majority of them together, away from the activities in which they are already engaged.

While I have no way of knowing whom the President may appoint, if he appoints Mr. Hopkins or Mr. Frank Walker or anybody else who happens now to be holding a position which may sooner or later terminate because of our withdrawal from the field, the President ought not to be restricted in his desire to appoint such a man as administrator of the activities under this measure.

Mr. STEIWER. This title concerns other things besides the housing matters with which Mr. Hopkins has been

Mr. BARKLEY. It all revolves around the question of housing.

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, it deals particularly with the matter of insurance of certain financial institutions, and those financial institutions are banks and trust companies and personal financial corporations, such as building-and-loan associations. They are the same institutions which are named in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. As the Senator well knows they are institutions with which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been dealing and for whom they have been providing financial support during all the course of the administration of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. Hopkins is a thoroughly competent man, I agree, but he has not been dealing in this field. He has not had contact with these institutions. He cannot in the very nature of things know their condition in the sense and to the degree that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation knows them.

Mr. BARKLEY. He has not been dealing specifically with mortgages, that is true.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has not made any study of and has no familiarity with housing conditions.

Mr. STEIWER. They have been making loans to financial institutions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, yes; they have made loans, but surely the Senator does not mean to say that making loans to financial institutions has given the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a special knowledge and fitness for handling a problem such as that involved in the pending bill. As a matter of fact, we all know that Mr. Hopkins has demonstrated himself to be an administrator of amazing skill and ability. I do not know of anyone else who could have handled the relief problem, considering the questions which have arisen, with the efficiency he has demonstrated. He ought not to be discriminated against in legislation of this character.

Mr. BARKLEY. The President ought not to be told that he cannot choose such a man if that man happens to be the man who can best administer the activities under the bill. I am not here with any brief for Mr. Hopkins. I am not advocating his appointment; but certainly the administrator of an act of this sort needs the power of decision. He needs the courage to stand behind his decisions. He needs knowledge of conditions throughout the country. I think Mr. Hopkins has all those qualities; and if the President has power to appoint him, and does not do it, I think he will overlook a very competent man for this administration.

Mr. STEIWER. I desire to make just one observation. This bill was given considerable thought in advance of its introduction. A board, selected by certain administrative agencies, went over the whole problem. They studied the matter for months; and when they brought it to the Congress the recommendation of this important board, headed by Mr. Frank Walker, with whom Mr. Hopkins himself was working, was that the Congress authorize the appointment of this ex-officio board as provided in the House bill. It remained that way for a considerable time. At one time it was in both the Senate and House bills. Finally Mr. Hopkins himself came before the subcommittee and urged that we place in the bill a provision for one administrator, and then the newspapers said he was slated to be the administrator; and the subcommittee and the committee yielded to his insistence and to his judgment in the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President— Mr. STEIWER. Let me say a little more about that.

We are preparing now to permit the important functions of this very important bill to be farmed out, because we know that Mr. Hopkins cannot personally supervise the administration of the measure and still remain in his capacity as Federal Relief Administrator. Of course, he will appoint somebody else to do it under his general supervision, and we have not any idea who the somebody else may be. It seems to me that in the face of a situation like that, if we do not desire to delegate this authority to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, we might well obtain the assurance that would come from the House language, and from the appointment of a board of five or seven, from whom the President undoubtedly could recruit able administrators who would not be tied down to the extent that Mr. Hopkins is tied down in the performance of his very important duties.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct when he states that as originally introduced this bill carried a provision for the ex-officio board to be drawn from different departments by the President. The Senator will recall, however, that while the hearings were going on upon the original bill presented by the gentleman who has been largely instrumental in its preparation over a period of weeks, some of us on the committee-and I recall that I especiallyobjected to that sort of board because of its scattered responsibility and scattered authority. It was stated that our experience with these ex-officio boards had been unhappy, and we had always had to abolish them and create a respon-

Largely, I think, in response to the sentiment expressed in the committee, later the administrator was substituted. Mr. Hopkins did not come down before us urging that. We invited Mr. Hopkins before the subcommittee.

Mr. STEIWER. He did suggest it, however. He did urge it.

Mr. BARKLEY. He came before us upon our invitation and urged this administrator. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. STEIWER. That is true. The Senator and I now are in agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. And he did it, after further thought and after hearing the suggestions of the committee, as the representative of all those who had been instrumental orig- | ent form does not provide any dangerous competition to inally in fixing the ex-officio board as carried in the original

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to confirm the statement that the present judgment of all those who were originally instrumental in preparing this proposed legislation is that it is better administration to put this authority in the hands of a single administrator.

One further thing about what the Senator from Oregon has just said. I do not think it is a fair inference to say that Mr. Hopkins will be appointed to this position and then will delegate the authority and neglect the duties of the office. I do not think it is fair for us to say with any certainty who will be appointed to the office; but, no matter who may be appointed to it, I have every faith that the President will appoint someone who will give the office proper attention. If Mr. Hopkins shall be appointed, it may be necessary for him to resign from his other job, or his other job may be terminated; but that is all speculation. The fair presumption is that some proper and adequate person will be appointed, and that he will give proper and diligent attention to the work.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate with further discussion of what seems to be a perfectly futile proposition. I want this body to know, however, that unless we adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], we shall have merely substituted one ex-officio administrator for an exofficio board, with all the doubtful implications that come from a situation of that kind.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish to interrogate the Senator from Ohio regarding title III, national mortgage associations, and ask his interpretation of the power in section 301 to purchase and sell first mortgages and such other first liens as are commonly given to secure advances on real estate, and so forth.

Does the Senator consider that that provision gives such national mortgage associations the right to come into local territory and purchase mortgages direct from mortgagors in competition with banks and with local building-and-loan associations?

Mr. BULKLEY. I am not sure that I understand the significance of what the Senator means by purchasing mortgages from mortgagors. I had supposed mortgages would belong to mortgagees; but I do not think this provision gives authority to a national association to make a direct loan to a mortgagor. I think it requires that the loan shall have been made, and that the national association may then purchase and otherwise deal in mortgages that have been made.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well. That answers the question I had in mind. I do not myself regard the word "purchase" as equivalent to making a loan.

Mr. BULKLEY. I do not think so.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from Ohio. I desire to ask him a question regarding title III, "Creation and powers of national mortgage associations."

In the State of Maryland there are more than 1,000 building-and-loan associations, which is about 0.1 of all that are found in the United States. I have received many letters expressing the fear that the provisions of this section of the bill would invite unfair competition with existing building-and-loan associations. The fear of the building-and-loan associations in my State is that they will be perhaps largely put out of business by the adoption of title III.

I should like the Senator to give me his opinion on that subject.

Mr. BULKLEY. I think the alarm which has been felt by many building-and-loan associations, and which has been evidenced by letters I have received from associations in my own State, has been due to earlier drafts of the bill. I think there were provisions in some of the earlier drafts which perhaps might have been very dangerous to building-andloan associations. It is my opinion that the bill in its pres- now proposed would be so high as to cover 70 years of loss building-and-loan associations, and I am so assured by responsible representatives.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. One more question: In the city of Baltimore we have the system of making 99-year loans. Does the Senator think this bill is so drawn as to permit loans to be made upon that character of property?

Mr. BULKLEY. I think there is no doubt about it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. How about the use of the word "renewable" in the bill?

Mr. BULKLEY. Does that affect the situation in Balti-

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; because most of the leases are 99-year leases, with power of renewal.

Mr. BULKLEY. I see no embarrassment about that.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Very well.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, would the Senator from Ohio think it was too much of an invasion of the prerogatives of this new dictator if we were to insert the following language at the proper place in the bill?-

The administrator shall annually make a report of his operations to the Congress as soon as practicable after the 1st day of January in each year.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have had such an amendment prepared, and now offer it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his great

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there is no objection to this amendment, but I think it is wholly unnecessary. This man could be called on for a report any day when Congress is in session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the proposed amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, between lines 3 and 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

Sec. 5. The Administrator shall make an annual report to the Congress as soon as practicable after the 1st day of January in each year of his activities under this title and titles II and III of

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 34, line 24, before the period, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following:

Provided, That the assessments against any such institution for insurance premiums under this subsection and subsection (a) shall not exceed one-half of 1 percent of the total amount of the accounts of its insured members and its creditor obligations.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if this amendment shall be agreed to, it will enable the conferees to consider the question of the rates involved in subsection (a) and subsection (b) of section 404.

As previously suggested, many of the associations in various States contend that the rates as fixed in the bill are excessive. The Senator from Ohio, who has given great study to this question, is rather impressed with the fact that the combined rates of the two subsections would be excessive.

I have purposely asked that this amendment be drawn in such a way as to put into the hands of the conferees the the power to deal with the rates in both subsections, and I sincerely hope that the Senator from Ohio will feel that he can accept the amendment and take it to conference, and give the matter consideration.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I shall be glad to take the amendment to conference.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I wish to join in the request, because our experience in Wisconsin shows that the rate ferees will seriously consider this amendment. In a number of States, such as Wisconsin, the loss experience has been very low.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, under the provision for payment of insurance of building associations of savings and loan accounts, we find reference to the accounts of each of the members. I refer to language in section 405 (a) on page 35.

I am told that in some States, in a large number of institutions, the persons holding accounts are not members, and are not designated as "members", but are designated as "investors." I am wondering whether we may not add the words "and investors" after the word "members" in line 6, so as to avoid a difficulty which might arise from the designation of these account holders as "members."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, are they not in fact in-

Mr. STEIWER. I do not know whether they are or not. Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, there might be an investor who was not a member. I see no harm in the amendment suggested by the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will not the Senator from Oregon state the amendment?

Mr. STEIWER. I have not the amendment in writing, but I think I can state it orally. I propose to amend, in line 6, page 35, after the word "members" by inserting the words "and investors", so that it would read:

SEC. 405. (a) Each institution whose application for insurance under this title is approved by the Corporation shall be entitled to insurance up to 80 percent of the full withdrawable or repurchasable value of the accounts of each of its members and investors (including individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations) holding withdrawable or repurchasable shares, investment certificates, or deposits, in such institution; except that no member of any such institution shall be insured for an aggregate amount in excess of $5,000 gate amount in excess of $5,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Ohio with respect to another provision in the same section. The Senator will recall that we changed the insurance payment from 100 percent to 80 percent. That was done with my concurrence at the time action was had, and I think all of us believed it was a wise thing.

Subsequently, I have been advised by those having the most intimate knowledge of this type of business institution, that insurance up to 80 percent, instead of being helpful, may prove to be very hurtful, and that many institutions will not want insurance if the insurance is only 80

Would the Senator from Ohio be favorable to reconsideration of that idea, with the purpose of making the insurance 100 percent instead of 80 percent?

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I am frank to say that, like the Senator from Oregon, I have changed my own mind about that, and I believe that it should be 100 percent. I suggest that we simply strike out the words "80 percent of" in line 4, page 35.

Mr. STEIWER. I think it would be very wise if the Senator should do that. I may say that the chief counsel of the Home Loan Board and members of the Board have suggested this to us, and they urge very earnestly that the Federal building-and-loan institutions will suffer unless it is done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will not the Senator from Ohio offer the amendment?

Mr. BULKLEY. I offer the amendment on page 35, line 4, to strike out the words "80 percent of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, in order to make sure that experience. It would be very unfair, and I hope the con- from Ohio now state how the language would read with the amendment which has just been agreed to inserted?

Mr. BULKLEY. It would then read:

Each institution whose application for insurance under this title is approved by the Corporation shall be entitled to insurance up to the full withdrawable or repurchasable value of the accounts of each of its members-

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to be added at the end of the bill in the form of an additional section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill, to insert the following:

That in the case of any foreclosure sale of real property in the District of Columbia under the terms of any mortgage, deed of trust, or other lien given, extended, renewed, or assumed, to secure the payment of a debt incurred by a natural person prior to January 1, 1930, no deficiency judgment shall be ordered or decreed by any court unless the amount of the debt, due and unpaid on the date of such sale, shall exceed the fair market value of such property on the date of such sale. In no case shall value of such property on the date of such sale. In no case shall any such deficiency judgment be more than the excess of such debt over and above such fair market value. The court ordering or decreeing such sale shall determine, upon affidavit or other-wise as it shall direct, the fair market value of the property as of the date of such sale and shall make an order directing the entry of a deficiency judgment.

Sec. 2. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I shall not discuss this amendment unless questions shall be asked by Senators. It was prepared at my instance by the official draftsman of the Senate, and the amendments are based on statutes which were passed by the State of New York and the State of Florida. The statutes in both States have been sustained by the courts in the respective States.

This is intended to correct what I regard as an evil in connection with deficiency judgments, where, say, one-half of a debt has been paid, and the creditor recovers the entire property and then brings suit for the entire outstanding

I might use this illustration. Suppose the price of a piece of property in the first instance was $20,000, and suppose $10,000 to have been paid. The creditor takes the entire property back and brings suit for $10,000 and gets a deficiency judgment, and encumbers the debtor for the rest of his life.

This matter was submitted to the committee, and I believe there was a tie vote, and Senators present at the time suggested that we offer it on the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to discuss the merits of the amendment standing alone. The matter was brought to the attention of the committee, and the amendment was rejected on the ground that it is more properly an amendment to the laws of the District of Columbia with respect to deficiency judgments. It has no place in this bill, has no connection with it.

The amendment might be all right, but it should be presented to some District bill, or be presented as a separate bill proposing to amend District law, and should be considered by the Committee on the District o? Columbia.

I do not care to discuss the amendment at length, but I do think it should not be put on this bill, but, as I have said, should be put on some bill dealing with District questions. It refers altogether to property located in the District of Columbia, and has no relationship whatever to the pending bill, either in its operation or otherwise.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, there is no doubt that this amendment is meritorious. Similar action has been taken by the great State of New York and the great State of Florida and has been sustained by their courts. It would bring some relief to the District. Of course, it is limited to the District of Columbia. Residents here are, in a sense, political orphans, and if it would bring some measure of there shall be no misunderstanding, will not the Senator relief to them, I am sure it would be gratefully received, parliamentary usage.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to by the Senate and sent to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Hebert

Mr. GORE. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3764) to reduce the fee to accompany applications for entry as second-class matter of publications of limited circulation, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9830) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental general and emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30. 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Taylor of Colorado, Mr. Ayres of Kansas, Mr. Arnold, Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi, Mr. Oliver of Alabama, Mr. Taber, Mr. Bacon, Mr. Thurston, and Mr. Bolton were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

REDUCTION OF FEE ON APPLICATIONS FOR ENTRY AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3764) to reduce the fee to accompany applications for entry as second-class matter of publications of limited circulation, which was on page 1, line 11, after "$25;" to insert and of publications having a circulation of not more than 5,000 copies shall be $50: Provided further, That one-half of all fees collected under this section shall be returnable to the applicant upon the failure of the applicant's publication to obtain entry under the provisions of this section."

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT IN HOUSING STANDARDS AND CONDITIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3794) to encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions, to provide a system of mutual mortgage insurance, and for other purposes.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Ohio to section 301, page 19, which provides for the creation of national mortgage assoeven though it did not conform to the highest standards of | ciations and authorizes them to purchase mortgages. I fail to find that there is any limitation upon the size of the mortgages which they are to purchase. Is it the intent of the committee that that shall be so, and that they may purchase mortgages of any amount?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; there is no limitation in that respect, but there is this limitation which will be of importance to those who engage in that business. The debentures which they are authorized to issue may be based only upon Government securities or insured mortgages, and there is a limitation on the amount which may be made in any insured mortgage. Mortgages may be insured only to the extent of $16,000, so that it is unlikely such corporations would engage to any large extent in the business of making large loans.

Mr. HEBERT. Then in describing the mortgages which they may purchase should there not be a limitation that those mortgages may not exceed 80 percent of the value of the property mortgaged?

Mr. BULKLEY. The committee had not thought that was important. These corporations will be subject to inspection and subject to being called up for unsound practices, and will not themselves be particularly desirous of engaging in unsound practices.

Mr. HEBERT. I realize that, Mr. President, but we must bear in mind that the money with which we are to purchase those mortgages is to come from the public by the sale of debentures.

Mr. BULKLEY. There is such limitation with respect to anything that may be used on which to base an issue of debentures. We have left them unusually free with respect to what they want to do with reference to their own capital stock.

Mr. HEBERT. But is there going to be a segregation of their funds as between those received from the sale of debentures and the amount paid in as capital?

Mr. BULKLEY. I suppose the question of segregation would be a matter for their own bookkeeping, but they may not issue debentures unless they have an equivalent amount of guaranteed mortgages or Government securities.

Mr. HEBERT. Very well, Mr. President, but that will not protect the debenture holders. If now there be a loss in those mortgages, and they have loaned in excess of what would be prudent of their own funds, the debenture holders, I assume, will have to be general creditors of the corporation in case of liquidation. That is the reason why I ask whether there would be a segregation of assets, and it seems to me that in order to protect prospective debenture holders some limitation should be placed on the authority which is to be conferred upon these mortgage corporations.

Mr. BULKLEY. I see no serious objection but we had not thought it was essential.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I have in mind the situation in some parts of this country where mortgage concerns have purchased mortgages, and many of them, as the Senator well knows, are today in receivership, with the result that the debenture holders are going to lose practically all their investment, and I do not think we can be too careful about surrounding corporations of this kind with proper safeguards.

Mr. BULKLEY. I would not resist an amendment of the character suggested by the Senator.

Mr. HEBERT. Then, Mr. President, on page 19, line 14, after the semicolon, I ask to insert the words "provided that such mortgages not to exceed 80 percent of the appraised value of the property as of the date the mortgage is purchased."

Mr. BULKLEY. I would not resist that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator repeat that amendment for the benefit of the clerk?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I propose to insert, on page 19, line 14, after the semicolon, the words "provided that such mortgages shall not exceed 80 percent of the appraised value of the property as of the date the mortgage is purchased."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 4, line 19, to strike out the words "and title II" and to insert in lieu thereof "and titles II and III."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 31, line 10, before the period, to insert the words "and insurance companies."

The amendment was agreed to.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY-REQUEST FOR RETURN OF

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Some days ago the senior Senator from New York

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this is to be the last day of the session of Congress, and we will get nowhere if everyone in the Chamber is talking. I think an exceptional effort should be made to keep the Chamber quiet today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken. Senators in the back of the Chamber will kindly retire to the cloakroom if they desire to converse.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Chair has requested that the Senate be in order, but the Senate has not responded to that request. I suggest that the Chair instruct the Sergeant at Arms to carry out the order of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take such action unless better order shall be maintained.

Mr. NYE. A few days ago the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] moved that the vote by which Senate bill 3580, an act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, was adopted, be reconsidered. Later he withdrew his motion. Last evening the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] moved that the House be requested to return to the Senate, Senate bill 3580, and his motion was defeated on the floor of the Senate. Later on in the evening the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Lonergan] made the following announcement:

Mr. President, yesterday the senior Senator from New York [Mr. Copeland] entered and later withdrew a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 3580) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was passed. I renew the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. I merely desire to enter the motion at this time.

The Vice President, The motion will be entered.

I rise to ask, Mr. President, if the motion by the Senator from Connecticut was in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the opinion of the Chair that the motion of the Senator from Connecticut was not in order under paragraph 2 of rule XIII, which states, referring to such a motion when first made:

Which last motion shall be acted upon immediately and without debate, and if determined in the negative shall be a final disposition of the motion to reconsider.

That action was taken finally before the second motion was entered by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is that the notice and the motion of the Senator from Connecticut were not in order?

Mr. NYE. That they were not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

AMENDMENT OF JUDICIAL CODE

Mr. STEPHENS. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment House bill 3357, to amend section 99 of the Judicial Code (U.S.C., title 28, sec. 180), as amended, and I submit a report (No. 1450) thereon. I invite the attention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NyE] to the bill.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 99 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, sec. 180), be amended to read as follows:
"Sec. 99. The State of North Dakota shall constitute one judicial district to be known as the 'district of North Dakota.' The territory embraced on the 1st day of January 1932, in the counties of Adams, Billings, Bowman, Burleigh, Dunn, Emmons, Golden Valley, Grant, Hettinger, Kidder, Logan, McIntosh, McLean, Mercer, Morton, Oliver, Sioux, Slope, and Stark shall constitute the southwestern division of said district; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Barnes, Cass, Dickey, Eddy, Foster, Griggs, La Moure, Ransom, Richland, Sargent, Sheridan, Steele, Stutsman, and Wells shall constitute the southeastern division and the territory embraced. division; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Benson, Bottineau, Cavalier, Grand Forks, Nelson, McHenry, Pembina, Pierce, Ramsey, Rolette, Traill, Towner, and Walsh shall constitute the northeastern division; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Burke, Divide, McKenzie, Mountrall, Renville, Ward, and Williams shall constitute the northwestern division. The several Indian reservoirs and parks thereof, within said State shall constitute reservations and parts thereof within said State shall constitute a part of the several divisions within which they are respectively situated. Terms of the district court for the southwestern divisituated. Terms of the district court for the southwestern division shall be held at Bismarck on the second Tuesday in March; for the southeastern division, at Fargo on the second Tuesday in December and at Jamestown on the second Tuesday in October; for the northeastern division, at Devils Lake on the second Tuesday in May and at Grand Forks on the second Tuesday in November; and for the northwestern division, at Minot on the second Tuesday in April. The clerk of the court shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place at which court is held in his district."

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES' RETIREMENT SYSTEM—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BROWN. I present the conference report on Senate bill 3231, which is commonly known as the "railway employees' pension bill."

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report, which was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3231) to provide a retirement system for railroad employees, to provide unemployment relief, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

" DEFINITIONS

"Section 1. That as used in this act—

"(a) The term 'carrier' includes any express company, sleeping-car company, carrier by railroad, subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and any company which is directly or indirectly owned or controlled by or under common control with any carrier by railroad and which operates any equipment or facilities or performs any service (other than trucking service) in connection with the transportation of passengers or property or the receipt, delivery, elevation, transfer in transit, refrigeration or icing storage, and handling of property transported by railroad, and any receiver, trustee, or other individual or body, judicial or otherwise, when in the possession of the business of any such 'carrier': Provided, however, That the term 'carrier' shall not include any street, interurban, or suburban electric railway, unless such railway is operating as a part of a general steam-railroad system of transportation, but shall not exclude any part of the general steam-railroad system of transportation now or hereafter operated by any other motive power. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized and directed upon request of the Board or upon complaint of any party interested to determine after hearing whether any line operated by electric power falls within the terms of this proviso.

"(b) The term 'employee' means each person in the service of a carrier, subject to its continuing authority to supervise and direct the manner of rendition of his service, who has been in such service within 1 year before the enactment hereof, or who after the enactment hereof shall have been in such service. The term 'employee' also includes each officer or other official representative of an 'employee organization', herein called 'representative', who has performed service for a carrier, who is duly designated and authorized to represent employees under and in accordance with the Railway Labor Act, and who, during or following employment by a carrier, is engaged in such representative service in behalf of such employees.

"(c) The term 'Board' means the Railroad Retirement Board hereby created.

"(d) The term 'annuity' means regular payments at the end of each completed month during retirement, ceasing at death or at resumption of compensated service.

"(e) The term 'service' means the employment relation between an employee and a carrier whether before or after the enactment hereof.

"(f) The term 'service period' means the total service of an employee for one or more carriers whether or not continuously performed, and includes as 1 month every calendar month during which the employee has been paid compensation by a carrier and includes as 1 year every 12 such months. An ultimate fraction of 6 months or more shall be computed as 1 year.

"(g) The term 'retirement' means the status of cessation of compensated service with the right to receive an annuity.

"(h) The term 'age' means age at the latest attained birthday.

"(i) The term 'carrier contribution' means the payment to be made by each carrier.

"(j) The term 'employee contribution' means the payment to be made by each employee. "(k) The term 'voluntary contribution' means the payment made by an employee equal to the total of both the employee and the carrier contribution.

"(1) The term 'effective date' means the 1st day of the second month after the taking effect of this act.

"(m) The term 'Railroad Retirement Act' means and may be used in citing this act and subsequent amendments thereto.

" PURPOSES

"SEC. 2. (a) For the purpose of providing adequately for the satisfactory retirement of aged employees and promoting efficiency and safety in interstate transportation, and to make possible greater employment opportunity and more rapid advancement of employees in the service of carriers, there is hereby established a railroad retirement system; and it is made the duty of all carriers and employees subject to this act to perform and fulfill the obligations imposed thereby. This act shall be administered and construed with the intent and to the purpose of providing the greatest practical amount of relief from unemployment and the greatest possible use of resources available for said purpose and for the payment of annuities for the relief of superannuated employees.

"SPECIAL REPORT

"(b) Not later than 4 years from the effective date, the Board, in a special report to the President of the United States to be submitted to Congress, shall make specific recommendations for such changes in the retirement system hereby created as shall assure the adequacy and permanency of said retirement system on the basis of its experience and all information and experience then available.

For this purpose the Board shall from time to time make such investigations and actuarial studies as shall provide the fullest information practicable for such report and recommendations.

"ANNUITIES

"SEC. 3. Each employee having attained the age of 65 years, or having completed a service period of 30 years, shall be paid an annuity, to begin on a date specified in a written application, which date shall not be more than 60 days before the making of the application. No annuity shall begin less than 6 months after the effective date. Such annuity shall be based upon the service period of the employee and shall be the sum of the amounts determined by multiplying the number of years of service, not exceeding 30 years, by the following percentages of the monthly compensation: 2 percent of the first $50; 1½ percent of the next $100; and 1 percent of the compensation in excess of $150. The 'monthly compensation' shall be the average of the monthly compensation paid to the employee by the carrier, except that where applicable for service before the effective date the monthly compensation shall be the average of the monthly compensation for all pay-roll periods for which the employee has received compensation from any carrier out of 8 consecutive calendar years of such services ending December 31, 1931. No part of any monthly compensation in excess of $300 shall be recognized in determining any annuity for any employee contribution. The annuity shall be reduced by one-fifteenth of such annuity for each year the employee is less than 65 years of age at the time of the first annuity payment. No such reduction shall be made if the Board shall determine that the carrier has retired the employee because of physical or mental inability to continue in active service. Upon death of an employee before or after retirement an amount, equal at his death to a computation, with interest at 3 percent compounded annually, of the accumulation from his payments less any annuity payments received by him, shall be paid as he may have designated or to his legal representative. Any employee who upon retirement shall be entitled to an annuity with a value determined by the Board of less than $300 shall be paid such value in a lump sum.

" RETIREMENT

"SEC. 4. Retirement shall be compulsory upon employees who, on the effective date, have attained or thereafter shall attain the age of 65 years. The carrier and the employee may, by an agreement in writing filed with the Board, extend the time for retirement as to such employee for 1 year and for successive periods of 1 year each, but not beyond the age of 70 years. Until 5 years from the effective date the compulsory retirement shall not apply to an employee who from and after the effective date occupies an official position in the service of a carrier.

"CONTRIBUTION

"SEC. 5. Each employee shall pay an employee contribution in a percentage upon his compensation. Each carrier shall pay a carrier contribution equal to twice the contributions of each employee of such carrier. The employee compensation shall be the compensation for service paid to such employee by the carrier excluding compensation in excess of $300 per month. The contribution percentage shall be determined by the Board from time to time, and shall be such as to produce from the combined employee and carrier contributions, with a reasonable margin for contingencies, the amount necessary to pay the annuities, other disbursements and the expenses becoming payable from time to time. Until the Board shall determine on a different percentage the employee contribution percentage shall be 2 percent. Employee contributions shall be deducted by the carrier from the compensation of its employees and shall be paid by the carrier, together with the carrier contributions, into the Treasury of the United States quarterly or at such other times as ordered by the Board.

"EXISTING PENSION SYSTEM

"SEC. 6. The Board shall have the power to provide by appropriate rules and regulations for substituting the provisions for annuities and other benefits to employees under this act, for any obligation for prior service or for any existing provisions for the voluntary payment of pensions to employees subject to this act by a carrier or any employees subject to this act, so as to relieve such carrier from its obligations for age retirement benefits under its existing pension systems and to transfer such obligations to the retirement system herein established. If the fulfillment of any such transferred obligation shall require additional contributions or larger payments than would otherwise be required under the provisions of this act, then such additional contributions shall be made by the carrier originally responsible for the creation of such obligation or for the excess amount of such payments over those which would be required under the provisions of this act. In the event that the Board is unable to make satisfactory arrangements with any carrier for the substitution of the provisions under this act for its existing pension system, then, and in that event, the provisions of this act shall be applied to said carrier and its employees without regard to any conflict or duplication in the operation of such an existing pension system and the operation and effect of the provisions of this act: Provided, That the Board, at its option, shall have power, in lieu of the foregoing provisions of this section, to order that all former employees of carriers who prior to the effective date have become separated from the service at the age of 70 years or over and who may or may not be receiving age retirement benefits shall be entitled to the benefits of this act.

" EMPLOYEE REPRESENTATIVES

"Sec. 7. Any representative of an employee organization who is included within the definition of 'employee' in paragraph (b), section 1, of this act shall have the option, but, shall not be required to continue or to become a beneficiary under the provisions of this act. If he shall elect to continue or to become such a beneficiary he shall pay all voluntary contributions.

"For the purposes of this section the requirements of section 4 of this act shall not apply. Service rendered to an employee organization shall be included in computing the total service period of such representative.

"For such representative who shall elect to become a beneficiary under this act, the basic compensation upon which contributions shall be made and benefits calculated shall be that compensation paid by the carrier for service rendered in the position to which the rights of such representative would entitle him for the period defined in section 3 of this act: Provided, That if no definite and specific rights obtain, the average compensation paid to the four employees whose last date of entry in the service is nearest the date of entry in the service of the same carrier by such representative, shall be his basic compensation to be determined for the period defined in section 3 of this act. When a question arises as to rights under this provision the Board shall investigate and determine rights of such representative.

"For such representative who elects to continue as a beneficiary under the provisions of this act, his basic compensation shall be the average monthly compensation paid to him by the carrier during the last 12 months of active service with such carrier.

" RETIREMENT FUND

"SEC. 8. All moneys paid into the Treasury under the provisions of this act, all interest, and other receipts, and all refunds of moneys paid out under this act shall constitute and be kept in a separate fund in the Treasury, to be known as the 'railroad retirement fund.' At the request and direction of the Board, the Treasurer of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to invest such funds as are not immediately required for disbursements in interest-bearing bonds, notes, or other obligations of the United States, and to collect the principal and interest of such securities and to sell and dispose of the same as in the judgment of the Board shall be in the interest of said fund. There is hereby appropriated such sums not in excess of the amounts in said fund as may be necessary to pay all annuities, other disbursements and the expenses of administration of this act.

" RETIREMENT BOARD

"Sec. 9. (a) Personnel: There is hereby established as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Government a Railroad Retirement Board, to be composed of three members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each member shall hold office for a term of 5 years, except that any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, shall be appointed for the remainder of the term and the terms of office of the members first taking office after the date of enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President, 1 at the end of 2 years, 1 at the end of 3 years, and 1 at the end of 4 years, after the date of enactment of this act. One member shall be appointed from recommendations made by representatives of the employees and one member shall be appointed from recommendations made by representatives of the carriers, in both cases as the President shall direct, so as to provide representation on the Board satisfactory to the largest number, respectively, of employees and carriers concerned. One member, who shall be the chairman of the Board, shall be appointed, initially, for a term of 2 years, without recommendation by either carriers or employees and shall not be in the employment of or be pecuniarily or otherwise interested in any carrier or organization of employees. Vacancies in the Board shall not impair the powers nor affect the duties of the Board nor of the remaining members of the Board of whom a majority of those in office shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Each of said members shall receive a salary of $10,000 per year, together with necessary traveling expenses and subsistence expenses, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, while away from the principal office of the Board on duties required by this act. The members and employees of the Board shall be included as employees under this act and together with employees receiving annuities shall be furnished free transportation in the same manner as such transportation is furnished to employees.

"(b) Duties: The Board shall have and exercise all the duties and powers necessary to administer this act. The Board shall receive and take such steps and institute and prosecute such proceedings and actions as may be necessary to enforce the payments and obligations required under the act, make and certify awards and payments, and account for all moneys and funds necessary thereto. The Board may require such advances upon the payments of carriers as necessary to put this act into operation. The Board shall establish and promulgate rules and regulations and provide for the adjustment of all controversial matters, with power as a Board or through any member or subordinate designated therefor, to require and compel the attendance of witnesses, administer oaths, take testimony, and make all necessary investigations in any matter involving annuities or other payments, and shall maintain such offices, provide such equipment, furnishings, supplies, services, and facilities and employ such persons and provide for their compensation and expenses, as may be necessary to the proper discharge of its functions. All rules, regulations, or decisions of the Board shall require the approval of at least two members and shall be entered upon the records of the Board and shall be a public record. The Board shall gather, keep, compile, and publish in convenient form such records and data as may be necessary, and at intervals of not more than two years shall cause to be made actuarial surveys and analyses, to determine from time to time the payments to be required to provide for all annuities, other disbursements and expenses, and to assure proper administration and the adequacy and permanency of the retirement system hereby The Board shall have power to require all carriers and employees and any officer, board, commission, or other agency of the United States to furnish such information and records as shall be necessary for the administration of this act. The Board shall make an annual report to the President of the United States to be submitted to Congress. Witnesses summoned before the Board shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in | the courts of the United States.

"COURT JURISDICTION

"SEC. 10. The several district courts of the United States and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction to entertain an application and to grant appropriate relief in the following cases which may arise under the provisions of this act:

"(a) An application by the Board to compel an employee or other person residing within the jurisdiction of said court, or a carrier subject to service of process within said jurisdiction, to comply with any obligations imposed on said employee, other person, or carrier under the provisions of

"(b) An application by an employee or carrier to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or to the district court of any district wherein the Board maintains an office or has designated an agent authorized to accept service in its behalf, to compel the Board to set aside an action or decision claimed to be in violation of a legally enforceable right of the applicant, or to take an action, or to make a decision necessary for the enforcement of a legal right of the applicant, when the applicant shall establish his right to a judicial review upon the jurisdictional ground that, unless he is granted a judicial review of the action or decision, or failure of the Board to act or to decide, of which he complains, he will be deprived of a constitutional right to obtain a judicial determination of his alleged right.

"(c) The jurisdiction herein specifically conferred upon the said Federal courts shall not be held exclusive of any jurisdiction otherwise possessed by said courts to entertain actions at law or suits in equity in aid of the enforcement of rights or obligations arising under the provisions of this act.

" EXEMPTION

"SEC. 11. No annuity or death payment shall be assignable or be subject to any tax or to garnishment, attachment, or other legal process under any circumstances whatsoever.

"PENALTY-CARRIER

"SEC. 12. On the failure of any carrier to make any payment when due under the provisions of this act, such carrier, unless excused by order of the Board, shall pay an additional 1 percent of the amount of such payment for each month such payment is delayed.

" OTHERS

"SEC. 13. Any employee, other person, officer, or agent of a carrier subject to this act who shall willfully fail or refuse to make any report or furnish any information required by the Board in the administration of this act or who shall willfully fail or refuse to make any accounting required under this act, or who shall knowingly make any false or fraudulent statement or report required for the purpose of this act, or who shall knowingly make or aid in making any false or fraudulent statement or claim for the purpose of receiving any award or payment under this act shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year.

" SEPARABILITY

"SEC. 14. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act or application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby."

And the House agreed to the same.

FRED H. BROWN, B. K. WHEELER. ROBERT F. WAGNER, DANIEL O. HASTINGS, H. D. HATFIELD, Managers on the part of the Senate.

CLARENCE F. LEA, ROBERT CROSSER, J. G. MILLIGAN, PEHR G. HOLMES, B. CARROLL REECE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the bill as reported by the conferees represents the best compromise that could be obtained in view of the approaching adjournment of the present session of Congress. Insistent demand was made by the other House that their pension schedule be retained. I have prepared some figures dealing with the difference between the Senate bill and the House bill and the conference committee agreement, and I ask that they may be made a part of the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The conferees on the proposed Railroad Retirement Act (S. 3231 and H.R. 9911) have agreed on a substitute amendment in which changes are made from the Senate bill

There are very substantial differences between the Senate bill and the House bill as these were passed and referred to the conference committee.

The Senate bill provided for a monthly annuity basis of 2 percent of the monthly compensation of wage for not exceeding 30 years, which on a $150 wage provides a pension of $90.

The House bill proposed to change this to 2 percent of the first $30, 1½ percent of the second $50, and 1 percent of the wage in excess of $100. On a $150 wage this pension would amount to $67.50 to $67.50.

The substitute as agreed upon in the conference provides a pension of 2 percent of the first $50, 1½ percent on the next $100, and 1 percent on the excess in wage over $150 on a $150 monthly compensation or average wage; the pension provided by the conference substitute is $75.

The Senate bill recognized as a basis for the annuity or pension a monthly compensation up to $400.

The House amendment reduces this to $300. The conference bill accepts the reduction to $300.

The provision in the House amendment fixing a maximum pension of $100 is omitted from the conference bill.

The effect of the changes is shown by the following table:

Comparison of railroad retirement pensions under Senate and House bills and conference bill

	Senate bill (S. 3231)	House bill (H.R. 9011)	Conference bill
Monthly wage: $50. $80. $80. $100. $150. $220. $230. $350. $350. $400.	$30 48 60 90 120 150 180 210 240	$30, 00 43, 50 52, 50 67, 50 82, 50 97, 50 100, 00 1 100, 00 100, 00	$30.00 43.50 52.50 75.00 90.00 105.00 120.00 120.00

1 No contribution is required on the part of the wage over $300.

The House amendment for section 6 provided for taking into the system immediately all pensioners under existing railroad pension systems. Under section 6 of the Senate bill, this is left to the Board. Section 6 is retained as in the Senate bill.

definitions for which

Minor changes are made clarifying the definitions for which purpose section 1 of the House bill is adopted. The bill, as reported by the conferees, represented the best com-The bill, as reported by the conferees, represented the best compromise that could be obtained in advance of the adjournment of the present Congress. Insistent demand was made that the lower House pension schedules be retained. The compromise omits the arbitrary maximum figure in the House amendment and also increases the maximum amounts permitted as pension payments quite materially above the $100 wage.

It is believed that these amounts in the higher wage scale are insufficient to secure desirable retirements which would be of great advantage to the industry. Other changes will no doubt have to be made as experience will develop the necessity.

The bill, however, marks a milestone in dealing with indus-

The bill, however, marks a milestone in dealing with industrial pensions, not alone in the present instance, but for all industry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

IN AID OF INDIANS-CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WHEELER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3645) to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to establish a credit system for Indians; to provide for higher education for Indians; to extend toward Indians the right to form business and other organizations; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That hereafter no land of any Indian reservation, created or set apart by treaty or agreement with the Indians, act of Congress, Executive order, purchase, or otherwise, shall be allotted in severalty to any Indian.

"SEC. 2. The existing periods of trust placed upon any Indian lands and any restriction on alienation thereof are hereby extended and continued until otherwise directed by

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior, if he shall find it to be in the public interest, is hereby authorized to restore to tribal ownership the remaining surplus lands of any Indian reservation heretofore opened, or authorized to be opened, to sale, or any other form of disposal by Presidential proclamation, or by any of the public-land laws of the United States: Provided, however, That valid rights or claims of any persons to any lands so withdrawn existing on the date of the withdrawal shall not be affected by this act: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to lands within any reclamation project heretofore authorized in any Indian reservation: Provided further, That the order of the Department of the Interior signed, dated, and approved by Hon. Ray Lyman Wilbur, as Secretary of the Interior, on October 28, 1932, temporarily withdrawing lands of the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona from all forms of mineral entry or claim under the public land mining laws, is hereby revoked and rescinded, and the lands of the said Papago Indian Reservation are hereby restored to exploration and location, under the existing mining laws of the United States, in accordance with the express terms and provisions declared and set forth in the Executive orders establishing said Papago Indian Reservation: Provided further, That damages shall be paid to the Papago Tribe for loss of any improvements on any land located for mining in such a sum as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior but not to exceed the cost of said improvements: Provided further, That a yearly rental not to exceed 5 cents per acre shall be paid to the Papago Tribe for loss of the use or occupancy of any land withdrawn by the requirements of mining operations, and payments derived from damages or rentals shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Papago Tribe: Provided further, That in the event any person or persons, partnership, corporation, or association, desires a mineral patent, according to the mining laws of the United States, he or they shall first deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Papago Tribe the sum of $1 per acre in lieu of annual rental, as hereinbefore provided, to compensate for the loss or occupancy of the lands withdrawn by the requirements of mining operations: Provided further, That patentee shall also pay into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Papago Tribe damages for the loss of improvements not heretofore paid in such a sum as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, but not to exceed the cost thereof; the payment of $1 per acre for surface use to be refunded to patentee in the event that patent is not acquired.

"Nothing herein contained shall restrict the granting or use of permits for easements or rights-of-way; or ingress or egress over the lands for all proper and lawful purposes; and nothing contained herein, except as expressly provided, shall be construed as authority for the Secretary of the Interior, or any other person, to issue or promulgate a rule or regulation in conflict with the Executive order of February 1, 1917, creating the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona or the act of February 21, 1931 (46 Stat. 1202).

"SEC. 4. Except as herein provided, no sale, devise, gift, shares in the assets of any Indian tribe or corporation organized hereunder, shall be made or approved: Provided, however, That such lands or interests may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, be sold, devised, or otherwise transferred to the Indian tribe in which the lands or shares are located or from which the shares were derived or to a successor corporation; and in all instances such lands or interests shall descend or be devised, in accordance with the then existing laws of the State, or Federal laws where applicable, in which said lands are located or in which the subject matter of the corporation is located, to any member of such tribe or of such corporation or any heirs of such member: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may authorize voluntary exchanges of lands of equal value and the voluntary exchange of shares of equal value whenever such exchange, in his judgment, is expedient and beneficial for or compatible with the proper consolidation of Indian lands and for the benefit of cooperative organiza-

"SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to acquire through purchase, relinquishment, gift, exchange, or assignment, any interest in lands, water rights, or surface rights to lands, within or without existing reservations, including trust or otherwise restricted allotments whether the allottee be living or deceased, for the purpose of providing land for Indians.

"For the acquisition of such lands, interests in lands, water rights, and surface rights, and for expenses incident to such acquisition, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $2,000,000 in any one fiscal year: Provided, That no part of such funds shall be used to acquire additional land outside of the exterior boundaries of Navajo Indian Reservation for the Navajo Indians in Arizona and New Mexico, in the event that the proposed Navajo boundary extension measures now pending in Congress and embodied in the bills (S. 2499 and H.R. 8927) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona, and for other purposes, and the bills (S. 2531 and H.R. 8982) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico and for other purposes, or similar legislation, become law.

"The unexpended balances of any appropriation made pursuant to this section shall remain available until expended.

"Title to any lands or rights acquired pursuant to this act shall be taken in the name of the United States in trust for the Indian tribe or individual Indian for which the land is acquired and such lands or rights shall be exempt from State and local taxation.

"SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Interior is directed to make rules and regulations for the operation and management of Indian forestry units on the principle of sustained-yield management, to restrict the number of livestock grazed on Indian range units to the estimated carrying capacity of such ranges, and to promulgate such other rules and regulations as may be necessary to protect the range from deterioration, to prevent soil erosion, to assure full utilization of the range, and like purposes.

"Sec. 7. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to proclaim new Indian reservations on lands acquired pursuant to any authority conferred by this act, or to add such lands to existing reservations: Provided, That lands added to existing reservations shall be designated for the exclusive use of Indians entitled by enrollment or by tribal membership to residence at such reservations.

"SEC. 8. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to relate to Indian holdings of allotments or homesteads upon the public domain outside of the geographic boundaries of any Indian reservation now existing or established hereafter.

"SEC. 9. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, exchange or other transfer of restricted Indian lands or of such sums as may be necessary, but not to exceed $250,000 in any fiscal year, to be expended at the order of the Secretary of the Interior, in defraying the expenses of organizing Indian chartered corporations or other organizations created under this act.

"Sec. 10. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000,000 to be established as a revolving fund from which the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, may make loans to Indian chartered corporations for the purpose of promoting the economic development of such tribes and of their members, and may defray the expenses of administering such loans. Repayment of amounts loaned under this authorization shall be credited to the revolving fund and shall be available for the purposes for which the fund is established. A report shall be made annually to Congress of transactions under this authorization.

"Sec. 11. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $250,000 annually, together with any unexpended balances of previous appropriations made pursuant to this section, for loans to Indians for the payment of tuition and other expenses in recognized vocational and trade schools: Provided, That not more than $50,000 of such sum shall be available for loans to Indian students in high schools and colleges. Such loans shall be reimbursable under rules established by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

"Sec. 12. The Secretary of the Interior is directed to establish standards of health, age, character, experience, knowledge, and ability for Indians who may be appointed, without regard to civil-service laws, to the various positions maintained, now or hereafter, by the Indian Office, in the administration of functions or services affecting any Indian tribe. Such qualified Indians shall hereafter have the preference to appointment to vacancies in any such positions.

"Sec. 13. The provisions of this act shall not apply to any of the Territories, colonies, or insular possessions of the United States, except that sections 9, 10, 11, 12, and 16, shall apply to the Territory of Alaska: Provided, That sections 2, 4, 7, 16, 17, and 18 of this act shall not apply to the following-named Indian tribes, the members of such Indian tribes, together with members of other tribes affiliated with such named tribes located in the State of Oklahoma, as follows: Cheyenne, Arapaho, Apache, Comanche, Kiowa, Caddo, Delaware, Wichita, Osage, Kaw, Otoe, Tonkawa, Pawnee, Ponca, Shawnee, Ottawa, Quapaw, Seneca, Wyandotte, Iowa, Sac and Fox, Kickapoo, Pottawatomi, Cherokee, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek, and Seminole. Section 4 of this act shall not apply to the Indians of the Klamath Reservation in Oregon.

SEC. 14. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to continue the allowance of the articles enumerated in section 17 of the act of March 2, 1889 (23 Stat.L. 894), or their commuted cash value under the act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat.L. 334), to all Sioux Indians who would be eligible, but for the provisions of this act, to receive allotments of lands in severalty under section 19 of the act of May 29, 1908 (25 Stat.L. 451), or under any prior act, and who have the prescribed status of the head of a family or single person over the age of 18 years, and his approval shall be final and conclusive, claims therefor to be paid as formerly from the permanent appropriation made by said section 17 and carried on the books of the Treasury for this purpose. No person shall receive in his own right more than one allowance of the benefits, and application must be made and approved during the lifetime of the allottee or the right shall lapse. Such benefits shall continue to be paid upon such reservation until such time as the lands available therein for allotment at the time of the passage of this act would have been exhausted by the award to each person receiving such benefits of an allotment of 80 acres of such land.

"SEC. 15. Nothing in this act shall be construed to impair or prejudice any claim or suit of any Indian tribe against the United States. It is hereby declared to be the intent of Congress that no expenditures for the benefit of Indians made out of appropriations authorized by this act shall be considered as offsets in any suit brought to recover upon any claim of such Indians against the United States.

"Sec. 16. Any Indian tribe, or tribes, residing on the same reservation, shall have the right to organize for its common welfare, and may adopt an appropriate constitution and bylaws, which shall become effective when ratified by a majority vote of the adult members of the tribe, or of the adult Indians residing on such reservation, as the case may be, at a special election authorized and called by the Secretary of the Interior under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. Such constitution and bylaws when ratified as aforesaid and approved by the Secretary of the Interior shall be revocable by an election open to the same voters and conducted in the same manner as hereinabove provided. Amendments to the constitution and bylaws may be ratified and approved by the Secretary in the same manner as the original constitution and bylaws.

"In addition to all powers vested in any Indian tribe or tribal council by existing law, the constitution adopted by said tribe shall also vest in such tribe or its tribal council the following rights and powers: To employ legal counsel, the choice of counsel and fixing of fees to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; to prevent the sale, disposition, lease, or encumbrance of tribal lands, interests in lands, or other tribal assets without the consent of the tribe; and to negotiate with the Federal, State, and local Governments. The Secretary of the Interior shall advise such tribe or its tribal council of all appropriation estimates or Federal projects for the benefit of the tribe prior to the submission of such estimates to the Bureau of the Budget and the Congress.

"SEC. 17. The Secretary of the Interior may, upon petition by at least one-third of the adult Indians, issue a charter of incorporation to such tribe: Provided, That such charter shall not become operative until ratified at a special election by a majority vote of the adult Indians living on the reservation. Such charter may convey to the incorporated tribe the power to purchase, take by gift, or bequest, or otherwise, own, hold, manage, operate, and dispose of property of every description, real and personal, including the power to purchase restricted Indian lands and to issue in exchange therefor interests in corporate property, and such further powers as may be incidental to the conduct of corporate business, not inconsistent with law, but no authority shall be granted to sell, mortgage, or lease for a period exceeding 10 years any of the land included in the limits of the reservation. Any charter so issued shall not be revoked or surrendered except by act of Congress.

"Sec. 18. This act shall not apply to any reservation wherein a majority of the adult Indians, voting at a special election duly called by the Secretary of the Interior, shall vote against its application. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, within 1 year after the passage and approval of this act, to call such an election, which election shall be held by secret ballot upon 30 days' notice.

"Sec. 19. The term 'Indian' as used in this act shall include all persons of Indian descent who are members of any recognized Indian tribe now under Federal jurisdiction, and all persons who are descendants of such members who were, on June 1, 1934, residing within the present boundaries of any Indian reservation, and shall further include all other persons of one-half or more Indian blood. For the purposes of this act, Eskimos and other aboriginal people of Alaska shall be considered Indians. The term 'tribe' wherever used in this act shall be construed to refer to any Indian tribe, organized band, pueblo, or the Indians residing on one reservation. The words 'adult Indians' wherever used in this act shall be construed to refer to Indians who have attained the age of 21 years."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the! amendment of the House to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

BURTON K. WHEELER, ELMER THOMAS. LYNN J. FRAZIER, Managers on the part of the Senate. EDGAR HOWARD. ROY E. AYERS.

> FRED C. GILCHRIST, SAM L. COLLINS, KNUTE HILL,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the report be agreed to. Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this is the Wheeler-Howard Indian bill conference report?

Mr. WHEELER. It is. Mr. ASHURST. It will be remembered that I vexed the ears of Senators when this bill was before the Senate, and I urged an amendment restoring to mineral location the mineral lands within the so-called "Papago Indian Reservation", and the Senate agreed to my amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that the amendment was kept in.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the able Senator from Montana, chairman of the committee, whether he has-he is always courteous-obtained the opinion of the able Member of the House of Representatives from Arizona regarding this report?

Mr. WHEELER. I have.
Mr. ASHURST. May I presume to ask the Senator whether the able Member of the House of Representatives from Arizona is satisfied and contented with this amendment and this report?

Mr. WHEELER. My understanding is that the Member of the House of Representatives from Arizona is entirely satisfied with the amendment. The amendment, which was included in the report by the conference committee, is a combination of the House amendment, as proposed by the Member from Arizona in the House of Representatives, and the amendment proposed in the Senate by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the amendment adopted in the Senate excluding reclamation projects from the operations of the measure was also included?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

REGULATION OF PUBLIC GRAZING LANDS-CONFERENCE REPORT Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6462) to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

'Nothing in this act shall be construed in any way to diminish, restrict, or impair any right which has been heretofore or may be hereafter initiated under existing law validly affecting the public lands, and which is maintained pursuant to such law except as othewise expressly provided in this act, nor to affect any land heretofore or hereafter surveyed which, except for the provisions of this act, would be a part of any grant to any State."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "to groups, associations, or corporations authorized to conduct business under the laws of the State in which the grazing district is located. Preference shall be given in the issuance of grazing permits to those within or near a district who are landowners engaged in the livestock business, bona fide occupants or settlers, or owners of water or water rights, as may be necessary to permit the proper use of lands, water, or water rights owned, occupied, or leased by them, except that until July 1, 1935, no preference shall be given in the issuance of such permits to any such owner, occupant, or settler, whose rights were acquired between January 1, 1934, and December 31, 1934, both dates inclusive, except that no permittee complying with the rules and regulations laid down by the Secretary of the Interior shall be denied the renewal of such permit if such denial will impair the value of the grazing unit of the permittee when such unit is pledged as security for any bona fide loan. Such permits shall be for a period of not more than 10 years, subject to the preference right of the permittees to renewal in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall specify from time to time numbers of stock and seasons of use. During periods of range depletion due to severe drought or other natural causes, or in case of a general epidemic of disease, during the life of the permit, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to remit, reduce, refund in whole or in part, or authorize postponement of payment of grazing fees for such depletion period so long as the emergency exists."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed or administered in any way to diminish or impair any right to the possession and use of water for mining, agriculture, manufacturing, or other purposes which has heretofore vested or accrued under existing law validly affecting the public lands or which may be hereafter initiated or acquired and maintained in accordance with such law. So far as consistent with the purposes and provisions of this act, grazing privileges recognized and acknowledged shall be adequately safeguarded, but the creation of a grazing district or the issuance of a permit pursuant to the provisions of this act shall not create any right, title, interest, or estate in or to the lands"; and the Senate agree to the same.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT-APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT | RESOLUTION

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On June 15, 1934:

S. 2714. An act to amend section 895 of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia; and

S.J.Res. 93. Joint resolution authorizing the creation of a Federal Memorial Commission to consider and formulate plans for the construction, on the western bank of the Mississippi River, at or near the site of old St. Louis, Mo., of a permanent memorial to the men who made possible the territorial expansion of the United States, particularly President Thomas Jefferson and his aides, Livingston and Monroe, who negotiated the Louisiana Purchase, and to the great explorers, Lewis and Clark, and the hardy hunters, trappers, frontiersmen, and pioneers and others who contributed to the territorial expansion and development of the United States of America.

On June 16, 1934:

S. 3025. An act to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act so as to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit insurance, and for other purposes.

A. W. HOLLAND-CONFERENCE REPORT Mr. BAILEY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 551) for the relief of A. W. Holland, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

JOSIAH W. BAILEY. ARTHUR CAPPER, Managers on the part of the Senate.

LORING M. BLACK, Jr., ROBERT RAMSPECK, U. S. GUYER, Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT IN HOUSING STANDARDS AND CONDITIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3794) to encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions, to provide a system of mutual mortgage insurance, and for other purposes.

Mr. BULKLEY. I offer a further amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 30, lines 16, 17, and 18, it is proposed to strike out the words "or any combination of any three of these five words as the name or a part thereof under which he or it shall do business" and insert "or any combination of these words which would have the effect of leading the public in general to believe there was any connection, actually not existing, between such individual, association, partnership, or corporation and the Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, as the name under which he or it shall hereafter do business."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 47, after line 15, it is proposed to insert the following as a new section.

SEC. 506. Section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Nothing in this act shall prevent any carrier or carriers subject to this act from giving reduced rates for the transportation of commodities to be specified by the Commission as hereinafter provided, to or from any section of the country, with the object of improving Nation-wide housing standards and providing employment and stimulating industry, if such reduced rates have first been authorized by order of the Commission (with or without a hearing); but in such order the Commission (with or without a hearing); but in such order the Commission shall specify the commodities as to which this proviso shall be declared effective and shall specify the period during which such reduced rates are to remain in effect."

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I inquire what is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. This amendment, I will say, was drawn by Commissioner Eastman after conference with the Interstate Commerce Commission and with the Association of Railway Executives, and it has the approval of all those who are sponsoring this legislation. It provides that in the event any railroad company applies for permission to reduce rates on building materials, notwithstanding anything else in the act to regulate commerce, the Commission may authorize it for such period as it may designate to reduce the rate upon certain materials as it may designate in the hope that construction costs may be somewhat reduced. We have done that with reference to agricultural products and the law is now in effect; we did it yesterday in the deficiency appropriation bill, with reference to relief commodities, and this provision will not take effect, anyway, unless a railroad makes a request and it is granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. It was suggested this morning by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] that possibly this bill might be interpreted as exempting from local taxation real estate held by the administrator. The committee does not think that is a justifiable interpretation, but, in order to make the matter perfectly clear, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be

The Legislative Clerk. On page 18, between lines 14 and 15, in the title "Taxation provisions", it is proposed to Nothing in this title shall be construed to exempt any property acquired and held by the administrator under this title from taxation by any State or political subdivision thereof, to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment presented by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I assume that we will very soon reach a final vote on the measure now pending before the Senate; and I want to make an observation of only 2 or 3 minutes, as I am cooperating with those who desire expedition so as not unduly to delay final decision on any of the measures which are now before us.

The one thing in the proposal that appeals to me is the effort to assist the durable-goods industry in a revival of business. It has been very well understood and often commented on that the most dangerous situation in reference to the unemployment is in that field. Only yesterday the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] emphasized it and other Senators have recently remarked upon that particular condition. The report of the Labor Department in response to a resolution introduced asking information with reference to the labor situation, also indicated that in the durable-goods field employment was in rather a serious condition.

I felt, and, many months ago expressed the feeling that probably the key log to the whole situation lies in that field, that if the 5,000,000 people formerly employed in the durable-goods field could be reemployed it would take care of the other unemployment situation which represents the providing of work for what we might call the "white-collar element" in our citizenship.

distinctly at the one weak place in our employment situation. I cannot forsee where this is leading and what is to be the finality of it.

Senators will recall that when we discussed the farm land bank measure it was stated it would invite large borrowings in many cases probably that ought not to be provided for, and the time would come when we would be called upon to relieve the situation which would grow out of those borrowings. All of us recognize that the fear has been realized. In that case the responsibility was not of the Government, but of a lending agency which is not public or semipublic: a private enterprise.

Here we have a proposal which is governmental and I fear we are going to make borrowing so very easy that the Government will ultimately have to hold the bag. Government is not going to foreclose quickly and hurriedly because of the nonpayment of an indebtedness by a borrower. How far this will reach as a policy it is difficult to

In addition to that is the shocking burden we are placing upon the Treasury as the result of the emergency situation, and that burden is simply bewildering. When we think of the amount of money that every day we are authorizing with seemingly no effort to ascertain where it is to come from, it is difficult for anyone to see what is to become of us, except that we may reach a form of repudiation either in the form of inflation or otherwise. I think it is inevitable. For that reason specifically I am bewildered when we are called upon, with such ease and nonchalance as we are now displaying, to have the Government enter into such enterprises as the one contemplated by the bill now before us.

It is fine to have our citizens build new homes, modernize their old homes, and furnish them with modern equipment. I should like to see that done, but when it is to be done at the risk of the Government, I do not know what is to be the end of it. It seems to me we are facing a very serious situation.

Mr. President, all through this session of Congress we have been morbidly pessimistic. Everyone said "We have to do it; there is nothing else to do." Senators have voted and are voting for measures every day to which they do not subscribe, but they say "there is nothing else for us to do." In a sense that may be a justification.

But I do not think all the greatness belongs to the past. I do not believe it for a moment. I think there is a greatness in the future as well as in the past. When we talk about the great fall in prices usually we are thinking of the difference between the height of prices in boom times and the low level of prices in depression times, when really the low level is not so far below the normal price level, and the emphasis is made simply because of the high level from which we have fallen, when that high level was not normal.

I think there is still a future for the United States. Only recently an invitation was extended to a very distinguished citizen of my State, Mr. John E. Galvin, of Lima, Ohio, to attend a dinner which was given by a leader in enterprise. The keynote of the occasion was the future and what could be expected for the country. He answered the invitation in these words:

Those who think that the world, and particularly the United States, is finished tire me. In my opinion the average standard of living even in our own country is not 10 percent of what it should and can be if we only think so. We business men want bigger and better business every year; to achieve this with a population that is increasing less than 1½ percent yearly we must address ourselves to the problem of continually raising the standard of living of all our people. This means many more things and services of all kinds for everybody. As the wants of man are infinite so is this market unlimited after 150 years as a nation. We have at 1929 prices only $3,000 per capita to provide the tools of production necessary to produce our present standard of living. In the next 10 years we should provide 10 times that much. At least 80 percent of our present equipment should be replaced within the next decade and we should then start all over again with the development of that period. Our business as a whole is limited only by the kind of thinking the Nation does as a whole. I hope that your dinner will be a starter in showing all leaders in Government, business, and all lines of human endeavor the necessity of increasing the produc-Those who think that the world, and particularly the United tion and distribution of all kinds of goods and services necessary to raise the standard of living of all classes and truly promote the prosperity and happiness of all our people.

That is the sentiment which comes from a man who is not only a business man but who has the scientific viewpoint.

Mr. President, I have here an address delivered by Mr. Charles F. Kettering, a very distinguished scientist of our day, a man who has probably done as much in applying the principles of science to our modern economic life as any other man. He makes some very remarkable statements as to the possibilities of the future. His idea is that we are only in the beginning of what ultimately and in the near future will be realized by the new application of science. He speaks of various items, such as air conditioning, and other applications of modern principles to living. I think his address ought to have a very wide reading. The address was delivered at Chicago. It is full of optimism, in contrast with the pessimism to which we have been listening. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

PREVIEWS OF INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS IN THE NEXT CENTURY

(Address of Charles F. Kettering, vice president in charge of research, General Motors Corporation, in the Hall of Progress, General Motors Building, Century of Progress Exposition, Chicago, Friday, May 25, 1934)

Chicago, Friday, May 25, 1934)

The whole world is now absorbed in a study of social problems. These problems were brought about largely by the war. The depression has had a lot to do with clarifying science and industry's part in these problems. As to what we do in the future will depend altogether upon how good a perspective we have as to what we know and what we do not know. The ultimate aim of all industry, science, government, and sociology is for a better life—better living conditions, better health, better food, better government, better houses—in fact, for better everything. And these can come about only in proportion as our daily routine and activities conform more nearly to nature's laws which we understand so poorly at the present time.

The very fact that we have a lot of trouble is the best indication of this lack of understanding. Any group of scientists and engineers can sit down and write a long list of things which can be accomplished in the future. And it can also be written down that these things will come to pass when our Government, social, that these things will come to pass when our Government, social, and economic situation develop to a point where they are desirable. And when these new products are presented, if the people accept them, they then become the beginning of new industries which will absorb a great many of our unemployed.

This list which we are discussing is merely the extension of what is in evidence today. And of itself it has sufficient vitality to produce new jobs and new commercial activities to pick up our entire unemployment. But we must do something about it. Just talking will not produce the results.

Just talking will not produce the results.

It is my impression, however, that we are on the eve of things of an entirely different nature than the mere extension, refinement, and development of our present-day scientific knowledge. I feel we have upon us in the immediate future a great change in mental attitudes toward the physical world which would bring into existence new pieces of information which will completely change our scientific viewpoint. It is not what we know that is so important. It is what we do not know. Most of what we know can be found in libraries, in the minds of people, and in process as they exist today. But we have no conception of what a small percentage this is to what there is yet to know.

As an illustration, we perhaps do not recognize it, but every-

As an illustration, we perhaps do not recognize it, but everything that ever moved on the earth has been moved by energy which came directly from the sun. Our coal and oil deposits, our forests, our crops, and everything that lives on the earth is simply an energy contribution from the sun. We do not know, except in a very superficial way, how the energy which is given out by the sun is transmitted to the earth. We do not know how plants pick up this energy and convert the inanimate carbon dioxide and water into the vital materials so necessary for our existence. This when understood will open up an entirely This, when understood, will open up an entirely new conception of things that can be done.

It is not difficult with this information in hand for even the most unimaginative person to predict the propulsion of airplanes by radiated energy with the power plants located on the ground. Nor is it difficult to envision the entire system of aerial trans-Nor is it dimcuit to envision the entire system of aerial transportation which would be unaffected by fog and weather conditions in general. Most of this work is being studied today under the name of photosynthesis—that is, how plants grow. And we have one research which, for want of a better name, we say is trying to find out why the grass is green. We must understand something of these processes of radiated energy before many of the great problems which lie ahead of us can be solved.

So much of our information today does not consist of basic

So much of our information today does not consist of basic understanding. It is known to us only by definitions. We say we can see through a pane of glass because it is transparent, and yet we do not know the first principle of how light is transmitted through glass. We say a copper wire is a conductor of electricity, and yet even our best scientists do not know, even in a small way, how electricity passes through one. We rub our hands together; we say they are warmed by the friction, and yet we have no knowledge today of the magnetism of friction. We know we have ball bearings, but as to the exact action of lubrication little, if anything is known and in the commonlace things that are used. anything, is known, and in the commonplace things that are used in the electrical industry, such as magnetism, electric charges, etc., we have only a very superficial knowledge. We know these We know these things exist, however, because we can see the effects of them.

Each year we discover new things, which a short time ago we did not even know existed. This has been true in the case of food and vitamins and other principles of nutrition. I cannot help but feel that in a very short time we are going to break loose help but feel that in a very short time we are going to break loose another great piece of basic information which will keep us industrially busy for a great many years to come. I think if we write down as our immediate problem those things with which we are dissatisfied we have a long list of things to do. We can make our cities less noisy; we can take dirt out of the air; we are air conditioning our houses; we can have television and an unapproached number of other things. Now, if we will go ahead and do these things which are evident, to the best of our ability, and still keep an abiding faith in what we know and in what we do not know as having possibilities of great contributions to human welfare, there will be no need to fear the future.

There are many people who doubt if human progress can continue on its present standards. Still others think that we have to go back to lower standards of living because they see no way out of our present difficulty. There are, however, a substantial number who, knowing something of the development of civilization, do not regard the evidence presented as justifying either a number who, knowing something of the development of civilization, do not regard the evidence presented as justifying either a static or a retrograding standard of living. Our assemblage around this table, made up of all classes of scientists and industrialists, consists of all of the talents from that group of our American people who do not believe the world is finished or that we must curtail human effort and desire. But, on the other hand, we do believe that the only way out of our present difficulty is forward and not backward. To those of us who have spent most of our time in experimental and development work failure is a common thing, and if we gave up the principle every time an experiment failed we would accomplish nothing. If common sense dictates that our objectives are sound, we must keep on failing and learning and failing until the objective is obtained.

Our civilization, as a whole, is new. This is the first time in the history of the world that such a civilization has been in existence. It in itself is an experiment, and just because we have encountered difficulty is no cause for despair. We must find out what is wrong and then remedy it, but we must not give find out what is wrong and then remedy it, but we must not give up hope of a better and more secure life.

Almost every group of human society has been blamed for our difficulty, and the group which we represent has come in for a good measure of criticism. Most of this has come from people who do not know, either through the lack of imagination or experience, how to project the future. We welcome criticism and are open to suggestions as to how to do our work better. We feel that this depression is just one of the echoes of the Great War. Nevertheless, it is a reality and everybody must do what he can to help in every way possible to tide over these difficult

We are being told that if we develop new things we must accept the responsibility to see that they are properly used. We cannot accept this proposition. First of all, we do not know when we are developing a new tool of human usefulness, and secondly a mind turned in fact-finding and experimentation does not make either a good politician or a social worker. We believe that many of the principles that have been developed in the physical sciences can be used in the study of the social sciences and we stand ready to contribute in any way that we can to this work. In the conception of any new project few people can see its significance, but when difficulties are encountered they always want to turn back. Christopher Columbus had exactly this experience with his crew and while he did not reach his objective the result of his bold voyage resulted in a very much more important thing than that which he started out to do.

This same thing holds good in practically every human under-

This same thing holds good in practically every human under-This same thing holds good in practically every human undertaking. We must believe both in the integrity of the people and in the motive which drives them on to their new undertaking. We must also have an open-mindedness in dealing with all new problems. When Faraday was experimenting on some of his first work in electricity a member of Parliament said, "What use can this ever be?" He replied, "You may be able to tax electrical apparatus some day."

This has, we all know, come true. In the short space of time between the Century of Progress of 1933 and tonight, a great many significant steps have been made in all branches of science, many significant steps have been made in all branches of science, industry, and human relationships. These will be discussed by our distinguished guests. While no one can predict what the significance may be, we know that these new things have as great a potential at this time as any other great discoveries had in times past, at their inception. Every activity has before itself many great jobs to do. Perhaps one of them that concerns us most is with health. The doctor has done a wonderful job in his long tedious journey from the medicine man of ancient time with his attempt to scare away evil spirits to the present day of scientific approach and intelligent diagnosis. It will take him many years of the new century to understand all the delicate chemical reactions that go on in the human system. The physicist, the biologist, and the engineer are all being asked to lend their assistance in this great work. The exhibit of medicine, surgery, and general health education is one of the most important in this great exposition, in which we have a part.

Most people think that science and industry are interested only in the development of labor-saving machinery. This is entirely a false notion. But we must not forget that for the past 50 years, when the great building of our railways, cities, and industrial plants was going on, this labor-saving was a most important thing because we did not have enough people to do the work. And only 5 years ago we had a scarcity of labor in this country. We are all very much more interested in the production of labor-producing projects and invention than we are in labor-saving, and it is our desire to present to you tonight this point of view. If you will only recognize how much there is yet to be done that will be of general good to the whole human family, then we need not worry, but we must be bold enough to take those forward steps which will bring back prosperity in any measure that we desire or in any measure which we have imagination enough to conceive.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, on the same occasion Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin, made a very remarkable and interesting speech, in which he took the same position, stating that we are not finished, that our greatness is in front of us rather than behind us. I ask to have his address printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF GLENN FRANK, PRESIDENT UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN, PREVIEWS OF INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS IN THE NEET CENTURY, HALL OF PROGRESS, GENERAL MOTORS BUILDING, CENTURY OF PROGRESS EXPOSITION, CHICAGO, FRIDAY, MAY 25, 1934

It has been the essence of the American spirit to face the future with high expectancy of new and vibrant possibilities. American has been a man of faith. He has always scorned the suggestion of surrender in the face of difficult circumstances. He needs to remember and to rely upon that spirit now.

A thousand and one voices are whispering to him that his only hope of salvation and security lies in a deliberate retreat from this age of plenty and a planned return to the age of scarcity. Tonight some of us are undertaking to challenge the soundness of this whispered advice.

There is no dodding the fact that the relentless advance of

There is no dodging the fact that the relentless advance of physical science and industrial technology has confronted us with unprecedented difficulties. The development of scientific physical science and industrial technology has confronted us with unprecedented difficulties. The development of scientific processes has moved with airplane speed. The development of social policies has lumbered on at a stagecoach rate. Research in the physical sciences has produced social changes faster than research in the social sciences has perfected social controls. All sorts of maladjustments have occurred. And the result has been a race between scientific progress and social instability, with social instability, for the time, being in the lead.

The blunt truth is that the revolutionary results of physical science and industrial technology have brought us to a crossroads where decisions that will determine our destiny must be made.

There are only two choices now open to us. We can call a halt on scientific research and technological advance until they no longer put so many strains on the traditional structure and functions of our social order. Or we can put our brains to the business of making such readjustments in our political, social, and economic policies as will enable us to take full human advantage of this new age of science, technology, and plenty.

The first choice is unworthy of the American tradition. The second choice would mean that the spirit of the pioneers is not dead in us.

To me the most disturbing fact of the time is the number of Americans, in high position and low, who are falling victim to a defeatist mood, apparently assuming that progress has come to a dead end, that science and technology have been too efficient in producing a limitless output at low prices, and that the thing to do is to plan a lesser output at high prices.

To restrict production and to raise prices as a general policy is, to me, not liberalism but reaction, not statesmanship but surrender, not creative advance but cowardly retreat. That way lies the subdizing of inefficiency. That way lies the sabotage of superior management that knows how to bring both the cost of production and the price of products down. That way lies a perperior management that knows how to bring both the cost of production and the price of products down. That way lies a permanent and perilous lowering of living standards for the swarming millions. It was not for this that the pioneers builded their blood and sacrifice into the foundations of this Nation. More goods at lower prices is the logical goal of an age of science and technology.

To me it is incredible that, in a world of tragically unfilled To me it is incredible that, in a world of tragically unified human need, we should now set out upon the quixotic attempt to increase welfare by destroying wealth or declining to create it. Our ancestors fought valiantly over the centuries to conquer famine. Are we now to say that their conquest has been too decisive? After the sweat and science of generations have brought us out of an economy of scarcity into an economy of plenty, are we to confess that we are incapable of managing plenty, and deliberately legislate a modified famine? I think history will pass a bitter judgment upon us if, in the midst of such manifest need, we take this road in dealing with the difficulties now confronting our farms and our factories.

Two things must, I think, be done in our schools, colleges, and

Two things must, I think, be done in our schools, colleges, and universities to help prevent our taking this suicide road.

First, from one end of our school system to the other we must rebuild our curricula around a spinal column of political, social, and economic studies which reduce to utter simplicity and intelligibility the plain principles of organization and operation that must govern the work of an age of science and technology if its magnificent mechanism for producing abundance is to serve instead of sink us. These studies must be organized, not in terms of traditional academic objectives, but for the avowed social purpose of training a generation of citizens to play a productive role in the creation, comprehension, and control of a workable role in the creation, comprehension, and control of a workable social and economic order in an age of plenty.

Second, the universities and research institutes must organize to insure an earlier consideration of the social and economic effects the discoveries of the physical scientist and industrial technologist. Under the research system to date the social scientists get into the game too late. They wait until the discoveries of the physical scientist and industrial technologist radically upset old social and economic arrangements and then come along as a kind of wrecking crew to clean up after the catastrophe and to suggest ways of preventing its recurrence. That has proved too costly a procedure socially. From now on the physical scientists and the social scientists must work hand in hand. We must devise a new method of continuous cooperation between the physical scientists and the social scientists in all our research centers. The social scientists must be kept informed of what the physical scientists are up to, not after the physical scientists have completed their researches and worked social and economic havor with their results, but from the very beginning of the researches. If the chemists or physicists are on the trail of a new idea in 1934 that may prove workable in 1954, the social scientists should know it in 1934, not in 1954. And, through all the 20 years between 1934 and 1954, the social scientists should be considering ways and and 1954, the social scientists should be considering ways and means of making this new idea help instead of hamstringing humanity if and when it becomes workable. If we can invent such a method of sustained cooperation, we can shorten, by at least a decade, the lag between the swiftly changing processes and the slowly changing policies of our national life.

There are, in my judgment, the two major lines along which the universities and research institutes can best help us to take full advantage of this economy of science, technology, and plenty instead of running away from it and taking a coward's refuge in a policy of repressing, restricting, and reducing our maximum in a policy of repressing, restricting, and reducing our maximum productive capacity.

The machine has not betrayed us. We have betrayed the mawhich we may emancipate the race from poverty, drudgery, and insecurity. If we now prove incapable of using these means to the full, the verdict of history upon us will be that we were a people strangled by our own success.

Mr. FESS. To cooperate with the Senate in getting through with its work, I simply wanted to make sure that some note of optimism might be sounded in this era of so ·much pessimism. While the immediate future, judged by the condition of the world, is not particularly rosy, I cannot believe that there is not still a great opportunity for the world to advance, and especially for the United States.

This kind of legislation is along the line of response to an emergency. It may be justified, but I am desperately afraid of where it is going to lead.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley] a question. I notice that on page 20, lines 20 and 21, there is the following clause regarding the powers of national mortgage associations:

To sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any court of law or equity, State or Federal.

I wondered what was the reason for using the words "State or Federal." We have systems of jurisprudence with the jurisdiction defined in both the State and the Federal courts, and litigants have a right to go into either of those courts as the facts may justify. I was a little afraid that that language might be confusing, and I was wondering if it would not be better if we should strike out "State or Federal", unless there is some reason for including those words.

Mr. BULKLEY. As I understand, this part of the bill is merely prescribing the corporate capacity, and not conferring a right to go into a Federal court where it would not otherwise exist. I believe this is the language usually used in setting up corporations.

Mr. LOGAN. So far as I know, when we give a corporation the authority to sue and be sued, it is not necessary to state in what court it may sue. It would have the right to go to the Federal court if the facts justified it, or to the State court; but are we not conferring upon these corporations the right to go into the Federal courts although the matter may be purely a State matter?

Mr. BULKLEY. It was not so intended; and I believe the language to which the Senator refers is very usual in setting up corporations of this character.

Mr. LOGAN. It may be that it is usual, but I am afraid it would be confusing. Some one will claim that the bill gives the right to go into the Federal court when otherwise there would be no right to go into the Federal court for the purpose of litigating tax matters or other matters that might arise. On a purely State matter, where the State courts have jurisdiction, they ought to go there, and where the Federal courts have jurisdiction they ought to go there: but I am afraid this language gives jurisdiction to go into the Federal courts in all matters.

Mr. BULKLEY. My attention is called to the act setting up the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which contains the same provision referring specifically to State or Federal courts. I do not think it has been interpreted as a specific right to get Federal jurisdiction. It is intended merely as a designation of corporate capacity.

Mr. LOGAN. That the association may go into the Federal courts if the facts justify it, or it may go into the State courts if the facts justify it?

Mr. BULKLEY. Exactly. Mr. LOGAN. If the language means that, it is unobjec-

Mr. BULKLEY. That is what it is intended to mean. Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I now move that title III, providing for national mortgage associations, be stricken from the bill. On that motion I desire to be heard briefly.

There are a number of Senators who desire an opportunity to express themselves with respect to this title. I am one of those who felt that the title ought not to be included in the bill. I now briefly state the reasons why we feel that it should be eliminated.

The purpose of the title, as explained by its sponsors, is to provide credit facilities in those areas in which there has been a partial or complete break-down in credit of this type: the thought being that if national associations are provided with $5,000,000 capital, those associations will be able to operate Nation-wide, and to supply credit in those areas in which it is presently lacking.

I suggest, with respect to that proposition, that this title is unnecessary in view of the other provisions of the bill, particularly in view of those provisions of the bill which provide insurance of mortgages in title II, and in view of other provisions of the bill which in many ways will liberalize credit, and provide credit where no credit now exists.

It is obvious to those who give the matter only a moment's consideration that the insurance of mortgages will make the mortgage companies more willing to transact business, and place them in better position to provide the facilities that we want to have provided to those who are desirous of borrowing especially upon homes.

Because the title is unnecessary, I have moved that it be stricken. There is no occasion to include in the bill any unnecessary provision, especially where there is objection to the provision, and where, as is true here, there are many who feel that the provision may be hurtful.

The history of national mortgage associations is a history of failure. So far as I know, and so far as the committee was advised, there is no substantial success anywhere in the United States in the history of national mortgage associations.

More than that, these associations, as provided in title III, parallel very closely the joint-stock land banks. Senators will remember that Congress set up two systems, the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks, and that although the joint-stock land banks filled a need in places in the country and to some degree operated successfully, on the whole they were a failure and a disappointment to those who had expected the most from them.

They are privately owned institutions. Their capital is subscribed by investors. They are set up to perform a Nationwide service. In this regard they come into conflict with the Federal home-loan institutions, just as the joint-stock land banks came into conflict with the Federal land bank, and I prophesy with much the same result to both institutions.

Not only do they parallel the theory of the joint-stock land banks, but they bring into the situation other complications which we might well avoid. Undoubtedly they increase very greatly the administrative problems of the ad-

Earlier in the day we made a rather feeble effort to correct what some of us regard as a weakness in this bill by providing for an ex-officio board instead of an administrator. The Senate, in its wisdom, adhered to the plan of a single administrator. Now, we are discussing title III, and it is fair to consider what the relations of the administrator may be to this title. If Senators will take just a moment, and not accept this title upon faith, they will see that it will bring the administrator, already overburdened and overworked and already confronted with very numerous and heavy responsibilities under the bill, additional responsibilities, which will be very irksome to him.

Let me call attention, for illustration, to one or two things, so that I may pass on rapidly.

In the first place, it will be found on page 20 of the bill that these institutions are authorized to conduct business in any State of the United States-in other words, in every State of the United States. The mortgage association, without restraint from the administrator, and on its own account, will determine whether or not it shall operate Nationwide; and if it decides to operate Nation-wide it is bound to run into some difficulties and meet losses.

On page 23 we find provision for the management of acquired properties, and we find further provision for the examination and liquidation of the associations. In the matter of the management of the acquired properties and in the other matter to which I have alluded, these associations are to operate under rules and regulations to be provided by the administrator.

Just think of Nation-wide institutions acquiring property in every State in the Union, and conceivably in every county in every State in the Union, and attempting to administer that property, all under the supervision of one administrator here at the National Capital. And consider, if we can, whether there is any chance that the institutions can be successful, or that the administration can be saved from great embarrassment and great labor in connection with the work of these institutions. They may manage the property they acquire; they may rent it, and renovate it, and modernize it, and sell it, and do all the things necessary in order to relieve themselves from the property which has come into their hands; and in the whole plan they are to be under the supervision and proceed under the rules and regulations of the administrator.

So, too, with respect to the examination. We are going to require the administrator, or some one acting for him, to make periodic examinations or other examinations of these institutions to have the power to continue them, to supervise them, to terminate them, and in various other ways to determine whether the institutions shall live or

So, Mr. President, we have here institutions that will bring to the administrator very considerable new duties; institutions that are not necessary, because in other portions of the bill we are proposing to insure mortgages, and credit will be established without these national institutions; these institutions may compete with established private institutions to the very great injury of those private institutions, that undoubtedly will compete in a general way with the Federal home-loan banks. It is true that the home-loan banks are banks of discount, and it is true that it is provided here that these institutions are not banks of discount; but they may buy and sell mortgages, and the fact

These institutions are like the joint-stock land banks. | remains that if they become a great factor in the business of the country and succeed in the enterprise of buying and selling mortgages on a large scale they will to that extent take the discount business away from the Federal home-loan

> Mr. President, there is not a public interest to be served by these institutions. They may injure the Federal homeloan banks and the private institutions. Nobody will gain; all may lose. We feel that the title ought to be stricken from the bill. In conclusion, I wish to say just one further word. The House committee very carefully considered this matter. They held hearings for many days upon it. They brought before them the witnesses best informed and best qualified to speak, and they reached what I term an informed opinion with respect to it, and that informed opinion was against the inclusion of this title in the bill. I think the papers stated that, by a vote of 16 to 4, they voted the title out of the bill. The House of Representatives, without the information and the detailed knowledge possessed by the committee, in its wisdom voted the title into the bill.

> This title was considered by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. The Senate subcommittee at one time favored the elimination of the title, and when the matter was considered in the whole committee, the majority of those present who heard the discussion and considered the matter favored the elimination of the title, and it was retained by the casting of votes by proxy of Senators who had not heard the discussion, and who did not know the implications involved in this part of the legislation. So I say that informed opinion in the committees of both Houses is against this title, and uninformed opinion is for it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is neither fair nor accurate to say that proxies were voted in favor of this amendment by Senators who knew nothing about it.

Mr. STEIWER. I did not say that. Mr. BARKLEY. Proxies were voted of Senators who were otherwise engaged in other committees and in conferences. Mr. STEIWER. That is true. Mr. BARKLEY. But who did know what they were voting

Mr. STEIWER. I repeat, Mr. President, that Senators who were not present and who had not heard the discussion. and did not have the benefit of the discussion, permitted their votes to be cast by other Senators who were present. I know the Senator upon reflection will not contradict this statement. And I repeat that of those who were present and who did hear the discussion a majority was in favor of the exclusion of this title. That is the fact of the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say that on that particular day a majority of those who were probably not enthusiastic about the legislation at all—I would not say that as to all of them voted to eliminate this title, and, on the contrary, absentees were voted by proxy who had not been present and had not heard the discussions in favor of eliminating the title, and we had more proxies in favor of keeping it in than the Senator had in favor of striking it out.

Mr. STEIWER. The Senator from Kentucky had an abundant number of proxies, all of which were employed to retain this title. As I remember, there were no proxies to strike this title.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes; there were.

Mr. STEIWER. I recall none and believe the Senator cannot name them. I do not complain if the Senator from Kentucky voted proxies; I have no objection to the Senator casting the votes of absentee Senators, but I say again that those who heard the discussion were in favor of striking the title out, just as the House committee favored striking

Mr. BARKLEY. In the House of Representatives the title was restored by a vote of 147 to 90.

Mr. STEIWER. By the votes of those who had not heard the discussion before the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. They heard it on the floor of the House.

Mr. STEIWER. But not the full discussion before the committee. By the same procedure the title may be retained here also by those who have not had opportunity, in the very great hurry of the closing days of the session, to read the report of the hearings, and to know what is thought on this subject by those best qualified to deal with it. I regret that the majority, only partially informed, seems determined to retain this title against the judgment of those who have given it full and careful consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to take but a moment's time to discuss this amendment. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] has moved to strike out title III of this bill, which is the title which sets up the national mortgage associations. These national mortgage associations are purely private corporations set up under this bill for the purpose of rediscounting mortgages that are made upon properties by approved lending agencies as described in this bill. There was some opposition expressed early during the consideration of this bill after it was introduced, based upon the fear that these mortgage associations were going to set up institutions for lending money in the localities where other lending organizations already existed. There never was any such intention originally; but the language of the bill now has been so framed as to make it absolutely certain that they are set up purely and simply for the purpose of rediscounting mortgages which are made by building-and-loan associations and other approved lending agencies in the communities where they operate.

The Government of the United States is not involved in the stock of these corporations at all. They are purely private corporations. Their minimum stock is $5,000,000. There may be as much more as may be put into the institutions by those who are willing to put their money into

In my judgment, this is one of the important, integral parts of this bill? It is true, as the Senator from Oregon said, that the committee in the House struck out this section, but on a vote on the floor of the House the Membership restored it by a vote of 147 to 90.

I have authority to say that all those who are interested in this measure and those who have had a hand in its framing, and those who are sponsoring it and are insisting upon its enactment at this time, desire the retention of title III in this bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield. Mr. TYDINGS. Is this the section against which the building associations originally protested?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes, it is.

Mr. TYDINGS. And has it been modified?

Mr. BARKLEY. It has been modified. I would not be authorized to say that all of them are satisfied with it, but substantially a majority are now satisfied with this provision, because they have been convinced that the organization is not set up for the purpose of going into their communities and setting up a lending agency on the other side of the street from where they themselves are operating.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator another question?
Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.
Mr. TYDINGS. I take it from the Senator's reply that most of the objections, either imaginary or real, to which they originally adhered, have been eliminated in the rewriting of this title?

Mr. BARKLEY. The language has now been so clarified as to leave no doubt that the fears which they entertained originally are not now well grounded, if they were at that time. In my judgment, the setting up of mortgage loan associations as sort of real estate Federal Reserve banks in the districts in which they operate will afford to building-and-loan associations and all other lending agencies upon homes a market for their mortgages and a facility for the use of their credit, which will enable them to lend more money than they could without them. Certainly there ought not to be any objection to the provision for the organization of these associations by the investment of private capital in them for the purposes indicated in the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. Am I correct in understanding the Senator to say that the provision in the bill is so phrased that the national mortgage associations will not be able to make any direct loans to borrowers?

Mr. BARKLEY. They will not. They deal only in mortgages which are already made, and they are guaranteed mortgages. They are mortgages which have been placed upon property by approved lending agencies. They make no direct loans.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I take it from the Senator's remarks that, instead of running in opposition to the building associations the new organizations, not being those of originallending qualifications, will be adjunct and a help to the building-and-loan association? Is that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. They will operate in relation to the building-and-loan associations just the same as the Federal Reserve banks operate in relation to member banks.

Mr. STEIWER. The Federal Reserve banks normally rediscount. The Senator does not understand that these associations are rediscounting agencies?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not technically rediscounting agencies, but building-and-loan associations and others may take their mortgages to these associations and hypothecate them and obtain additional funds, which they may take back into their communities and loan on additional properties, and, in turn, they may take those mortgages to their associations and secure additional funds. I think it will be a distinct help to all the lending agencies.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be incorporated in the proceedings at this point a telegram relating to the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is

The telegram is as follows:

THOMPSONVILLE, CONN., June 14, 1934.

THOMPSONVILLE, CONN., June 14, 1934.

Senator Augustine Lonergan,

Washington, D.C.:

We respectfully ask your earnest opposition to the national mortgage association section in housing bill now under consideration in Senate and your support of the Banking and Currency Committee plans. National mortgage associations create an unfair and unsound competition with all existing thrift and home-financing institutions and would lend themselves to large-scale speculative building. Every recorded experience in connection with Nation-wide loaning proves its unsoundness and has culminated in financial disaster. National building-and-loan asociations of the eighties and nineties were an outstanding example of the unsoundness of national mortgage operation. Perhaps you know of the failure of national building-and-loan association in Hartford about 30 years ago. National mortgage associations would seriously interfere with success of Federal savings-and-loan associations now in promotion by the Government. The facilities of the Home Loan Bank System and Government cooperation and assistance provided for otherwise in the housing bill are ample, safer, and sounder for carrying out the President's program of home modernization and home building.

home modernization and home building.

Walter P. Schwabe,

President Connecticut Building and Loan League.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIMER].

Mr. McNARY. On that question I ask for the yeas and navs.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). Transferring my general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] to the Senator from New York [Mr. Copeland], I vote "nay."

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo]. Not knowing how he would vote, I refrain from voting. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the pair of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes]. Were they present, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes] would vote "yea", and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys] would vote "nay."

I desire also to announce a special pair on this question between the Senator from Florida [Mr Trammell] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette].

I regret to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I desire further to announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

Mr. BULKLEY (after having voted in the negative). Mr. President, I am advised that the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Carey], with whom I have a general pair, is necessarily absent. I transfer the pair to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Smith] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 53, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills and joint resolutions of the Senate:

S. 504. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make a long-term contract for the supply of water to the United States naval station at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba;

S. 555. An act to authorize the acquisition by the United States of the land upon which the Seneca Indian School, Wyandotte, Okla., is located:

S. 3151. An act to convey to the King Hill Irrigation District, State of Idaho, all the interest of the United States in the King Hill Federal Reclamation Project, and for other purposes;

S. 3541. An act to authorize production credit associations to make loans to oyster planters;

S. 3545. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich.;

S. 3618. An act to grant a portion of the Fort Douglas Military Reservation to the University of Utah, Salt Lake City. Utah:

S. 3655. An act to amend the act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1906, as amended:

S. 3696. An act authorizing the President to make rules and regulations in respect to alcoholic beverages in the Canal Zone, and for other purposes;

S. 3779. An act to amend section 4 of "an act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto", approved June 7, 1934;

S.J.Res. 106. Joint resolution authorizing loans to fruit growers for rehabilitation of orchards during the year 1934; and

S.J.Res. 138. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 169, 73d Cong.), approved April 21,1934.

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1508. An act providing for the final enrollment of the Indians of the Klamath Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon;

S. 3096. An act for the relief of John T. Garity;

S. 3446. An act to authorize the Postmaster General to receive, operate, and to maintain for official purposes, motor vehicles seized for violations of the customs laws;

S. 3765. An act to enable the Postmaster General to withhold commissions on false returns made by postmasters;

S. 3766. An act to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Postmaster General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for loss by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty", approved March 17, 1882, as amended;

H.R. 2414. An act for the relief of Frank Salisbury, executor of the estate of Emerson C. Salisbury, deceased;

H.R. 2418. An act for the relief of certain claimants at Leavenworth, Kans., occasioned through damage to property inflicted by escaping prisoners;

H.R. 5736. An act for the relief of Shelby J. Beene, Mrs. Shelby J. Beene, Leroy T. Waller, and Mrs. Leroy T. Waller;

H.R. 7212. An act to remove the limitation upon the extension of star routes:

H.R. 7301. An act to authorize the Postmaster General to charge an additional fee for effecting delivery of domestic registered, insured, or collect-on-delivery mail, the delivery of which is restricted to the addressee only, or to the addressee or order;

H.R. 2669. An act for the relief of Paul I. Morris;

H.R. 4253. An act for the relief of Laura Goldwater;

H.R. 8919. An act to adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers, and for other purposes;

H.R. 9904. An act to amend section 5 of Public Act No. 2 of the Seventy-second Congress, as amended;

H.R. 9618. An act authorizing the Sistersville Bridge Board of Trustees to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at Sistersville, Tyler County, W.Va.;

H.J.Res. 370. Joint resolution to protect the revenue by regulation of the traffic in containers of distilled spirits; and

H.J.Res. 373. Joint resolution to protect the revenue by requiring information concerning the disposition of substances used in the manufacture of distilled spirits.

IMPROVEMENT IN HOUSING STANDARDS AND CONDITIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3794) to encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions, to provide a system of mutual mortgage insurance, and for other purposes.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I offer a further amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 47, between lines 15 and 16, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 507. The act entitled "An act relating to contracts and agreements under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved January 25, 1934", is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: The Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, and the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended.

Mr. BULKLEY. The effect of this amendment is to permit Members of Congress to deal the same as other citizens with the Farm Loan Administration and the Home Loan Administration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, with respect to that portion of the bill which is under consideration, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD three telegrams.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRATTLEBORO, VT., June 15, 1934.

Senator E. W. GIBSON,

Washington, D.C.:
Please oppose that section of the National Housing Act now before Congress which provides for national mortgage associations; if that section becomes law it will be a direct blow to our business. We have plenty of money to loan on good security. We trust you can protect us.

BRATTLEBORO COOP. SAVINGS & LOAN ASSOCIATION, CARL S. HOPKINS, Secretary.

BURLINGTON, VT., June 15, 1934.

Hon. E. W. Gibson,

Senate Office Building:

The directors of the Chittenden County Trust Co., at a meeting today, instructed me to convey to you and Senator Austrin our protest against the provisions under title 2 in Senate bill 3602, 1 HARRIE V. HALL, Treasurer.

BURLINGTON, VT., June 14, 1934.

Senate Office Building:
We reiterate our strong objection to the provision of title II to Senate bill 3603. Our section does not need and would not, in our opinion, be benefited through the formation of national mortgage associations; the history of the guarantee mortgage associations whose guaranteed securities have been sold quite largely in Vermont has been one of loss to our citizens; these corporations are largely now in default and in bad repute; the history of national building-and-loan associations is also unfortunate and discreditable. We don't want the proposed national mortgage associations taking away from our State the funds that can be used advantageously at home; our State banks, our national banks, our building-and-loan associations nearly all have funds to loan on good real-estate security. Home owners in distress are getting relief through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. With the credit facilities of the home-loan bank the Burlington Building and Loan Association can loan a quarter to half a million dollars, Brattleboro one or two hundred thousand, St. Albans seventy-five thousand, the Barre Association has funds as is the case with practically all our other associations. New construction of homes practically all our other associations. New construction of homes, repairs, and alterations are being, in our opinion, suitably taken care of by our lending institutions and by private lenders; this situation would be disturbed through the promotion of national mortgage associations.

R. A. COOKE,
President Vermont League Cooperative Savings and Loan Association.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if there are no more amendments to be offered to the bill, I move that House bill 9620 be substituted for Senate bill 3794 and that the House bill be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and lays before the Senate the House bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 9620) to improve Nation-wide housing standards, provide employment, and stimulate industry; to improve conditions with respect to home-mortgage financing, to prevent speculative excesses in new-mortgage investment, and to eliminate the necessity for costly second-mortgage financing, by creating a system of mutual mortgage insurance and by making provision for the organization of additional institutions to handle home financing; to promote thrift and protect savings; to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act; to amend the Federal Reserve Act; and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I now move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the Senate bill as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio with respect to the provision in the bill that building-and-loan associations may not conduct business in an area more than 50 miles from their location.

Mr. BULKLEY. An amendment was agreed to to make the distance a hundred miles.

Mr. CONNALLY. What did the committee do with respect to this aspect of the matter, permitting existing companies to do business in the area where they now operate but forbidding them to extend their operations any further?

Mr. BULKLEY. Nothing more was done along that line; but I may say to the Senator from Texas that the House bill does not contain any limitation at all, and, therefore, the whole subject will be open in conference.

Mr. CONNALLY. The object of my inquiry was to ascertain from the Senator whether or not that question will be considered in conference and whether or not the conferees will give attention to it?

Mr. BULKLEY. I cannot promise what the conferees will do, but it will be open in conference.

Mr. CONNALLY. It will be open in conference and the matter will have an opportunity to be adjusted in confer-

Mr. BULKLEY. Undoubtedly. Mr. CONNALLY. It had been my purpose to submit an amendment along that line, but since it is already in the bill and will go to conference, and with the assurance of the conferees that the matter will be considered there, I will not detain the Senate any longer with reference to it at this

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 47, after line 15, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. — Paragraph "Seventh" of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 24; Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 24), is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end of the second sentence thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the purchase and holding by any association for its own account of the investment securities of any corporation within the limitations herein prescribed, and such purchase and holding within such limitations at the same time of the investment securities of any corporation. vestment securities of any corporation affiliated with such corporation, whether or not the investment securities of such affiliated corporation are guaranteed by the parent corporation or are by their terms or as a matter of law the obligations of the parent corporation or any other affiliated corporation thereof."

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the chairman of the committee accept that amendment? I will say it is the amendment of which I spoke in the committee, and I thought it would be adopted by the committee. I also spoke to the Comptroller about it. It would simply allow banks and investment companies to invest 10 percent of their capital in certain securities. For instance, it would allow a bank to invest 10 percent of its capital and surplus and undivided profits in the bonds of the New York Central, and would also allow them to invest in the bonds of the Lake Shore Railroad, which is a subsidiary of the New York Central. The consolidation of railroads all over the United States makes it very difficult for banks and trust companies to secure enough investments which are sound with the present limitation of 10 percent of the entire property. The amendment simply allows them to invest 10 percent in a subsidiary.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am sorry the Senator did not present the amendment when the Senate bill was before the Senate, but it is perfectly apparent that the amendment has no bearing whatever on the bill under consideration; it is not relevant to it at all. I suggest to the Senator that he offer this amendment when we take up what is known as the "Bulkley bill", which we will do shortly. It belongs more properly to that bill than to this.

Mr. KEAN. Very well; I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The ameridment is withdrawn. If there are no further amendments, the question is, Shall the amendment be engressed and the bill read a third

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I am not advised how he would vote were he present. If I were permitted to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). Announcing my general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] and its transfer to the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to announce the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. McAnoo], occasioned by illness.

I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. I am advised that if present these Senators would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrn] is detained in an important conference.

Mr. WALCOTT. I have a pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McApoo]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea", and I am therefore at liberty to vote, as I desire to vote the same way. I vote " yea."

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes] has a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys]. If present the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] would vote "nay" and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN Nuys] would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (after having voted in the affirmative). I note the absence of my general pair, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], but will allow my vote to stand, as I am advised that if present he would vote as I have voted.

The result was announced—yeas 71, nays 12, as follows:

So, the bill passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions, to provide a system of mutual mortgage insurance, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate bill (S. 3794) will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. Bulkley, Mr. Barkley, Mr. Wagner, Mr. Townsend, and Mr. Steiwer conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a statement of the objectives of the national housing bill which has just been passed.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PROPOSED NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

A problem of distress, sociological and economic, can be solved for the general welfare of the people of the country by enactment by this Congress of adequate housing legislation as suggested by the administration.

The proposed act has several broad objectives,

It seeks to repair and make livable existing homes. It seeks to provide new homes at a cost and under conditions within easy reach of all.

It seeks to protect the invested savings of all home owners and to guarantee them a place to live.

It seeks to put billions of dollars of idle capital to work in a major industry which still is badly depressed.

It seeks to return millions of unemployed to work in the building industry.

It seeks to promote long-term financing of home mortgages.
Such mortgages will not require renewal during depression periods and therefore will not become a frozen commodity subject to the fear of investors.

HOW ARE THESE OBJECTIVES TO BE REALIZED? By four distinct activities, namely:

Stimulation of renovizing and modernizing campaigns in every community where accredited financial lending institutions, of all types, will cooperate with building and building-supplies contractors in offering home owners the privilege of paying for needed improvements on the installment plan.

II

Stimulation of additional home construction on a broad scale, by (a) encouraging and facilitating the flow back into the mortby (a) encouraging and racintating the now back into the inorgage market of private capital, available in ample quantity but laboring under a fear complex so far as the old-fashioned short-term mortgage is concerned; and (b) removing the traditional fear complex of the prospective home owner, just now exceptionally acute, that he will not be able to meet the mortgage when due.

TIT

Provision of relief from the nightmare of foreclosure for 14,000, 000 home-owning families through refunding their present short-term mortgages over a longer period with easier payment facilities. Direct protection against the mortgage-loan shark.

IV

Affording mental and financial relief to 10,000,000 investors in building-and-loan associations through Federal cooperation in assuring them against losses through a cooperative insurance plan backed by the Government.

WHY ARE THESE ACTIVITIES DESIRABLE AND NECESSARY?

General considerations

(1) Stimulation of capital-goods industries, seen by many as the chief drag on industrial recovery and unemployment. It is estimated that 5,000,000 wage earners will be directly and indirectly benefited. National unemployment at this time is estimated at about 9,500,000.

at about 9,500,000.

According to figures compiled by the F. W. Dodge Corporation, covering returns from 27 States east of the Rocky Mountains, building contracts for all types of construction declined from a 5-year average for 1925-29 of $6,340,700,000 to only $1,255,700,000 in 1933, while residential construction dropped off even more drastically than other types, or from a 5-year average of $2,539,200,000 for 1925-29 to barely $249,300,000 in 1933.

In other words, there has been wiped out and we must find means to restore over 80 percent of the total construction market and more than 90 percent of our normal business of home building.

and more than 90 percent of our normal business of nome building.

(2) Social betterments involved are better living standards through home improvements, including slum clearance, making possible increased home ownership among our people, and relief possible increased home ownership among our people, and relier to the home owner from the perils of short-term financing and the crushing fear of ruin through foreclosure.

(3) Federal relief already extended to home owners through the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was designed to meet critical individual situations where foreclosure was imminent through defects in our past methods of short-term mortgage financing. This act proposes to remedy the basic conditions which created such disasters. created such disasters.

RENOVIZING AND MODERNIZING

All admit the existence of a vast market for labor and building supplies. Home owners exist in abundance who could afford to have such work done if they could pay for it on the installment plan who are unable or unwilling to reduce their cash reserves by making immediate large cash expenditures.

This bill encourages and assists local banks and other lending institutions to make "character loans" on the installment-payment plan, so that labor and material people get their money at once, while the home owner can spread his payments over a convenient period and in comfortable amounts to be paid from his earnings.

The Government does not propose nor does it want to include in campaigns to induce home owners to participate. Local contractors and supply houses, cooperating with their local financial institutions, chambers of commerce, etc., will see to that. Private agencies in general do not now furnish any such facilities. Insurance against loss up to 20 percent of total loans made will furnish a margin of security more important in its Newhological effect on investors than the Government's actual psychological effect on investors than the Government's actual financial commitment.

Definite assurance has been given to the administration by com-

Definite assurance has been given to the administration by competent experts, business men, and bankers before this housing act was drawn up that it would be effective in stimulating the whole-hearted cooperation of private capital as needed.

Protection against loss: Loans are limited to $2,000 per home owner, the exact amount being proportioned to the work to be done and the total value of the property. Eligible to obtain these loans will be only those home owners who are of proven character and capacity to pay. Experience of installment-sales organizations and private business show that losses through default of installment-purchase contracts by customers of all types average only a small percentage of the total volume of business transacted. Since private agencies furnish the entire capital loaned and are finally obligated for 80 percent of any losses which may be incurred, it is obvious that they are not going to be lax in granting credit merely because the Government is insuring onehabitation of his family there is the concrete consideration that such repairs offset depreciation on his property which otherwise would diminish its value by a far greater sum than the cost of these repairs.

These home-improvement operations represent a valuable and immediately available first step, which may be likened to the priming of the pump of our national housing program.

MORTGAGE INSURANCE

The short-term mortgage evil

The greatest millstone around the neck of the American home The greatest millstone around the neck of the American home owner of moderate means has been the short-term (3- to 5-year) mortgages. During prosperous times mortgage lenders are anxious to keep their money profitably employed and call upon the home owner for interest payments only. During depression periods, however, the same investors become fearful and demand large reductions of principal just at the time when such burdens are most difficult for the home owner to meet. No greater service can be rendered the American home owner than to relieve him from these ruinous demands.

The long term (20-year) mortgages called for by this bill will prevent such ups and downs in financial demands upon the home owner. He will amortize the principal of his mortgage as he goes along with regular payments within his current means. So long as he meets these regular payments he is safe from sudden demands for large sums and ruin through foreclosure. The earnings of people of moderate means will flow into their homes during home peoples of moderate means will flow into their homes during home peoples of moderate means will flow into their homes during home peoples of moderate means will flow into their homes during home peoples of moderate means will flow into their homes during homes according to the contract of t ing boom periods instead of into speculative investments. The indirect effect of this in minimizing the excessive speculation which has caused our people so much loss in the past is in itself of no small importance.

which has caused our people so much loss in the past is in itself of no small importance.

Regulation of companies by State and Federal bodies, audits or inspections by agents of those bodies, and similar proposed programs do not get to the root of the home-mortgage evil. The Housing Act in one stroke will create the instrumentalities and provide the encouragement and security to put home-mortgage financing on a long-term basis within the immediate reach of all who need it. The home owner is the prime beneficiary of this bill. However, the proposed mortgage insurance associations offer investors assurance of sound investments in long-term mortgages, guaranteed against loss through the cooperative features of the plan. Expert opinion and evidence is available to justify the belief that these facilities will bring out of hiding to revivify the entire mortgage money market tremendous quantities of capital which are not now likely to become active unless some such governmental cooperation and insurance against loss as contemplated in this bill is made available.

Ample protection against loading up the Government with worthless mortgages or making fantastic loans is afforded by the fact that the lending agencies, in cases of defaulted mortgages bearing 5 percent, can obtain only a debenture bond payable 3 years after due date of the mortgage and bearing interest of only 3 percent. Thus it would be poor business for these companies to accept questionable mortgages.

Even though obligated by the debenture bond issued in cases of such defaults it is important to remember that the Government of such defaults it is important to remember that the Government and the properties of the government of such defaults it is important to remember that the Government of the contract of the government of the g

Even though obligated by the debenture bond issued in cases of such defaults it is important to remember that the Government is not giving away something for nothing. It takes title to actual property of a much greater value than the bond it issues, and has ample time to dispose of the property for cash before the bond matures.

Finally, the Government will receive regular insurance premiums from the private agencies insuring their mortgages in this manner. These premiums not only will absorb any net losses on defaulted mortgages, but also will cover the entire cost of Government administration of this activity.

A simple explanation of the mortgage-insurance plan follows:

Percent interest Home owner pays approximately_____ Insurance fund retains the difference of ____

It has been determined by actuaries that this 1-percent margin will provide for all expenses and losses. When the amount accumulated in this fund equals the unpaid balances of the outstanding insured mortgages, the fund is applied for the benefit of the home owner by paying off the mortgage balances before maturity.

LOANS FOR NEW CONSTRUCTION

With money for mortgages once more available through the facilities and impetus of the Housing Act and because of the attractive features of reasonable mortgage money over a 20-year amortization period without periodic bonuses and fees for renewals also provided for the home owner, there is no reason why thousands of American families who do not now own their homes should not begin building.

At the end of 1933, according to provide a structure of the structure

At the end of 1933, according to various estimates, the cumulative deficit in the normal rate of construction amounted to something between 500,000 and 800,000 homes, the construction of which would involve an expenditure of some two and a half to four billion dollars.

Will the national mortgage associations to be established under this bill compete with local lending institutions? No.

They will supplement the local institutions and make the mortgage market more liquid.

granting credit merely because the Government is insuring onefifth of their transactions.

Are such loans basically sound? Yes. Besides the human and social satisfactions provided for the householder in improving the They will issue bonds which will be readily marketable and quoted on the security exchanges and use the proceeds to purchase insured mortgages from local mortgage-lending institutions. By this means the local communities will have adequate capital available for the financing of homes without burdening the local institutions with nonliquid investments

This flexibility of home-mortgage financing is an essential part of the housing program.

Is a $5,000,000 capital sufficient to permit effective national operations by these mortgage associations? Perhaps not. But the bill provides a minimum of $5,000,000. It does not prevent additional capitalization as required.

REFINANCE OF EXISTING MORTGAGES

Only mortgages of approved character will be eligible. Government insurance is limited to 60 percent of the appraised relie of the property.

Federal finance is limited to setting up the Insurance Corporation inasmuch as private capital is exclusively employed for insurance and the corporations must set up reserves to cover total estimated risk.

Can private agencies meet this situation without Government assistance? It is a simple and incontrovertible fact that they are not now doing so.

Why have past attempts by private title and mortgage companies to meet the needs of the home owners failed?

The mortgages were all of the short-term variety. Title and mortgage companies were entirely dependent upon the availability of funds from private lenders to finance renewals. Investors began withdrawing funds from the real estate mortgage ability of funds from private lenders to finance renewals. Investors began withdrawing funds from the real estate mortgage market in 1929. Title and mortgage companies in New York met the renewal needs of mortgages coming due during 1929, 1930, 1931, and part of 1932. By that time the usual sources of money supply entirely failed. It was necessary during March 1933 for the superintendent of insurance to take charge of the situation with rules and regulations which in effect provided relief through a partial moratorium.

The investors who thus withdrew their support were in a large part savings banks, insurance companies, and other institutions with large sums to invest. When they withdrew the mortgage market collapsed. Until they return it will remain collapsed.

The major problem is to give assurance to these large investors that they may safely come back into the market. They have indicated that they will do so if given the protection and have indicated that they will do so it given the protection and facilities afforded by this bill.

Had long-term mortgages been in effect during 1930-33 sudden withdrawals of huge investment funds would not have occurred because the mortgages employing these funds would not have fallen due. One of the major economic shocks of the depression period thus might have been averted. The Housing Act provides assurance against a recurrence of this particular according disaster. economic disaster.

BUILDING-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATIONS

Membership in building-and-loan associations after increasing from slightly more than 5,000,000 in 1920 to 12,336,754 in 1930, declined abruptly to 10,102,258 in 1932. Something must be done to stabilize this situation and the housing act seeks to guarantee the thrift savings invested in building-and-loan associations along the lines of the bank-deposit guarantee.

This insurance is made self-sustaining by regular insurance premiums paid to the Government by the participating building-and-loan associations until a reserve equal to 5 percent of total obligations has been built up. Careful check of past experience shows that 5 percent is an entirely adequate margin to cover all losses in this type of business.

WHAT GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATIONS ARE TO BE SET UP, AND HOW MULT

WHAT GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATIONS ARE TO BE SET UP, AND HOW WILL THEY FUNCTION?

THEY FUNCTION?

Under the suggested plan a Federal housing administrator would have general supervision of a mortage-insurance agency and a bureau which would direct and provide insurance for a Nation-wide home-modernization movement. Each agency would have its own director and a small Washington staff of directing and advisory officials of known experience in their respective fields. As far as possible the facilities of existing Government agencies and present personnel would be used for the general work.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board would absorb in its present organization, with a modest additional personnel increment, the building-and-loan association insurance feature. Local homeloan bank agencies, already constituted, will furnish the contact points with the Federal Government for organizing the proper performance of all building-and-loan associations.

Field inspectors, investigations, and reports, where necessary, would be provided by local branches of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the coordinating guidance of the 48 State directors of the National mortgage associations will be Federally chartered, as National Emergency Council.

National mortgage associations will be Federally chartered, as provided in the act, and their operations will be distributed over the country so as to provide a national network of support for the direct lending activities carried on with home owners by local banking and lending agencies.

Local committees of building and building-supply contractors and manufacturers, civic agencies, labor groups, newspapers, financial interests and others will set up voluntary organizations to provide local home owners with information concerning the new facilities afforded, as well as advice and assistance in making use of them.

Local banks, building-and-loan associations, finance companies, mortgage and trust companies, and other types of real-estate investor will be ready to extend the needed financing to building contractors and home owners under the provisions of the housing

WHERE IS THE MONEY COMING FROM TO PAY FOR THESE ACTIVITIES?

Modernization work will be carried on with the requested appropriation of $200,000,000. All operating expenses, including salaries of Federal personnel, will be defrayed from this fund, as well as any losses—up to 20 percent of total amounts involved—sustained by the cooperating private lending institutions. These funds will be used only to the extent that they stimulate the actual investment of $5 of private money for every $1 of this Federal appropriation. Federal appropriation.

Mortgage insurance: $10,000,000 is set aside for these activities, but in the long run they will be entirely self-sustaining. Initial or organization expenses will be financed from this $10,000,000 fund. Eventually all operating expenses and all losses through defaulted mortgages, if any, will be paid from premium income collected by the Government from the cooperating private institutions.

This accumulated premium fund should eventually exceed the unpaid balance of insured mortgages and such excess would be returned to the Treasury, constituting a net income to the Building-and-loan association insurance: $100,000,000 is set aside for this purpose, but the operations in fact will be self-sustaining as to losses and operating expenses by reason of receipts from premiums in the same way as described above for the national mortgage associations.

SENATORS FROM LOUISIANA

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the matter which I present to the Senate is a matter of privilege, and I trust it will occasion no debate. I may preface a motion which I desire to make by this very brief statement.

On petitions filed by Hon. Edwin S. Broussard and others, a subcommittee of the Special Committee on Investigation of Campaign Expenditures held hearings in New Orleans on October 5 and 6, 1932. Investigators were thereupon sent into the State of Louisiana where they worked for several months. Another investigation was conducted by a subcommittee of the Special Investigation Committee in the city of New Orleans February 3 to 17, 1933. The testimony taken therein is contained in 1131 printed pages.

Following demands for further investigation a subcommittee of the Special Committee on Investigation of Campaign Expenditures began hearings in the city of New Orleans on November 13, 1933, and continued to December 2, 1933. The evidence taken comprises 2,755 printed pages.

A report to the Senate was made, numbered Report 191, and was filed in the Senate under date of January 11, 1934.

Numerous petitions were filed in the Senate attacking the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. After consideration, that committee reported to the Senate that the said petitions were insufficient and, for other reasons, should not have been received.

Pending the report from the Judiciary Committee, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The latter committee, on its first consideration of the petitions presented to it, adopted a resolution in part as follows:

Resolved, That the charges in the several complaints of peti-tions reported to the committee are insufficient to provide any issue or question for the consideration of the committee.

The committee resolved to hear the petitioners and their representatives and the Senators from Louisiana * * * upon all pertinent questions involved in the inquiry.

At a later date amendments were filed to the complaints previously offered by Mrs. Hilda Phelps Hammond and Mrs. R. G. Pleasant, none of which presented new matter, but were more or less restatements and amplification of what had already been said, but on which, nevertheless, the committee held hearings on May 2 and 3, 1934.

At a later date, the 29th day of May 1934, the Committee on Privileges and Elections permitted certain complainants to summon any witnesses they desired to testify to any relevant matters they wished to present against the two Senators. The hearings disclose without alteration what occurred at these hearings.

With the three hearings that have been held by the special committee and the report thereon, the study and report made by the Committee on the Judiciary, and the several hearings conducted by this committee, the Committee on Privileges and Elections is of opinion that nothing has, been presented justifying it in proceeding further, and it so reports to the Senate a conclusion of its proceedings in this matter.

Mr. President, I offer the following motion, and move its adoption:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were re-terred the several petitions and complaints of certain citizens of Louisiana in the matter of the election and qualifications of the Louisiana in the matter of the election and qualifications of the Senators from said State now in office, report they have considered the same and find that no evidence except of a cumulative nature, other than that heretofore presented to a select committee of the Senate has been submitted to it.

Upon a consideration of the charges and the evidence submitted, your committee concludes that no further action in the matter or expense in respect to it is warranted, and recommends that it be discharged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion submitted by the Senator from Georgia. The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9410) providing that permanent appropriations be subject to annual consideration and appropriation by Congress, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 32) authorizing and directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate conditions with respect to the sale and distribution of milk and other dairy products in the United States.

The message further announced that Mr. Secrest was appointed a manager on the part of the House at the conference of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H.R. 8910) to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes, vice Mr. WARREN, resigned.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H.J.Res. 375) to effectuate further the policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H.R. 9145) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Rochester, N.Y., August 14, 15, and 16, 1934, and at the National Convention of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War to be held at Colorado Springs, Colo., during the first week in July 1934, and it was signed by the Vice President.

SETTLEMENT OF LABOR CONTROVERSIES

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 143) to effectuate further the policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 143) to effectuate further the policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The amendments were, in section 1, page 1, line 11, after the word "commerce", to insert "the salaries, compensations, and expenses of the board or boards and necessary employees being paid as provided in section 2 of the National Industrial Recovery Act"; and in section 3, page 3, line 2, after the word "resolution", to insert "with reference to the investigations authorized in section 1"; so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That in order to further effectuate the policy of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and in the exercise of the powers therein and herein conferred, the President is authorized to establish a board or boards authorized and directed to investigate issues, facts, practices, or activities of employers or employees in any controversies arising under section 7a of or employees in any controversies arising under section 7a of said act or which are burdening or obstructing, or threatening to burden or obstruct the free flow of interstate commerce, the salarles, compensations, and expenses of the board or boards and necessary employees being paid as provided in section 2 of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

SEC. 2. Any board so established is hereby empowered, when it shall appear in the public interest, to order and conduct an election by a secret ballot of any of the employees of any employer, to determine by what person or persons or organization they desire to be represented in order to insure the right of employees to organize and to select their representatives for the purpose of to organize and to select their representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining as defined in section 7a of said act and

now incorporated herein.

For the purposes of such election such a board shall have the authority to order the production of such pertinent documents or the appearance of such witnesses to give testimony under oath, as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution. Any order issued by such a board under the authority of this section may, upon application of such board or upon petition of the person or persons to whom such order is directed, be enforced or reviewed, as the case may be, in the same manner, so far as applicable, as is provided in the case of an order of the Federal Trade Commission and the Federal Trade Commission Act.

mission Act.

SEC. 3. Any such board, with the approval of the President, may prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution with reference to the investigations authorized in section 1 and to assure freedom from coercion in respect to all elections.

Sec. 4. Any person who shall knowingly violate any rule or regulation authorized under section 3 of this resolution or impede or interfere with any member or agent of any board established under this resolution in the performance of his duties, shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

Sec. 5. This resolution shall cease to be in effect, and any board or boards established hereunder shall cease to exist, on June 16, 1935, or sooner if the President shall by proclamation, or the Congress shall by joint resolution, declare that the emergency recognized by section 1 of the National Industrial Recovery Act has ended.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, when it became apparent a few days ago that it would be impracticable at this session to consider and dispose of permanent and well-worked-out legislation on the subject of industrial labor disputes, there was prepared and submitted to some Senators a draft of a very brief measure which does not attempt to deal with the subject matter of industrial labor disputes in a comprehensive way, but which does provide for a board or boards with certain very well-defined powers.

The draft to which I have referred was submitted by me to the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], the leader of the minority, and conferences were held. Changes in the original draft were suggested, and finally an agreement was reached between the Senators engaging in the conference. The agreement was incorporated in the joint resolution which is here presented. With the passage of this joint resolution and the disposition of conference reports, including an agreement on the housing bill, which has just passed the Senate, the Congress will be ready for adjournment.

There has never been, in a comparable period during the history of the country, more important legislation enacted and disposed of than during the present session. Unavoidably, there will remain on the calendar some measures of general importance which to act upon now would require a prolongation of the session for an indefinite time. It is thought that the joint resolution which is now the subject before the Senate will provide means and agencies which will be very helpful in the study and adjustment of controversies that may arise between industrial employers and their laborers.

I express the hope that it may be found practicable by the Senate to pass this joint resolution in the same spirit and with comparable promptness to that which marked the favorable action of the House of Representatives on the subject this morning. It is said that the joint resolution passed that body by a unanimous vote.

Permit me to take just a few moments to explain the provisions of the joint resolution, although I think perhaps they are already very well understood.

The joint resolution authorizes the President to appoint a board or boards which are to exercise certain powers. First, the boards are authorized to investigate issues, facts, practices, or activities of employers or employees in any controversies arising under section 7a of the National Industrial Recovery Act which are burdening or obstructing or threatening to burden or obstruct interstate commerce.

The second authority is to order or conduct an election whenever it shall appear to the public interest, the election to be held by a secret ballot, to determine by what person, persons, or organization the employees voting in the election desire to be represented in order to secure their rights to organize, and so forth. This is of vital importance.

For the purposes of the election there is a third power conferred upon the board, namely, to require the presence of witnesses and the production of such documents as may be found necessary to carry out the provisions of the joint resolution.

There is a provision which was inserted, after the joint resolution was first drawn, which secures the right of appeal to the courts in the case of any order which may be made by any board. The proceedings in the appeal or review, as the case may be, are in accordance with those which are pursued under the law governing orders issued by the Federal Trade Commission.

The fourth authority conferred is to make rules and regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of the joint resolution.

An amendment has been incorporated by the Committee on Education and Labor, I think at the instance of the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], which limits the application of the rules and regulations to the orders of the board carrying out the provisions with respect to investigations.

Penalties are attached for violating the joint resolution. Another provision which was inserted after the measure was first drafted is to the effect that all authority under it shall expire June 16, 1935, or sooner if the President, by proclamation, shall proclaim that the emergency recognized by section 1 of the National Industrial Recovery Act has ended.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the able Senator from Arkansas permit a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask how far the procedure which is identified in the pending joint resolution with that provided for the Federal Trade Commission extends; that is, to what orders or actions?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. By the terms of the joint resolution, it is restricted to the orders in connection with the holding of elections, and, by the amendment to which I have referred, the rules and regulations are restricted to the investigations authorized in section 1.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In such cases could the Federal courts take jurisdiction, and, possibly by mandatory injunctions, coupled with the power to punish for contempt, enforce elections, as provided for in the joint resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think that if the board should make an application to a court for the enforcement of an order, for instance, to supply a document or a list of employees, and the application was heard by the court, it could issue a writ directing the production of the document; and that is one of the purposes in mind.

Mr. COSTIGAN. And, in the event of refusal, it might punish for contempt?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It might punish for contempt.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am glad to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I came in while the Senator was speaking, so I did not hear the beginning of his remarks. Has the House passed this joint resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It passed it unanimously.
Mr. NORRIS. Is the Senator now referring to the House joint resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes. I have actually, for parliamentary reasons, taken up the Senate joint resolution, but I ask unanimous consent now to substitute the House joint resolution for the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Has the House joint resolution been messaged to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it has not been messaged to the Senate as yet.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I was informed a few moments ago that the House joint resolution had been sent to the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the Senator from Arkansas is in error about its having been messaged to the Senate. The measure which came over was the amendment to the railway labor act.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. I shall hasten it over, and, with the consent of the Senate, substitute the House joint resolution for the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, is there any difference between the House joint resolution and the Senate joint resolution as the latter was reported by the Committee on Education and Labor? I understand the committee has suggested two amendments, and I was wondering whether the House joint resolution had incorporated those amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not think it has.

Mr. NORRIS. Then will it be the Senator's object to incorporate those amendments?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes, I shall ask to incorporate them in the House joint resolution.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, as the proponent of Senate bill 2926, originally known as the "labor disputes bill", I deem it my duty in these closing days of the session to explain why I believed and still believe that this measure ought to be passed, and why I am nevertheless willing to support the substitute that is backed by the wisdom and judgment of the President of the United States.

A little more than a year ago we set forth upon a new policy of economic reconstruction. Industrial cooperation was given sanction in order to limit the evils of destructive competition. Employees were guaranteed protection in their cooperative efforts in order that they might help the Government to insure a just flow of purchasing power through adequate wages.

At the present time there is controversy as to whether industrial cooperation is a wise policy. There are some who plead for the strict enforcement of the antitrust laws. There are others who argue with equal force that concerted action is made necessary because of technological conditions, and that the real problem is to make such unity serve social interests. But there is no one who denies that industrial cooperation has increased enormously, and that the trade association has blanketed the entire country.

Still less open to question is the proposition that workers also should be allowed to cooperate fully. If impartial students agreed, and Congress recognized, that full freedom of association and self-organization among workers was desirable even when the antitrust laws were a policy. if not an actuality, how much more necessary is this freedom today, when the antitrust laws have been in part suspended? The governmental policy of fixing minimum wages and maximum hours is not a solution. It is merely the foundation upon which can be built the mutual endeavors of a revived industry and a rehabilitated labor. This process of economic self-rule under the code system must fail unless every group is equally well represented. In order that the strong may not take advantage of the weak, every group must be equally strong. Not only is this common sense; it is also in line with the philosophy of checks and balances that colors our political thinking. The Recovery Act did not give employees any rights of organization to which they were not entitled before the act was passed. But the passage of the act has made the protection of these rights imperative.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the principles of | section 7 (a) of the Recovery Act have been flaunted at the very crucial spots where their observance is most essential. This does not inflict injury upon one group alone. It is unjust to employees who have seen what was handed to them as a new charter being treated as a meaningless gesture. It is unfair to the vast majority of employers who are anxious and willing to obey the law and who are faced with the destructive competition of those who seek to gain advantage by disobeying it. It is disastrous to every economic interest because it is a main cause for the reappearance of those very tendencies which brought collapse in 1929, and which will certainly bring it again if they are not checked.

Again we are failing to maintain a balance among production, profits, and wages. At the start of the recovery drive the index of production rose 67 percent between March and July 1933, while the real earnings of workers increased only 9 percent. This inevitably brought a sharp decline, but corrective influences soon became manifest. But the gap reopened this year, and a month ago production was 53 percent above March 1933, while wages were only 28 percent higher. During the past 6 months there has been no appreciable gain in employment, no reduction in hours of work, and no increases in the real wages of the individual worker, although the earnings of 163 large corporations were almost twice as great during the first quarter of 1934 as during the last quarter of 1933. With between nine and ten million people still unemployed, the consequences of this tendency, if not checked, are truly alarming.

In addition, the uncertainty about section 7 (a) has caused flashes of industrial discontent that threaten a minor conflagration. No matter in which direction we look we see the same signs. I do not claim that employees are justified in all of these cases. I do not know whether they are justified even in a majority of them. But I do know that employers, employees, and the general public are entitled to a clearly stated law accompanied by adequate agencies for enforcement.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lewis in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Does the able Senator from New York attribute current disturbances to the absence of such legislation as is planned through the pending resolution?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, that is a difficult question to answer.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In other words, would the pending resolution be helpful if adopted?

Mr. WAGNER. I think it would.

The bill which I introduced, known as the "labor disputes bill", which has had such a stormy career, was not the result of a momentary impulse. Every one of its provisions is addressed to specific evils that have become abundantly manifest during the 10 months' experience of the National Labor Board, an agency which has put more than one and one-half million people back to work on terms mutually satisfactory to employers, employees, and the general public. Every one of its provisions is based upon principles that have received specific and repeated recognition in prior acts of Congress.

Contrary to wide-spread reports, the bill does not compel or even encourage anyone to enter a union. It attempts to make every worker a free man to follow his own inclinations. That is all it does.

Contrary to repeated charges, the bill does not confer upon any one group a single privilege that other groups do not now enjoy, nor would it prohibit any group from seeking its own advancement in ways allowed to any other

I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at the end of my remarks a letter appearing in the New York Times, written by one of the most enlightened and farsighted employers in the country, who served on the National Labor Board, Mr.

Ernest G. Draper, in which he urges the passage of the bill which I introduced and which the Committee on Education and Labor perfected by week after week of painstaking and public-spirited effort.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from New York in nowise being objected to is conceded.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. WAGNER. However, the Congress and the country during the past year have united in passing and applying the most varied and sweeping changes in our economic life that have ever occurred in so short a time. Perhaps it may be a good thing to allow these reforms to encounter an additional period of trial and error, so that the processes of education and understanding may catch up with the social program that has been inaugurated. That is the judgment of the President with regard to the labor-disputes bill, and I am prepared to go along with him. No one is in a better position than he to weigh the program in its entirety, and no one is more determined than he that we are but commencing a new deal that will in proper time be pushed forward to its ultimate conclusions.

But we cannot afford to neglect entirely the industrial problems that must be met at once. The substitute measure which the President has proposed is designed simply to meet the most serious and immediate difficulty. This has been interference with the right of employees to select representatives of their own choosing by means of an election conducted by some board appointed by the President.

The sole purpose of the present joint resolution, as I understand it, is to permit a board or boards established by the President to hold elections of employees in an atmosphere free from the coercion, interference, or restraint that is prohibited by section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act as incorporated in the resolution. This is one of the provisions contained in the bill I introduced. Boards thus empowered would be able to take a great step forward in clarifying the industrial atmosphere and abetting the recovery program.

Let me add that nothing could be more fallacious, in my opinion, than the claim that legislation of this sort is directed against industry. If this criticism could be sustained it would certainly be decisive.

American industry is deserving of every consideration. It has played a tremendous role in developing economically the greatest Nation in the world, with the highest standards of living for people in all walks of life.

Industry as a whole has met the problems of the recent depression, and the immediate problems of industrial unrest, with heroic courage, resourcefulness, and public spirit. It will continue to exert the same profound influence and fine leadership in American life. Upon its welfare depends the welfare of all. The congressional duty to help industry solve its difficulties is coincident with the duty to help workers or consumers.

But the proposed measure is not derelict in its duties to all. Is not economic strife a curse to every group? Is not industrial peace beneficial to all? Has not every step in the new-deal program embraced the interests of the public at large? The new law, for a period of 1 year and within its limited scope, will apply the healing balm of an upright, impartial, and peaceful forum, and thus will benefit employers, workers, and the country at large.

Mr. President, I feel very confident about that, and therefore I am going to support the resolution.

[From the New York Times]

PASSAGE OF BILL URGED-NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL ADJUSTMENT ACT HELD EXTREMELY VALUABLE

To the Editor of the New York Times:

As a member of the present National Labor Board may I urge strongly the passage at this session of Congress of the proposed. National Industrial Adjustment Act? It will not prevent strikes or the right to strike. But it will be a powerful agency in preventing industrial disputes from reaching the critical strike stage. Anyone familiar with the record of the present Board will realize what a valuable contribution to industrial peace it has made. Hardly 9 months old, the Board has put back to work or kept work more than 800,000 men. And all this has been accomplished in the face of legal restraints which have seriously ham-pered the Board's effectiveness.

pered the Board's effectiveness.

To remove some of these restraints and to clarify the sphere of its usefulness is the purpose of the new act. There are two main points of dispute which the act proposes to dissolve. First, that pertaining to so-called "company unions", and second, that relating to majority and minority representation upon committees of workers chosen for collective-bargaining purposes. While this is not the time or place to argue for or against company unions, it must be admitted by employers and the public that the present act takes an exceptionally fair attitude toward company unions as such. Apparently its purpose is to keep open by any lawful agency the channels of good will and cooperation which ought to flow spontaneously between employee and employer. On this account, as well as for many others, the act should have the support not only of labor but of management and the public.

The second main point of dispute hinges upon who shall represent the workers in bargaining with employers. Shall it be solely the majority chosen at an election, or shall the minority be permitted to voice its views also? So much discussion has taken place on this point that the public is quite ready for the solution place on this point that the public is quite ready for the solution proposed in the new act. It is that the matter be left for the Board to decide. But this Board's decision shall in no case prevent the minority from having the right to discuss any grievance it may have with the management. This is a wise compromise of it may have with the management. This is a wise compromise of the Labor Board's previous ruling in which the position was taken that the minority in an election was automatically washed out. The new proposal will undoubtedly undo much of the ill will caused by the Board's former stand. It will substitute internal healing for external force.

One other point must be stressed. An act of this nature, passed now, might help to avert a series of strikes such as this country has never known before. If passed 6 months or a year from now, its effect upon the situation may be no more than the effect of throwing a stone into Long Island Sound.

Ennest G. Draper.

ERNEST G. DRAPER.

NEW YORK, May 31, 1934.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the position of a majority of the Committee on Education and Labor in regard to this measure and the other measure of a kindred nature which have been pending before it can be very briefly stated.

First of all, the committee approached the subject of legislation in reference to labor disputes open-mindedly. We had presented to us a bill drafted by the distinguished junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], whom we soon discovered had been most active in the midst of the labor disputes resulting from the operations of N.R.A. and who had given months of unselfish and most helpful service to his country as the Chairman of the National Labor Board in helping to find a solution for these labor disputes. It was the result of his experience as a member of that Board which prompted him and others associated with him to draft some legislation which would be beneficial in not only defining clearly the rights of workers but, by reason of the clarification of the rights of both employers and employees preventing or settling labor disputes.

Most of the labor disputes we have experienced in the last year have grown out of the existence in the National Industrial Recovery Act of what is known as "section 7 (a)." Section 7 (a) attempted to define certain rights briefly described as freedom for workers to form and join labor organizations of their own choosing for the purpose of collective bargaining.

It provided that the worker should have the right to organize freely and independently of any interference upon the part of his employer; that he should have the right, independently of any coercion upon the part of his employer, to select representatives of his own choosing; and it provided for the right of employees having selected an organization of their choosing and representatives of their choice to engage in collective bargaining with their employers.

Immediately upon the passage of that law (section 7 (a)) the employers began to put one construction upon parts of it, and the employees began to place different constructions upon it. Leaders of the trade-union movement in the country began to spread their organization into plants where the employees were not organized. Employers began to establish so-called "company unions" of their own creation and making, with the result that there has been constant strife, and the claim has been made again and again that section 7 (a) is ineffective because it is only general in its terms and merely makes general declarations as to the rights of the workers.

Mr. President, to enact a statute which says religion is free or the press is free is ineffective. The only way that religion can be free is by defining the acts which interfere with that freedom and punishing the commission of such acts accordingly. So, with the press, it would be necessary to enact a statute prohibiting the acts that would impair the freedom of the press and provide for the punishment of those guilty of such acts.

Herein is the whole trouble with section 7 (a). There is no clear definition of what the rights are; there is nothing in section 7 (a) that says to an employer, "You cannot and you shall not interfere with the right of an employee in his right to join or not join a labor organization without violating a right of your employee for which you may be enjoined."

What did the committee find? It found that the employer possessed a weapon that few if any other class possess, namely, the weapon of economic pressure. An employer may rob his employee of his fundamental rights if he chooses, subtly and secretly, to use the power he has by reason of the fact that he can deprive the employee of his livelihood and remove his name from the pay roll.

So, it is my judgment, and it was the judgment of the committee, that this question will never be settled until we define the forms of economic pressure which cannot and must not be exercised against the right to organize which we have given to the employees under section 7 (a).

If an employer can dismiss any man he finds seeking to organize his employees, that is a form of economic pressure that must be forbidden, if we mean what we say, namely, that employees have a right to organize freely. If employers can, by the exercise of economic power and pressure, dismiss the representatives chosen by the employees, the employees have not the freedom that it is claimed or alleged we have given them. Therefore, the bill which was introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the bill which was reported by the committee specifically defined the acts that employers cannot do, to impair the right of the employees, first, to organize; second, to choose their own representatives; and third, not to be dismissed or dis-charged or demoted simply because they belong to a labor organization the employers did not choose to recognize.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President-

Mr. WALSH. I will yield in just a moment. These things we called unfair labor practices. We provided a Board that would find the facts when representation was made that an employer had interfered with the rights of workers under section 7 (a) by indulging in one of these unfair practices and then submit a finding of facts, and we provided for the enforcement of the decrees of the Board by proper restraining orders. I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. Is there anything in the pending joint resolution which takes care of any of the subjects the Senator has been discussing?

Mr. WALSH. There is nothing in the pending joint resolution which defines or clarifies the rights of the employers or the employees insofar as preventing an employer from exercising economic pressure is concerned. Every employee is free to go to work or not to go to work; every employee is free to join a labor union and elect his own representatives until his employer says, "If you do it, your job is gone." What is the use of talking to workmen about protecting their freedom of organization and their freedom in the choice of their representatives unless there is a weapon in the hands of the governmental authority to prevent that freedom being denied through the exercise by an employer of that which we call economic pressure. namely, the right to punish a man insofar as his livelihood is concerned for attempting to exercise the freedom of organization.

So, in my opinion, this question will not be settled and cannot be settled until we take action to enforce what we mean when we say the worker shall be free.

I know of no better illustration than that in regard to the freedom of the press. What do we mean by that? We mean that certain things which deny the freedom of the press are forbidden. Where is the law, where is the statute, | where is the clarifying language that an employer can read and an employee can read, which prevent the acts upon the part of the employer which deprive the employee of his freedom? It is not here, and we have got to have some legislation of that kind. It is not in the pending joint

That is a very highly controversial question, and that is why it is not in the joint resolution, because no employer-I will not say no employer, but because a large number of employers do not want that restriction. They do not want to be deprived of that economic weapon which they possess, namely, the weapon for punishing or rewarding those who serve them or fail to serve them or who exercise their right as workers independent of their employers.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President-

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico. Mr. CUTTING. Of course, I agree with the Senator that this is a controverted subject, but the Senator has left no possible doubt as to his own attitude, and I share that attitude completely.

Mr. WALSH. I know the Senator does.

Mr. CUTTING. Is there any reason why we should not express our views through the medium of adequate legislation or, at any rate, make that attempt before we adjourn for an indefinite period?

Mr. WALSH. So far as I am concerned, I am in accord with the Senator, and I would be willing to take any length of time to enact proper legislation on this subject, but, as the Senator knows, representations have been made that to attempt to define these unfair practices and pass a bill such as I have been describing would be stubbornly resisted here and would prolong the deliberations of the Congress. Personally, I am not frightened or disturbed by such a sug-

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WALSH. I gladly yield to the Senator. Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator hope that in a future Congress such legislation will be passed without opposition? Do we not have to meet that opposition sometime?

Mr. WALSH. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. NORRIS. Why not meet it now? Is there any reason why we cannot meet it now as well as during the next

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has heard what the leader of the majority said as to his conferences with the leader of the minority in reference to the disposal of this matter.

Mr. NORRIS. But he has not said, and nobody will claim, that in those conferences he has reached an agreement with the leader of the other side or with anybody else that at the next Congress such a measure will go through without opposition. If we had such an assurance given to us there might be some reason why we should now stop.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there is another develop-

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, while the Senator is on that subject will he permit me to bring out just one more point which perhaps is not known by all the Senators unless they have watched the history of the movement since the National Recovery Act was passed with reference to labor's effort to reorganize?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WALSH. I am glad to yield to the Senator for that

Mr. WAGNER. Until we passed the National Recovery Act, which provided that in every code there shall be a 7 (a) provision, many of the large industries, such as the steel industry and others, would not permit their workers to organize at all; they would not deal with any kind of union. When 7 (a) was enacted, fearing that the Government might take an interest in the enforcement of the right guaranteed by that section, the companies themselves began to form unions, company unions, under their complete domination and as a result of coercive methods in order again to circumvent 7 (a). That is what prompted all this legislation and my efforts during this entire session.

Mr. WALSH. I intended to state that.

Now, Mr. President, there is one feature of this joint resolution that is most commendable.

Mr. President, the Labor Board in seeking to settle disputes growing out of section 7 (a) discovered that when two contending groups claimed to control and represent a majority of the employees in any industry, it had no power to decide which group controlled. It had the power to make a decision, but not an enforceable decision, not a decision which it could command the employers or employees to obey. It found further that even when the members of the Board themselves were in dispute and unable to determine which group represented the majority of employees, it had no power to call or hold an election. The Board did get consent to hold elections in some cases, but in other cases they were openly defied by employers and the Board was powerless.

The joint resolution lifts out of the bill which we reported from our committee a provision for the Board holding an election to determine that fact. To that extent it is most helpful. To that extent it will prevent some strikes, because some of the strikes have been a result of the claim that one group represented the employees and the further claim that a different group represented them. The Board may call both groups together and say, "Stop. We will have an election. We will conduct the election and determine who represents a majority of the employees." To that extent the joint resolution is in my opinion of considerable benefit in the present crisis, tending to lessen somewhat labor disputes.

Practically every labor dispute, or an overwhelming majority of labor disputes, has grown out of section 7 (a) and the contentions on the one side or the other that the employees were not free, that their real representatives were not being recognized by the employer. Thus we will have, as a result of the passage of the joint resolution, some machinery for conducting an election.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Did not the committee find it to be true that while there were some exceptions, the corporations or the companies, the employers, up to the time of the passage of section 7 (a), had been opposed to unions? Of course, there were some exceptions.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; even company unions.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; they were opposed to all kinds of unions.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; any kind of organization.
Mr. NORRIS. Immediately when section 7 (a) was passed they became very friendly to a certain kind of union which they themselves organized, ordinarily known as "company unions", which gave them the opportunity to sit on both sides of the table in any dispute.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has stated known facts. In addition, let me state that the national trade-union organizations, seeing that thing going on in individual plants, put their leaders to work to try to organize a trade union independent from a company union.

Mr. NORRIS. The employees could not very well, without the danger of losing their jobs, oppose the organization of the so-called "company unions."

Mr. WALSH. Of course not, and that is the economic pressure which can be brought to bear and which must be checked.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, it must be checked.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, we may enact almost any kind of a restrictive measure affecting employees that we want, if we will do one thing-if we will make the same restrictions apply to employees. In other words, if we will forbid one employee from coercing another employee in his exercise of the right to join labor organizations, as in the Wagner bill we propose to prevent an employer from exercising that coercion, the employers will all agree to it.

The trouble with them is that they do not understand and appreciate the fundamental policy and purpose of this labor legislation. There is no economic pressure between one workman and another. No one workman can dismiss another from the shop. The workman would probably have the protection of his employer if he should resist an urgent invitation to join a labor organization. There is no such thing as economic pressure between employee and employee.

What we are dealing with is an effort to curb and restrict the right of the employer to dismiss, to discharge, to put a man on the street, to send a man home to his family penniless because he joins a labor organization. Some of the representatives of industry admitted there is between employer and employee such a thing as economic pressure, which does not exist between two employees.

Furthermore, the bill introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] and modified by our committee is not a mere police-court bill. If one employee threatens another, he can be taken to police court. If one employee or employer strikes an employee, he can be taken to police court. If he undertakes to interfere with a fellow employee by force, he can be taken to police court. There is plenty of law to cover conditions of that kind. But if an employer says in his pay envelop, "You are hereby dismissed from my employ", where is the employee's remedy if the reason for it is that he joined a labor organization?

One of the great troubles about the bill—and that is why we ought not to have been frightened and run away from it—has been that the country has not realized that we are dealing here with what has to be dealt with if we mean what we say when we say the worker shall be free to organize and have representatives of his own choosing, preventing the employer from using the weapon of dismissal because a man does exercise that right.

I have had employer after employer say, "We will support your measure if you put in it a provision that no employee shall coerce another employee into joining a labor organization." This indicates that there is an inability to realize the great distinction between an employer preventing an employee from exercising his right and the case of an employee trying to urge upon and prevent another employee joining or not joining a labor organization.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I take it one of the chief objections the Senator has to the pending joint resolution lies in the fact that it does not specifically forbid an employer to discharge a man for joining a union. I thoroughly agree with the Senator's viewpoint that in the absence of that sort of prohibition, of course, this measure would lack a provision which I think most of us agree is a necessary one. There is nothing that forbids the employer from letting the ax of execution drop on the employee's neck if he joins a labor union, and it has been determined that the labor organization was to represent him.

Mr. WALSH. I am taking this occasion to present to those Members of the Senate who are interested in the problem some of the results of the study of the question by myself and other members of the committee, and giving the views that I personally entertain of what it will be ultimately necessary to do in order to give force and effect to section 7 (a), which, I repeat, is just like saying "the press is free", with no provision of law to define what is interfering with the freedom of the press.

Mr. President, there is another provision in this joint resolution I will now discuss.

The provision in the joint resolution providing for elections is most helpful. If nothing else comes out of this joint resolution, that will be of great benefit. It will enable somebody with governmental authority, when two groups come claiming to be the representatives of the workers, to find out who does represent them and to issue an order and compel the employer to recognize them for the purpose of collective bargaining.

Now, may I say this, which is a digression, and then I shall close.

Another great misapprehension regarding the Wagner bill was that for some reason or other employers and most of the public got the notion that it compelled an employer to make an agreement with the representatives of a majority of his workers. The bill did no such thing. It not only did not do that but it did not prevent the employer from calling a minority of his employees into his office, or each and every one of them, and discussing all conditions relating to their work. What the Wagner bill did, and what we must do to make section 7a secure and safe is, first, to provide that there shall be no coercion, no interference with the employee; that the workers have a right to organize. Secondly, the bill provides that the men have a right to have their own representatives to represent them in collective bargaining. There must be no coercion, no interference, no dismissals, and no curtailment of the right to promotion by reason of that. Thirdly, the bill says that the representatives of the employees have a right to knock on the employer's door and ask to be admitted in the name of their fellow employees and to engage in a conference with the employer.

Beyond that the Wagner bill does not go; and yet we have heard all kinds of stories to the effect that employees' representatives could come in and say, "Put your name on that paper; sign these papers here; give us higher wages; give us an increase in pay." The bill never went beyond determining that there should be a free organization, there should be free representatives, and that the employer must receive them. The moment they entered the employer's door, their deliberations and their acts were as sacred as in any tribunal in the world. Furthermore, the employer did not have to make an agreement with them if he did not see fit, but he did have to recognize the right of men in his own employ to confer with him.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. I think the Senator and I are alike for very liberal labor legislation. While probably I would write the joint resolution a great deal more in favor of labor than my colleagues would, I see in this joint resolution one thing—a guarantee by which fairly and honorably, without exposing themselves to peril, laboring men may actually express their wish to be free from company unions, and to be organized under a leadership that is not subject to company influence.

That seems to me, if carried out, to be a guaranty that they may honestly and freely express themselves, without peril, in favor of a fair organization to represent them. That much seems to be quite a forward step to the laboring people.

Mr. WALSH. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. President, the provision about investigations is very helpful, too. After all, there is much to be said for the joint resolution. It does not go as far as some of us would like to go, but there is this to be said: First, there is given the power to investigate any dispute or threatened dispute arising out of a misinterpretation or misunderstanding of the meaning of section 7 (a). That is provided for. Secondly, there is a right for an investigation by this board or these boards of any dispute tending to threaten or burden the free flow of interstate commerce.

There is no authority except to investigate. It is expected that investigation, a finding of the facts and giving publicity to them, will have a very beneficial effect, and will result in making suggestions that will lead toward settling the strike or settling labor disputes. To that extent that provision is, in my judgment, very helpful; but I do hope that in the beginning of the next session, at least, we shall face the real, underlying, necessary statute that we must enact here, preventing the exercise by the employer of economic pres-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair say to the Senator from Nebraska that previously there was an understanding to recognize the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the secret agreement being carried out, Mr. President. Of course, it violates the rules of the Senate, but that is done every day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, then, will finish his remark. Will the Senator from Nebraska find it agreeable to consent to the Chair recognizing the Senator from Wisconsin to present his amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it is not necessary for the Chair to get the consent of the Senator from Nebraska to recognize anybody.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

WORK OF MILITARY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE-ARTICLE BY SENATOR SHEPPARD

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to insert something in the RECORD?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, as Chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, I have prepared an analysis of the work of the committee during this Congress. I am sure that it will be of interest to the Senate; and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD at this point, together with an article prepared by me on the subject of the common defense, published in The Reserve Officer for February 1934.

There being no objection, the statement and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORK OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS DURING THE SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

(By Morris Sheppard, Chairman Senate Committee on Military Affairs)

During the two sessions of the Seventy-third Congress 460 bills, including resolutions, have been referred to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. Four hundred and eleven of these originated in the Senate and 49 originated in the House. With the exception of 12 measures upon which departmental reports have not been reported, the committee has given consideration to all these bills and reported favorably to the Senate 163. The remain-ing 285, of which 8 were House bills, were held for further ing 285, of which 8 were House bills, were held for further action, or acted upon adversely, or transferred to other committees. Of the 163 bills reported favorably to the Senate, 122 were Senate bills and 41 were House bills. Of the 122 Senate bills reported favorably to the Senate, all have passed the Senate, except one, which is at this time on the Senate calendar. Of the 41 House bills reported favorably to the Senate all have passed the Senate. Of these 41 House bills, 24 have become law, 15 are before the President, and 2 have been vetoed.

Of the 121 Senate bills which passed the Senate 119 on going

Of the 121 Senate bills which passed the Senate, 119 on going to the House were referred to the House Committee on Military Affairs and 2 were referred to other committees; namely, the House Committee on Foreign Relations and the House Committee on Claims.

Of the 119 bills referred to the House Committee on Military Affairs, 75 have not been reported on, and 44 have been reported favorably to the House. Of the 44 Senate bills reported favorably to the House by the House Military Affairs Committee, 27 at this time remain on the House Calendar, and 17 have been passed by the House. Of the 17 passed by the House, 13 have become law, 2 have not yet been signed by the President, and 2 have been vetoed.

It will be seen that of the House bills reaching the Senate and the Senate Military Affairs Committee, practically 84 percent have been favorably reported to the Senate and passed by the Senate. Of the Senate bills reaching the House and the House Military Affairs Committee, about 37 percent have been favorably reported, and 15 percent have been passed by the House.

A brief review of the titles of some of the bills of a public nature are indicative of the variety of this legislation: To amend the retirement laws affecting certain grades of Army officers; to establish a Department of National Defense; to provide for the donation of certain Army equipment to posts of the American Legion; to provide further for the national defense; to amend the act authorizing the issuance of the Spanish War Service Medal; to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts; to increase the efficiency of the Veterinary Corps of the Regular Army; to establish a department of physics at the United States Military Academy at West Point, N.Y.; to validate payments for medical and hospital treatment of members of Reserve Officers' Training Corps and citizens' military training camps; to authorize the Secretary of War to abandon or evacuate real estate no longer required for A brief review of the titles of some of the bills of a public nature

This legislation, dealing as it does with individual, private matters, is of no public or general importance, but it is of the highest importance to the individual or individuals involved. Wrongs and injustices at times come to men in the military service, through no intent of the military authorities, but through the workings of a large organization and an inability of some individuals in the service to adjust themselves to the regularity, the discipline, and the required efficiency of military service. For these reasons the committee studies carefully and diligently the private bills referred to it. ferred to it.

Aside from legislation, numerous Presidential nominations and promotions relating to the military personnel submitted to the Senate for confirmation have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs for its action and report to the Senate.

"As the result of hearings and documentary evidence, the committee is convinced that the present law prescribing 3 years as the fixed tour of foreign service for personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps is unreasonable, unwarranted, and inhuman in its effects upon the Government and efficiency of the services."

This measure was signed by the President on May 29, 1934.

A Senate resolution introduced by Senators NyE and VANDEN-

BERG on February 8, 1934, creates a special committee of seven Senators, appointed by the Vice President, to investigate the activities of individuals, firms, associations, and of corporations and all other agencies in the United States engaged in the manufacture self-all distributions. ture, sale, distribution, import, or export of arms, munitions, or other implements of war; the nature of the industrial and commercial organizations engaged in this manufacture and traffic; the methods used in promoting or effecting the sale of implements of war; the quantities imported into the United States and the countries of their origin, as well as the quantities exported from the United States and the countries of destination. This resolution, Senate Resolution 206, further authorizes and directs the special committee to investigate and report upon the adequacy or inadequacy of existing legislation, and of the treaties to which the United States is a party, for the regulation and control of the manufacture of and traffic in arms, munitions, or other im-plements of war within the United States, and of the traffic therein between the United States and other countries; to review the findings of the War Policies Commission, and to recommend such indings of the War Policies Commission, and to recommend such specific legislation as may be deemed desirable to accomplish the purposes set forth in such findings and in the preamble to the resolution. Finally, the committee is to inquire into the desirability of creating a Government monopoly in respect to the manufacture of armaments and munitions and other implements of war, submitting recommendations thereon. This measure passed the Senate on April 19, 1934, and the special committee provided therein has been appointed by the Vice President.

An interesting piece of corrective legislation handled by the

An interesting piece of corrective legislation handled by the Committee on Military Affairs in the Seventy-third Congress is S. 2041, which has for its purpose the restoration of eligibility for commissions in the Officers' Reserve Corps to citizens of the Philippine Islands. Prior to the act of June 15, 1933, amending the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, citizens of the Philippine Islands were eligible for commissions in the Officers' Reserve Corps in the Philippine Islands under the 1916 National Defense Act. In revising the 1916 act, section 3 of the act of June 15, 1933 (48 Stat. 153), omitted the words "or of the Philippine Islands." Thus, the section read: "In time of peace a reserve officer must at the time of his appointment be a citizen of the United States between the ages of 21 and 60 years." As the Senate report pointed out: "No reason is known for this other than the words 'or of the Philippine Islands' were inadvertently omitted in writing the revised act." This bill passed the Senate on February 20, 1924.

On April 25, 1934, S. 1596 passed the Senate, providing for an extension of the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional officers of the Regular Establishment who served during the World War. The act applies to those officers of the World War who were made provisional officers in 1917, and being neither Regular nor emergency officers, have been unable to secure the benefits of either service through the Veterans' Administration despite the fact that they continued to serve during the war, rendering exactly the same service as any other commissioned officer. The Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, as written and administered, left these provisional officers, fully deserving, "but literally as men without a status.

The so-called "four generals of the four armies bill", Senate bill 2044, passed the Senate on April 25, 1934. This measure amends section 4 of the June 3, 1916, National Defense Act, to provide in part that the President is authorized to designate four general officers of the line of the Army for command of armies, who shall during the time of such command have the rank and title of general. It does not increase the number of general officers in our Army. It accords a temporary title and rank of general upon those officers temporarily serving as Army companders manders.

Senate Report No. 732 on S. 2044 reads, in part, as follows:

"The four-army plan adopted by the War Department is a very definite and practical step toward increasing the immediate effectiveness of our land forces in the event of emergency. It emphasizes the importance of immediate readiness for action under a carefully devised plan of operations rather than the immediate mobilization of huge numbers of poorly trained individuals. Its effectiveness depends in very marked degree upon the efficiency of the planning and preparatory work within the several armies during periods of peace. The four-army areas have been so laid out that each includes one of our important strategic frontiers, and ing periods of peace. The four-army areas have been so laid out that each includes one of our important strategic frontiers, and each army commander, therefore, has a very definite planning task in order to increase the effectiveness of our defenses."

The Army appropriation bill in the Senate is referred to the Senate Committee on Appropriations, on which committee, several members of the Military Affairs Committee sit ex officio when the bill is under consideration.

the bill is under consideration.

In closing this review of the committee's work during the Seventy-third Congress, I want to take the opportunity of expressing my appreciation for the hearty cooperation on the part of its members. Their readiness to serve on subcommittees, their regularity in attendance in one of the busiest Congresses I have known in my 31 years in Congress, has been gratifying, indeed. Their diligence is evidenced by the fact that at this writing the committee has acted upon every measure referred to it on which departmental reports have been received. Upon the presentation of additional evidence and the request of the author for reconsideration, the committee has seen fit to devote itself to a second study of many of the bills referred to it.

The committee has also held hearings on Senate Resolution 264, directing an inquiry by the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, into the need for an increase in the present strength of the officer and enlisted personnel of the Regular Army of the United States.

FOR THE COMMON DEFENSE

(By Morris Sheppard, published in the Reserve Officer for February 1934)

The preamble to the Constitution of the United States reads:
"We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

In the last analysis all of the purposes set forth are dependent upon one of them; to "provide for the common defense." Without that provision the other objectives of our Constitution could neither have been accomplished nor maintained through all the years of our history.

The authors of the Constitution were not militaristic. They would have liked to believe, as you and I would like to believe, that the United States would never be called upon to resort to force of arms against any nation on earth. However, they were clear minded, far-seeing, and determined that the Union of States then established should survive and develop for the benefit of posterity. They realized then, as we must realize now, that one of the primary duties of government is the national defense. The statement of the Constitution in reference to the common defense was based upon the principle that the ultimate defense and security of the Nation was a responsibility of the country's entire citizenship. In harmony with that principle is our historical military policy not to develop nor to maintain in time of peace a military force for aggressive purposes. Preservation of internal order and defense of our territory and national rights have marked the extreme limits of our intentions. It is true that at times our available military strength and our peacetime preparation have fallen far below the requirements of this sane and moderate purpose, with results in emergencies that have only falled of being disastrous because of fortunate circumstances.

Let us briefly review our military policy. circumstances

Let us briefly review our military policy

Let us briefly review our military policy. It is a little-known fact that George Washington himself laid down the basis of this policy. In the spring of 1783 Washington received a letter from Alexander Hamilton, who was chairman of a committee of the Continental Congress which had been appointed to consider the nature of a military establishment that should be set up by the United Colonies. Hamilton asked Washington's views upon the subject. Washington's report was submitted May 2, 1783, under the title "Sentiments on a Peace Establishment." His plan for the common defense comprised four elements, all of which he discussed in considerable detail. These were:

First. A small Regular Army to garrison the frontier, control the Indians, and provide for defense against invasion from Canada and Florida and Florida.

Second. A well-organized and disciplined militia under Federal direction, uniformly armed, trained, and equipped.

Third. The establishment of a system of arsenals for the production and storage of military stores.

Fourth. The foundation of one or more military academies for the instruction of officers in the military art.

The existence of this communication was practically unknown until recently discovered among the unpublished Washington papers in the Library of Congress. It has been generally believed that Washington was opposed to citizen soldiers as an element in national defense, this view being based largely upon his caustic remarks upon the behavior of the militia at the Battle of Long Island. It is true that Washington placed no confidence in untrained militia. His plan contemplated a trained, disciplined, and capably officered force such as we have today in the National Guard. Guard Guard.

This four-element project for the national military establishment was dear to Washington's heart and, as President, he labored to secure its adoption. Early in his first term as President he stated that the two most important projects before Congress were the adoption of a proper financial system and a sound plan for the national defense. However, Congress was in the mood which has so often followed our wars, and refused to embody the lessons of the war in military legislation. After 2 years of consideration the Militia Act of 1792 was finally passed, but bore little resemblance to the ideas which Washington had sponsored. All of the provisions for discipline and for Federal inspection and supervision of the militia were eliminated, and the resulting legislation was practically worthless as a contribution to the national defense.

The results of the failure of Congress to heed the advice of Washington can be traced through the reverses in the land operations of the War of 1812, and to the tremendous expense resulting from unpreparedness which accompanied our participation in the World War. Eventually, after this last conflict, Congress enacted in 1920 the present National Defense Act, which embodied almost exactly, with necessary modernization, the elements which Washington had incorporated in his original plan. This gave our country for the first time a system of national defense suited to the American temperament and American institutions. What a testimonial it is to Washington that he conceived this plan before the adoption of the Constitution and before American political institutions had taken form, and that it should have been adopted practically in its entirety 137 years later at the conclusion of American participation in the greatest war of all time. Our pressent military establishment, with its three components, the Regular Army, the National Guard, and the Organized Reserves, is an embodiment of the wise ideas that germinated in the mind of Washington. In the stress of our present economic difficulties there is grave danger that our people may forget the lessons of the past and fall fully to appreciate the necessity for adequate financial support of all components of the military establishment. The search for possible economies in Government expenditures should not lead us to starve the national defense, especially in the face of the current example of what happens to a large and populous nation that cannot defend its interests. It is easy to imagine what Washington's counsel would be if asked for his advice on still further reducing our present modest military establishment in this time of troubled conditions throughout the world.

In 1920, with the lessons of the World War fresh in mind, the The results of the failure of Congress to heed the advice of Washington can be traced through the reverses in the land opera-world.

In 1920, with the lessons of the World War fresh in mind, the Congress devised a practical military policy that constituted the first real attempt in the United States to adjust military preparation accurately to defensive needs, and so framed that program as to assure other nations of its nonaggressive purpose. This is called the National Defense Act.

Before that time only two general systems existed in the world as the basis of military organization. One was the conscript system; the other, the employment of the professional soldier. The former provided the maximum of defense with the minimum of cost by prescribing service with the colors as a civic duty. The latter entailed abnormal costs due to the necessity of reimbursing along professional lines the personnel involved. For this reason all the great military machines maintained in modern times in some of the larger foreign powers have been built up under the conscript system.

some of the larger foreign powers have been built up under the conscript system.

In our own case, tradition and public sentiment have always precluded conscription as the basis of a peace-time defense policy. Maintenance of a professional force sufficiently strong for adequate protection would have entailed prohibitive expense, even for a country as rich as the United States. Consequently, the plan developed by Congress at the end of the World War, and written into the National Defense Act, represents our present military policy.

written into the National Defense Act, represents our present military policy.

This policy places ultimate reliance for the Nation's defense upon a citizen army, the great proportion of which must be organized, trained, and equipped after the beginning of any emergency. Thus, it deliberately contemplates a delay of several months between any declaration of war and the time large-scale operations could be initiated, a circumstance that gives convincing proof of its nonaggressive intent. To make possible an orderly mobilization and effective employment of a citizen army in emergency, and to protect the country until mobilization could be accomplished, Congress recognized the need for organizing certain permanent military forces, and authorizing certain continuing preparations, particularly along organizational, training, and matériel-procurement lines

Specifically, the 1920 law provided for a small professional force specifically, the 1920 law provided for a smart professional force and for a limited training of civilians, on a voluntary basis, through the National Guard, the Organized Reserves, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and the citizens' military training camps. The establishment of this conservative policy for land defense was unquestionably one of the most constructive measures evolved

The establishment of this conservative policy for land defense was unquestionably one of the most constructive measures evolved by any government in recent years. In it are combined efficiency, economy, and respect for American ideals and traditions. It is the product of a long evolutionary process during which the Congress was guided by our military experiences under a variety of conditions and circumstances. Improvement in it should be sought by the same method, and any drastic change should be adopted only after mature consideration of all factors involved and having in view the continuing welfare of the whole Nation. The foundation of our defensive structure is the Regular Army. The Regular Army should be able at all times to furnish any troops required by internal emergencies and initial defense against surprise attack. The civilian components depend upon it for instruction, leadership, and technical progress, while in case of general mobilization it is the model and directing head for all. The National Defense Act provided that it should comprise approximately 18,000 officers and 280,000 men. During the decade just passed, this strength, in the interests of immediate economy has been progressively reduced until present appropriations are on the basis of 12,000 officers and 125,165 enlisted men, including the Philippine Scout contingent of 6,415, the Scouts being available for duty only in the Philippine Islands.

Any continuing tendency to cut further into this already weakened backbone of our military skeleton must be viewed with great concern by all citizens. As early as 1925 the War Department undertook an exhaustive analysis of our particular situation in an attempt to determine as accurately as possible the minimum strength requirements of the Regular Army in order to carry out the missions given it by the National Defense Act. The detailed conclusions then reached are contained in part 3 of the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, Sixty-ninth Congress, second

"A Regular Army, as prescribed in the National Defense Act, strength 17,728 officers and 280,000 enlisted men, is the minimum trained and disciplined force that should be immediately available to meet the requirements of the United States."

"A Regular Army, of " 14,063 officers, 165,000 enlisted men is the least force that will furnish in time of peace the necessary garrisons for the overseas possessions and for the Regular Army harbor defenses of the United States; will provide a small, fairly well balanced mobile force, with the requisite combat units of sufficient strength to conduct effective training; will furnish the necessary Regular Army personnel for the civil components, and will provide preparation in time of peace of a timely and adequate mobilization in the event of a national emergency, as contemplated by the National Defense Act."

A majority of our foremost military leaders, members of the American Legion, and of patriotic societies throughout the country feel that our minimum requirements for national defense, in ad-feel that our minimum requirements for national defense, in addition to 14,000 officers and 165,000 enlisted men in the Regular dition to 14,000 officers and 165,000 enlisted men in the Regular Army, are a National Guard of around 210,000 men with an appropriate number of officers; an Officers' Reserve Corps with 120,000 members and provisions for training approximately 30,000 reserve officers each year; a Reserve Officers' Training Corps in every college and school that desires it, and a system of citizens' military training camps that will give intensive training to at least 30,000 young men on a voluntary basis each summer.

Such plans also include comprehensive planning for procurement of munitions, including a system of educational orders to train selected industries in the manufacture of noncommercial equipment.

In view of the position taken by the Budget and the condition of the Treasury, it will at this time be necessary to endeavor to meet the country's defense needs with the present force. It is both necessary and helpful, however, to keep the facts before us and to review our defense requirements and our actual defense status from time to time in order that the true situation may be neither forgotten nor overlooked. With this end in view the present article is submitted.

To the Regular Army National Guard and Organized Reserves.

The present article is submitted.

To the Regular Army, National Guard, and Organized Reserves. I wish to pay my tribute as a citizen and as Chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee. For many years I have watched with sympathetic interest the standards of efficiency in the military personnel. I believe that at no time have these standards been higher than now.

been higher than now.

The present average of professional attainment of Regular Army men, their loyalty and devotion to duty under somewhat adverse circumstances, are appreciated by every good citizen.

To the members of the Organized Reserves and National Guard, who give of their time and energy in these hurrled days to perfect themselves in the performance of their military duties, every good citizen is grateful. The public appreciates, as never before, the value and the significance of the Organized Reserves and the National Guard. They know that commissions in the Reserve Corps and National Guard cannot be secured without demonstration of sincere interest and satisfactory qualifications, that once commissioned these officers can hold a commission only for a limited time unless they qualify for continuance in service by attendance upon instruction and by hard study—that they cannot merely hold their commissions but by unceasing effort must constantly increase their knowledge and efficiency. Let it be added that the enlisted men of all three components of the Army of the United States should not be omitted from a full share of the Nation's approval and commendation. They are giving splendid and patriotic service and merit our unqualified appreciation.

TRAFFIC IN CERTAIN FIREARMS

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Before the Senator begins his speech, I desire to state that there are two measures here that I am extremely anxious to get out of the way, because it may be that they will have to go back to the House of Representatives. The Senator is familiar with both of them.

One of them is House bill 9741, one of the crime bills, which lays a privilege tax on the manufacture for commercial use of machine guns or sawed-off shotguns. I hope the Senator will permit me to have that bill considered and passed at this time, and that there will be no objection to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it may be done by unanimous consent I will yield for that purpose, if it may be understood that I do not lose my right to the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall not insist upon the consideration of the bill if there is any discussion of it. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi requests unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 9741, to provide for the taxation of manufacturers, importers, and dealers in certain firearms and machine guns; to tax the sale or other disposal of such weapons; and to restrict importation and regulate interstate transportation thereof. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not think it is good policy to take up a measure of this kind in the midst of a speech. A few days ago, when this matter was called up on the calendar, I think the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] objected to it.

Mr. HARRISON. I will state to the Senator that this is a different matter. This bill has passed the House.

Mr. McNARY. Very well; let the speech go forward. object to the consideration of the bill at this particular

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, I am not going to delay the Senator from Wisconsin; but there are two bills here which, in my opinion, are just about as important as the joint resolution that is pending before the Senate, and I desire to see them passed sometime this afternoon.

SETTLEMENT OF LABOR CONTROVERSIES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 143) to effectuate further the policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, in the nature of a substitute for the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

DECLARATION OF POLICY

Section 1. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to remove unnecessary obstructions to the free flow of commerce, to encourage the establishment of uniform labor standards, and to provide for the general welfare, by establishing agencies for the peaceful settlement of labor disputes, and by protecting the exercise by the worker of complete freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of his own choosing, for the purpose of negotiating the terms and conditions of his employment or other mutual aid or protection.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. When used in this resolution—

(1) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, association, corporation, labor organization, legal representative, trustee in bankruptcy, or receiver.

(2) The term "employer" includes any person acting in the interest of an employer, directly or indirectly, but shall not include the United States, or any State, municipal corporation, or other governmental instrumentality, or any person subject to the Railway Labor Act, as amended from time to time, or any labor organization (other than when acting as an employer), or anyone acting in the capacity of officer or agent of such labor organization, or any person employing less than 10 employees.

(3) The term "employees" shall include any employee, and shall not be limited to the employees of a particular employer, unless the resolution explicitly states otherwise, and shall include any individual whose work has ceased as a consequence of, or in any individual whose work has deased as a consequence of, or in connection with, any current labor dispute or because of any unfair labor practice, and who has not obtained any other regu-lar employment, but shall not include any individual employed as an agricultural laborer, or in the domestic service of any family or person at his home, or any individual employed by his

UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

SEC. 3. It shall be an unfair labor practice-

(1) For an employer to attempt, by interference or coercion, to impair the exercise by employees of the right to form or join labor organizations, to designate representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, or for an employer to refuse to recognize and deal with such representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

(2) For employees to attempt, by interference or coercion, to impair the exercise by employers of the right to join or form employer organizations and to designate representatives of their own choosing for the purpose of collective bargaining.

(3) For an employer to interfere with or dominate the administration of any labor organization or contribute financial support to it: Provided, That, subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the National Industrial Adjustment Board, an employer shall by the National Industrial Adjustment Board, an employer shall not be prohibited from permitting an employee, individually, or local representatives of employees, from conferring among themselves or with management during working hours without loss of pay while engaged in the business of a labor organization.

(4) For an employer, by discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment, or by contract or agreement, to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization: Provided, That nothing in this resolution or in the National Industrial Recovery Act, or in any code in any labor organization: Provided, That nothing in this resolution or in the National Industrial Recovery Act, or in any code or agreement approved thereunder, or in any other statute of the United States, shall preclude an employer from making an agreement with a labor organization (not established, maintained, or controlled by any unfair labor practice) to the effect that a person seeking employment shall be required, as a condition of employment, to join such labor organization, if the agreement is sought by the majority of employees in the unit covered by it when made and its duration is limited to a reasonable period. Nothing in this proviso shall be construed by the Board to indicate that any employer is bound to enter into an agreement conditioning employment upon membership in any labor organization.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL ADJUSTMENT BOARD

SEC. 4. (a) There is hereby created in the Department of Labor a board, to be known as the "National Industrial Adjustment Board" (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), which shall be composed of five members, appointed as hereinafter provided.

(b) The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint three members to represent the general public, and shall designate one of such members as chairman of the Board. One of these members shall be appointed for a term of 1 year, one for a term of 3 years, and one for a term of 5 years, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of 5 years each, except that any individual chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed. Each member representing the general public shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year, shall be eligible for reappointment, and shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment (c) The F President, by and with the advice and consent Senate, shall appoint for terms of 1 year each 6 individuals as a panel to represent employers and 6 individuals as a panel to represent employees. In making such appointments the President may consult organized representatives of employers and employees. The chairman of the Board shall from time to time select indi-The chairman of the Board shall from time to time select individuals from these panels to serve as members of the Board, and shall fix and rotate their periods of service in such manner that (1) there shall always be one representative of employers and one representative of employees upon the Board, and (2) all the individuals on the panels shall, insofar as practicable, serve as members of the Board for approximately the same length of time. Members of the Board who are selected from the panels shall each receive $20 per diem and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses when engaged in the performance of their duties.

(d) Three members of the Board, including one member representing the general public, shall constitute a quorum. A vacancy in the Board shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Board. The Board shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

Sec. 5. (a) The members representing the general public shall an omegas sear which shall be judiciarly noticed.

Sec. 5. (a) The members representing the general public shall appoint such employees, and, without regard for the provisions of the civil-service laws, appoint such attorneys, special experts, and examiners as may be from time to time appropriated for by Congress. The Board may utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, and establish such voluntary and uncompensated regional, or local boards, as it may from time to time find

(b) Upon the organization of the Board and the designation (b) Upon the organization of the Board and the designation of its chairman, the old Board shall cease to exist; and all pending investigations and proceedings of the old Board shall be continued by the Board. All records, papers, and property of the old Board shall become records, papers, and property of the Board, and all unexpended funds and appropriations for the use and maintenance of the old Board, shall become funds and appropriations available to be expended by the Board in the exercise of the powers, authority, and duties conferred on it by this resolution. All employees of the old Board shall be transferred to and become employees of the Board at their present grades and salgries.

employees of the Board at their present grades and salaries.

(c) All of the expenses of the Board, including all necessary traveling and subsistence expenses outside the District of Columbia incurred by the members or employees of the Board under its orders, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the Board or by any individual it duly designates for that purpose.

(d) The Board may request and the Secretary of Labor may direct from time to time the officers and employees of the Department of Labor to render services and furnish information and otherwise to aid the Board in the performance of its duties, insofar otherwise to aid the Board in the performance of its duties, insofar as such assistance can be made available under the appropriations and other legal obligations of the Department of Labor.

Sec. 6. The principal office of the Board shall be in the District of Columbia, but it may meet and exercise all its powers at any other place. The Board may, by one or more of its members or by such agents or agencies as it may designate, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its functions in any part of the United States. A member who participates in such an inquiry shall not be disqualified from subsequently participating in a decision of the Board in the same case.

SEC. 7. The Board shall have authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind such reasonable rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution. Such rules and regulations shall be effective upon publication in the manner which the Board may prescribe.

PREVENTION OF UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

SEC. 8. (a) The Board is empowered, as hereinafter provided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unfair labor practice defined in section 3 that burdens or affects commerce, or obstructs the free flow of commerce, or has led or tends to lead to a labor dispute that might burden or affect commerce or obstruct the free flow of commerce.

(b) Whenever a complaint is made to the Board which causes the Board to believe that any person has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair labor practice, the Board shall issue and cause to be served upon such person a complaint stating the charges in to be served upon such person a complaint stating the charges in that respect, and containing a notice of hearing before the Board or before a designated agent or agency, at a place therein fixed, at a time to be designated by the Board. Any such complaint may be amended by the Board in its discretion at any time prior to the conclusion of the taking of the evidence. The person so complained of shall have the right to file an answer to the original or amended complaint and appear in person or by counsel and give testimony at the place and time fixed in the complaint, and to invoke the compulsory process of the Board in summoning and to invoke the compulsory process of the Board in summoning witnesses in its behalf.

(c) The testimony taken by such agent or agency or the Board shall be reduced to writing and filed with the Board. Thereafter, in its discretion, the Board may itself take further testimony and/or hear argument. If upon all the testimony taken, the Board shall be of the opinion that any person named in the complaint has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair labor practice, then the Board shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on such person an order requiring such person to cease and desist from such unfair labor practice, or to take affirmative action or to perform any other acts that will achieve substantial justice under the circumstances. Such order may further require such person to make a report from time to time showing the extent to which it has complied with the order

(d) Until a transcript of the record in a case shall have been filed in a court, as hereinafter provided, the Board may at any time, upon such notice and in such manner as it shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or order made or issued by it.

(e) If such person fails or neglects to obey such order of the Board while the same is in effect the Attorney General, at the request of the Board, may petition any circuit court of appeals of the United States within any circuit wherein the labor practice in question occurred or wherein such person resides or carries on business, for the enforcement of such order, and shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the entire record in the proceedfile in the court a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding, including the testimony upon which such order was entered and the findings and order of the Board. Upon such filing, the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such person, and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Board. No objection that has not been urged before the Board shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Board as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conexcused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Board as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be con-clusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were rea that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Board, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Board and to be adduced upon the hearing. The Board may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive, and shall file its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. The jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and degree shall be final except that the same shall original order. The jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347). The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Board's order.

as a stay of the Board's order.

(f) Any person aggrieved by an order of the Board granting or denying in whole or in part the relief sought may obtain a review of such order in any Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States in the circuit wherein the unfair labor practice in question was engaged in or wherein such person resides or carries on busiwas engaged in or wherein such person resides or carries on business, by filing in such court a written petition praying that the order of the Board be modified or set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Board, and thereupon the aggrieved party shall file in the court a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding, certified by the Board, and including the testimony upon which the order complained of was entered and the findings and order of the Board. Upon such filing, the court shall have the same jurisdiction to affirm, set aside, or modify the order of the Board, and shall proceed in the same manner, as in the case of an application by the Board for an enforcement of its order, and the findings of the Board as to facts, if supported by evidence, shall in like manner be conclusive.

SEC. 9. (a) The Board shall have power to act and to appoint any agent or agency to act, as arbitrator in labor disputes, when parties agree to submit the whole or any part of a labor dispute to the arbitration of the Board or its appointees. When the Board accepts such submission, the agreement shall be valid, irrevocable, and enforceable as to the submitting parties save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract. In any such arbitration the Board shall have power to issue an award applicable to the submitting parties.

(b) In any dispute in which an award has been made, the Board shall file the award in the clerk's office of the United States district court that has been agreed upon by the parties or, in default of court that has been agreed upon by the parties or, in default of such agreement, that of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Notice of the filing shall be personally served or sent by registered mail to each submitting party. Unless a petition to impeach the award, on the grounds hereinafter set forth, shall be filed in the clerk's office of the court in which the award has been filed in the clerk's office of the court in which the award has been filed, the court shall enter final judgment confirming the award.

(c) A petition for the impeachment of any award may be filed only in the court where the award has been filed and not more than 10 days after the communication of notice of the filing of the award to the submitting parties. Notice of the filing of such a petition shall be served personally or sent by registered mail to each submitting party. This petition shall be sustained by the court only on one or more of the following grounds:

1. That the proceedings were not substantially in conformity.

1. That the proceedings were not substantially in conformity with this resolution;

2. That the award does not conform nor confine itself to the stipulations of the agreement to arbitrate; or

3. That an arbitrator or member of the Board participating in the award was guilty of fraud or corruption; or that a party to the ward practiced fraud or corruption which affected the result.

the ward practiced fraud or corruption which affected the result.

(d) The court shall not set aside an award on the ground that it is invalid for uncertainty; in such case the court shall suspend action pending a resubmission of such award to the Board for interpretation. It shall not set aside an award for irregularity or clerical error, going only to form and not to substance; in such case the court shall correct the form of the award in its judgment. If the award has accept to be constitute because it has case the court shall correct the form of the award in its judgment. If the award has ceased to be operative because it has been carried out or superseded, the court shall enter judgment accordingly. The court shall construe every award with a view to favoring its validity. But if the court shall determine that a part of the award is invalid on some ground or grounds designated in this section as a ground of invalidity, but that a part of the award is valid, the court shall set aside the entire award; unless all interested parties shall agree that the valid part is severable. If the petition is not sustained, the court shall enter judgment confirming the award. confirming the award.

(e) Within 10 days from the entry of judgment upon the petition, confirming or otherwise disposing of the award, any party may appeal to the circuit court of appeals. Only such portion of the record shall be transmitted to the appellate court as is necessary to the proper understanding and consideration of the questions of law to be decided. The determination of the circuit court of appeals upon these questions shall be final, and judg-ment pursuant thereto shall thereupon be entered by the district

(f) If at any time before final judgment all interested parties agree upon a settlement in lieu of the award, judgment may be entered upon such settlement.

(g) The judgment shall be entered and docketed as if it were effect as, and be subject to all the provisions of law relating to, a decree in a suit in the court in which it is entered.

(h) The several United States courts are hereby vested with jurisdiction to entertain proceedings and to enforce all judgments entered pursuant to this section, without respect to the amount in controversy.

CONCILIATION AND MEDIATION

SEC. 10. The Board shall have the power to use and to create agencies for the mediation or conciliation of labor disputes: Provided, That the Board may decline to take cognizance of any labor dispute where there is another means of settlement provided for by agreement, industrial code, or law which has not been utilized.

REPRESENTATION OF EMPLOYEES

SEC. 11. (a) In any dispute as to who are the representatives of employees, the Board, if the dispute might burden or affect commerce or obstruct the free flow of commerce, may investigate such dispute and certify to the parties, in writing, the name or names of the individuals or labor organizations that have been designated and authorized to represent employees. In any such investigation, the Board shall hold an appropriate hearing, and the Board shall be authorized to take a secret ballot of employees, the Board shall be authorized to take a secret ballot of employees, or to utilize any other suitable method to ascertain by whom or by what labor organization they desire to be represented. The Board shall decide whether eligibility to participate in a choice of representatives shall be determined on the basis of employer unit, plant unit, or other appropriate unit. Each unit may be given representation in proportion to its membership. The Board may determine that representatives agreed upon by the majority of employees in an appropriate unit shall represent the entire unit for the purpose of negotiating agreements concerning terms and conditions of employment: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit an employer from discussing grievances with an employee or groups of employers at any time.

(b) In any dispute not of the character described in subsection (a), as to who are the representatives of employees, the Board may

LIMITATIONS

SEC. 15. Nothing in this resolution shall be construed to require any employee to render labor or service without his consent, or to authorize the issuance of any order or injunction requiring such service, or to make illegal the failure or refusal of any employee individually, or any number of employees collectively, to render labor or service.

SEC. 16. Nothing in this resolution, except as otherwise expressly provided, shall abridge the rights of employees secured to them, under any code, agreement, or otherwise, by section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, it being the purpose of this resolution to supplement and not to supersede such rights.

Sec. 17. If any provision of this resolution or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invalid, the remainder of this resolution, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I listened to the statements made by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], the junior Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner], and the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh], who is Chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. I did not hear from the lips of those three distinguished Senators one sound reason why the Congress should not legislate upon one of the most important questions, so far as public policy and public welfare are concerned, that has confronted the Congress in recent years.

Any person who is at all familiar with the situation on the industrial front in the United States knows that there are ominous signs of great unrest. Strikes are in progress in practically every section of the United States. Unless some action shall be taken by the Congress to set up machinery whereby the wage earners of this country may hope to have a fair determination of the rights which they believe were extended to them in section 7 (a) of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, there is every tions with which the United States has ever been confronted.

I, for one, am not frightened by the false propaganda against the Wagner bill. I do not propose, insofar as I have responsibility as one Member of this body, to shirk the duty which I feel is upon me, to make the best possible effort to see that this grave situation shall be met by adequate and well-considered legislation to effectuate the organization of instrumentalities which will make it possible to avoid the labor conflicts which every person knows are in the making.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who has given of his time and his labors most assiduously in connection with this work, not only in the Senate, but as chairman of the National Labor Board, stated a few moments ago that section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act was being flouted by employers. Every Senator knows that statement to be true, and at bottom it is the failure to enforce section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act which is primarily responsible for the ominous rumblings of unrest and the numerous conflicts which are already in progress in the industrial sections of the United States.

What sound reason can there be for Congress failing to discharge the responsibility which rests upon it as one of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government, in the face of this impending crisis, to enact legislation to meet the situation adequately, insofar as that may be humanly possible?

Was the 7-year fight waged by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] for the enactment of the socalled "lame duck resolution", which did away with the terminate adjournment of Congress, all in vain? There is no sound reason any man has given or can give for the Congress to adjourn and to turn its back upon a situation which may bring open industrial warfare in the United

Every Senator who takes part in avoiding that responsibility for enacting legislation must, in my opinion, also take responsibility for the situation which will develop if we do not pass adequate legislation upon this grave subject matter.

Mr. President, what does section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act provide? It provides as follows:

SEC. 7. (a) Every code of fair competition, agreement, and license approved, prescribed, or issued under this title shall conlicense approved, prescribed, or issued under this title shall contain the following conditions: (1) That employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection; (2) that no employee and no one seeking employment shall be required as a condition of employment to join any company union or to refrain from of employment to join any company union or to refrain from joining, organizing, or assisting a labor organization of his own choosing; and (3) that employers shall comply with the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, and other conditions of employment approved or prescribed by the President.

Mr. President, that was a plain declaration of right. It was framed in language which had come to have an accepted usage. "The right to organize", "the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing", are words which had come to have a definite meaning.

The Senator from New York stated on the floor this afternoon that this section of the law has been flouted and violated. Labor has been denied their rights and the section of the law enacted for their benefit has been violated. Any person who will review the activities of the National Labor Board will find that 75 percent, approximately, of all the cases with which it has had to deal have, in the last analysis, been concerned with the question of company unionism, and of the failure of employers to grant the rights extended under section 7 (a) for the free choice of representatives by their employees, and the right to collective bargaining.

Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to concede that if this measure had been introduced in the closing hours of this Congress, it would have been absurd for any one to have suggested that it ought to receive consideration by the | moment the partisan representatives of labor and of man-Congress before it adjourned. Such is not the case. This measure is the outgrowth of the experience of the able junior Senator from New York in meeting his responsibility as chairman of the National Labor Board. The measure, carefully drawn, is designed to solve the problems with which the National Labor Board has been confronted.

The bill was introduced early in this session of Congress. It has had protracted hearings. So far as I know every person who asked to be heard either for or against the bill was given ample opportunity to present his arguments and his points of view and his testimony to the committee.

Then the committee took the bill and worked upon it day after day and day after day. Finally it was reported with a substitute amendment. So it cannot be said, I reiterate, that this is a hastily drawn, ill-considered piece of legislation. Nor can it be contended that it was brought in at the last minute and urged upon the attention of Congress.

Mr. President, what I have done-and may I say that it was not done without notice-what I have done is to take the substitute amendment as reported by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor to the Wagner bill, and in it I have incorporated the printed amendments which the Senator from New York has prepared and intended to offer had the measure been given consideration. Of course, the whole purpose of the amendment is to give implementation to the definite, broad, square declaration of public policy to be found in section 7 (a) of title I of the National Recovery Act. It will not overthrow or destroy the organization or the experience of the National Labor Board and its 19 regional and special boards.

Section 3 defines and enlarges rights, many of which are already embodied in section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act. It characterizes certain activities of employers by which they frustrate employees' rights of selforganization and collective bargaining as unfair labor Section 8 empowers the National Industrial Adjustment Board in cases where these practices affect interstate commerce to prevent their continuance in the same way that the Federal Trade Commission has for 20 years dealt with "unfair methods of competition." The experience of the Federal Trade Commission has shown that the courts give a restrictive interpretation to such a general phrase as "unfair methods of competition." It is, therefore, important that unfair labor practices should be defined explicitly.

The practices of employers specifically forbidden are: First. Interference with organizations of employees.

Second. Interference with their designation of representa-

Third. Refusal to recognize and bargain with such representatives.

Fourth. To prevent the financial support of labor organizations by employers.

Fifth. To prevent the discrimination in hire or tenure of employment because of membership or nonmembership in any labor organization.

This last prohibition is tempered by a provision permitting closed-shop agreements relating to future employees when a majority of the present employees so desire.

The experience of the National Labor Board, the Petroleum Labor Policy Board, the bituminous coal labor boards, all administering section 7 (a), as well as an 8-year test of the Railway Labor Act, indicate that such specific prohibitions are needed to effectuate the purpose of section 7 (a). Certainty should be substituted for uncertainty in this field, for uncertainty as to what the law bestows and withholds is one of the removable causes of labor unrest in this country today.

Section 4 of this piece of legislation creates the central board of five members to administer it. The conflict between a public representative (or quasi-judicial) personnel and a bipartisan (or quasi-arbitral) personnel is resolved by a happy compromise. The public-representative personnel of three members outnumbers at every particular agement. But the latter will be drawn one at a time from panels of six for each group. No doubt all 12 of these appointees will watch the board's activity with critical eye and give it the benefit of their advice. The need of a paid and fairly professional personnel is clear. A weakness of the existing National Labor Board has been its lack of members giving it their foremost thought. Its distinguished chairman in recent months has had, as I have suggested, responsibilities that have demanded his first attention.

The wonder to me, Mr. President, is that he has been able to carry all of the work and all of the responsibility which he has shouldered during this long and arduous session of Congress.

The partisan members, representing industry and labor, respectively, heavily burdened with private and public responsibilities, could not give to its work the attention and time required for continuity and vitality of policy. The National Industrial Adjustment Board will not be deprived of the counsel of the sort of leaders who represent industry and labor on the present National Labor Board. But it will gain a nucleus of three full-time members representing the general public who may be expected by reason of their special qualifications of temperament, training, and experience to bring to the Board a new prestige, and by their assiduity during their long terms of office to enhance it from month to month. The temporary and uncertain character of all boards that have been or might be set up by the President's authority alone prevent the development of the very stability of policy needed for successful long-time handling of labor relations.

Sections 5, 6, and 7 relating to the appointment of staff, place of operation, and authority to make administrative rules require no comment.

Section 8 deals with the procedure to assure the observance of fair labor practices. This procedure, it has been said, closely parallels that in use for 20 years by the Federal Trade Commission. No objection has been expressed to these provisions. They are well tested by experience and essential to success.

Section 9 empowers the National Industrial Arbitration Board to arbitrate cases voluntarily submitted by the parties, and sets out a procedure of enforcement closely resembling that for arbitration under the Railway Labor Act. The importance of this power will depend entirely on the confidence with which labor and management view the new Board. The presence of employer and employee members on the Board may assure it a great future in this field of definitive settlement of labor disputes by consent of the interested parties. I am not given to prediction, Mr. President, but it seems to me that the prospect is bright.

Should this amendment be adopted we might take a long step forward in settling labor disputes in the United States.

Section 10 continues the mediatory functions of the National Labor Board and the regional boards and permits the new Board to consider disputes that may be within the competence of special agencies, especially by way of appeal, under identical language in the President's Executive order of December 16. This power has been scarcely exercised by the present National Labor Board. But it seems probable that uniformity of decision, particularly in the interpretation of the unfair labor practice provisions, will become increasingly necessary. It is hoped that the National Industrial Arbitration Board may provide such uniformity where uniformity is needed and allow diversity between industries and between localities where diversity will not cause confusion. Discretion in this matter is best entrusted to an expert central administrative agency such as the proposed National Industrial Arbitration Board.

Section 11 deals specifically with elections and is an amplification of powers now exercised by the National Labor Board and labor boards in particular industries. It gives to the Board wide discretion to determine the manner and effect of elections, thus placing on the Board a responsibility which existing agencies have tended to avoid assuming because of doubt as to their authority and divergence in view as to the manner and meaning of the representation envisaged by section 7 (a).

Section 12 provides the usual authority of administrative bodies to compel testimony and to prosecute for contempt those who are obdurate. The National Labor Board, in inquiring into the observance of section 7 (a), has been constantly balked by its inability to obtain needed testimony. No witnesses and no records could be obtained by the Board except by the good will of the persons having the information within their control. This grave defect can be cured only by the action of Congress. It is cured by this action which enables the Board to issue subpenas to summon witnesses and to obtain pay rolls and other documents in cases where there is a charge of an unfair labor practice including those concerning employee representation and elections to determine such representation.

Section 13 provides the usual penalty for those who willfully impede the Board in the discharge of its duties.

Section 14 requires an annual report to Congress.

Section 15 safeguards any misconstruction of the statute to compel service or to make strikes illegal.

Section 16 safeguards the rights conferred on employees by section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Section 17 is the usual separability clause.

The whole proposal is a well considered and reasonably satisfactory provision for governmental guidance in labor relations.

Mr. President, although we have made great progress in our industrial development, insofar as the relations between labor and management are concerned, this country is far behind some other industrial countries. It is my judgment that the National Industrial Recovery Act would never have been passed by this body had it not contained section 7 (a) and had not the majority of the membership of the Senate believed that section 7 (a) meant what it said and that it would be enforced.

Today labor conflicts and strikes threaten the peace and the economic life of many communities all over the United States. At bottom these conflicts are primarily over company unionism and the right of collective bargaining which was pledged in section 7 (a) of the Industrial Recovery Act.

The joint resolution to which I have offered an amendment does not meet the problems which are responsible for approximately 75 percent of all the cases which have been passed upon by the National Labor Board.

I realize that there has been serious opposition to the so-called "Wagner bill" but I do not think Congress should be deterred in the discharge of its responsibility to enact legislation designed to meet this critical emergency simply because there is opposition. Too many American industrialists fail to recognize that without an organized labor market it is inevitable that the industrial process will constantly be interrupted by strikes, by lockouts, by riots, by bloodshed, yes, and even by death. Already we have seen an example in the strike at Toledo.

Of course every individual Senator would like an early adjournment and to go home; I admit, Mr. President, so far as I am personally concerned, I am weary with the session, but I say that, in my opinion, a grave mistake will be made if, instead of enacting legislation which will meet this situation, we shall pass a joint resolution, which I think every person will admit is a makeshift, and which I believe the chairman of the committee admitted in his own statement fails to deal with the most serious problems that are creating labor unrest in America today.

What boots it, Mr. President, if representatives are chosen by the employees or if elections are held as provided by the joint resolution if after those representatives are chosen the employers refuse to meet with them? In instance after instance, after representatives were chosen by the wage earners, employers have contended that they have complied with their obligations as to collective bargaining when they permitted the representatives to enter their offices but have declined to consult with them further.

It seems to me it is perfectly obvious that if we would be willing to remain here but a few days longer we could pass legislation which would meet this situation adequately and which would prevent the economic crisis, produced by conflicts between labor and management, which looms ominously on the horizon. Unless adequate treatment shall be given this subject by the present Congress, I am apprehensive, Mr. President, that a situation which will constitute a grave national emergency will arise, and that thousands of persons perchance will lose their lives in bloody, open conflict. We had a preview of such a picture in the Toledo strike. Fortunately it has been settled, but not until there had been casualties.

Labor has been looking to the Congress to act upon this question. I hesitate to think what their reaction will be if this amendment shall be defeated and labor shall realize that the second session of the Seventy-third Congress has been barren of legislation in the interest of the masses of the wage earners of this country.

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield for a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Wisconsin yielded the floor, and I obtained it; but I am glad to yield to the Senator from North Dakota so that he may ask a question.

Mr. NYE. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Fol-LETTE] has stated it to be his view that if we were to remain here a matter of a few days we could accomplish the passage of a worth-while labor bill. I want to ask the Senator if by chance it should take the Senate and the other House a month of continued effort to accomplish the enactment of a worth-while labor bill, would it be any the less our duty to stay here and do that job in the light of what is in prospect the country over?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, my answer to the Senator, of course, is in the affirmative; we should stay here so long as is necessary. I take little stock in the cloakroom threats of a filibuster which have been made against a labor bill. I am convinced that if the same pressure should be put behind an adequate measure dealing with this question which has been put behind other bills which have been considered and passed at this session the measure could be passed within a few days.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Austin in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a moment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I was regrettably called from the Senate Chamber for a few moments. May I ask the eloquent Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] whether he has discussed the history of his substitute?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have.

Mr. COSTIGAN. And stated whether or not it has been considered by a committee or committees of the Senate?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert certain material as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF LABOR BOARD PRINCIPLES ISSUED TO BOARDS

The first volume of decisions of the National Labor Board, Senator Robert F. Wagner announced today, is being transmitted for information and guidance to all regional labor boards, as well as to industrial relations boards and mediators. The decisions, covering 46 cases from the inception of the board to March 1934, are being issued in printed form.

Senator Wagner characterized the decisions as "a sound contri-

Senator Wagner characterized the decisions as "a sound contribution to the formulation of a national labor policy, evolved by practical men as solutions of disputes involving fundamental industrial problems. The decisions follow established lines, preserving and advancing the principles of industrial relations contained in the recovery law."

Membership of the National Labor Board is as follows: Chairman, Senator Robert F. Wagner; vice chairman, S. Clay Williams; for industry—Henry S. Dennison, Ernest Draper, Pierre S. du Pont, Louis E. Kirstein, Walter C. Teagle; vice chairman, Dr. L. C. Marshall; for labor—George L. Berry, William Green, Dr. Francis J. Haas, John L. Lewis, Dr. Leo Wolman.

A summary of the Board's principles by Milton Handler, general counsel of the Board, follows:

ARBITRATION

Where the parties have not been able to settle their difficulties where the parties have not been able to settle their difficulties by collective bargaining, the National Labor Board has frequently recommended arbitration. In some cases the Board has acted as arbitrator itself upon a joint submission of a dispute by the parties (particularly wage disputes). All arbitration, however, has been voluntary and based upon the joint submission and consent of the parties.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

The Board has held that the employees' right to bargain collectively imposes a corresponding duty on the employer. Collective bargaining has been construed to mean the exertion of every reasonable effort to reach an agreement. The Board has deprecated the calling of a strike without attempt at negotiations or the presentation of grievances, on the part of the employees.

Company union

The Board has ruled that organization is a matter exclusively within the control of the employees. It has counseled a "hands-off" policy on the part of employers. It has condemned the initiation of a company union by an employer and the participation by him in its affairs, where such initiation and participation have in effect, been an interference with the employees' self-organization, or resulted, in fact, in the domination of the organization by the employer, and where the employees have not clearly consented thereto. The Board has drawn a distinction between employee-representation plans which were fully submitted to the employees for their acceptance or rejection and plans which were imposed upon them. It has held that the fact that an election of representatives has been conducted under a plan does not constitute an approval of the plan itself. stitute an approval of the plan itself.

Disclosure of employees' names

It is unnecessary for a collective-bargaining agency to disclose the names of those it represents when it seeks to bargain collectively with the employer.

Discriminations

The Board has ruled that the discharge of employees because of their union activity is contrary to section 7 (a). The Board has ordered the reinstatement of employees whose discharge it found to have been discriminatory. Other forms of discrimination have been held unlawful.

The Board has employed the device of an election by secret ballot under Government supervision, when the employer has questioned the authority of any agency to act as the representative of employees. The Board has held that the manner of conducting an election is entirely within the discretion of the employees, and that the employer in no way can interfere with the conduct of the election conduct of the election.

Form of contract

The Board has approved various forms of contract for designation of the collective-bargaining agency chosen by the employees. In the absence of agreement by the parties, the Board has recommended that the collective agreement be made by the employer and the agency, as representative of the employees.

Interference

The Board has condemned interference with the rights guaranteed employees by section 7 (a). Such interference may take various forms, such as discriminatory discharges, initiation of company unions, participation in its affairs, restrictions upon the qualification of representatives, etc.

Jurisdictional disputes

Where, in the construction of Government projects, the conflicting labor organizations are unable to settle the dispute by negotiation or are unwilling to submit the dispute to a board of arbitration, or where the American Federation of Labor has failed to adjust the controversy, the employer may then determine which union shall receive the disputed work.

Majority rule

The representatives selected by the majority of the employees within a given plant or department are the sole collective bargaining agency for the plant or department.

Preferential list

In a ruling terminating a strike, the Board has frequently recommended that an employer, if business conditions do not permit him to reinstate the strikers at once, should place them on a preferential list and reinstate them in order of seniority before hiring any new employees.

Reinstatement

ommended reinstatement of all strikers at the conclusion of a strike, if business conditions permit, and the division of work wherever possible.

Representatives of their own choosing

The employees may select any representatives whom they choose as their agents for the purposes of collective bargaining. The employer may not restrict their right of free choice in any way. Representatives may not be restricted to fellow employees. Since the word "representatives" in section 7 (a) is used in its generic sense, employees may select a union as their representative.

Seniority

Reinstatement and placing on a preferential list in order of seniority after a strike have frequently been recommended in order to avoid all question of possible discrimination.

Violence

The Board has ruled that striking employees who have been proven guilty of violence in the course of a strike need not be reinstated

Written agreement

The Board has often recommended that agreements which are reached between employers and employees should be reduced to writing in order to establish certainty and good will.

1,750,000 WORKERS IN LABOR BOARD SETTLEMENTS

1,750,000 WORKERS IN LABOR BOARD SETTLEMENTS

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER made public today statistical summaries of the work of the National Labor Board and 19 regional labor boards from their inception up to June 1, 1934.

"The summaries show that of over 2,000,000 workers directly affected by labor board cases", Senator WAGNER said, "an estimated 1,750,000 have been returned to work, or kept at work, or had their other disputes adjusted.

"There was a total of 3,755 cases, of which 3,061, or 80 percent, were settled by the boards. Approximately two-thirds of these settlements were agreements, and agreements spell sound settlements.

"The boards mediated 1,323 strikes, involving 870,000 workers, not counting many more thousands directly affected. Three-fourths of these strikes were settled. In addition, 497 strikes were averted. Thus, the boards in strike situations alone returned to work or kept at work 1,270,000 workers directly involved, or about 1,500,000 including workers directly affected.

"Moreover, the boards reinstated 10,000 men found to have been discriminated against and unjustly discharged.

"Of the 3,755 cases, the primary cause of complaint in 2,655 cases was alleged violation of section 7 (a), the collective-bargaining provision of the recovery law."

[Excerpt from N.R.A., release no. 2792, Jan. 17, 1934] NATIONAL LABOR BOARD SUMMONS NATIONAL LOCK CO. TO HEARING

The original complaint of the workers was that the company refused to negotiate for collective bargaining, in violation of section 7 (a) of the recovery law, while continuing to fly the Blue Eagle. Subsequently the strikers complained that the company was setting up a company union.

LABOR BOARD DECIDES DRESNER (CHICAGO) CASE

From the text of the Board's decision:

"Since the strike, a company union has been formed. At the hearings before the National Labor Board, the attorneys for the company claimed authorship of the plan of employee representation under which the company union was established. It is patent that the new union is the creature of the company and not of its employees. Under the plan the workers are restricted to the selection of representatives from their own ranks. Moreover, a representative must have been in the company's employ for at least a period of 1 year; upon leaving the company's employ his term of office ceases. The management has equal voice and voting power in all matters coming before the joint committee which administers the plan and can veto any changes in or amendments ing power in all matters coming before the joint committee which administers the plan and can veto any changes in or amendments to the plan. It is difficult to conceive of a more effective method of frustrating the rights of the employees to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. Section 7 (a) of the National Recovery Act would soon become a meaningless scroll if such plans of employee representation, formulated in the midst of a strike, were to be countenanced."

> [Excerpt from N.R.A. release no. 3062, Feb. 1, 1934] NATIONAL LABOR BOARD HEARS NORGE CASE (MICHIGAN)

Maurice Sugar, counsel for the Federal Union, traced the history of what he described as attempts of the company to force the men to join a company union. He said at a hearing before the Detroit Regional Board, Mr. Blood, president of the company, had agreed to hold an election under auspices of the union, but despite the fact that the board had found the old employee-representation plan of the company was in violation of the law the regional board decided by a vote of 6 to 5 not to order an election. election

(CHICAGO)

The company's attorney answered as follows: "With respect to your ultimatum and the three points set forth in your letter which must be acceded to, we have the following to say: (1) A. Roth & Co. has no need for the 23 employees who left its employ and will not reemploy them, nor will it discharge the 7 new employees who were taken in their places. (2) A. Roth & Co. will permit its employees to hold an election under the supervision of your board and let them choose by secret ballot their representatives to deal with the company, provided that only employees now on the pay roll will be eligible to vote, and provided that the representative chosen is an employee of A. Roth & Co. (3) A. Roth & Co. will abide by the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act insofar as it is able to do so and remain in business." remain in business."

remain in business."

The record reveals a studied effort on respondent's part to negate the rights conferred upon its employees by section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act. The statute imposes no restrictions on the choice of representatives. The workers may select whomsoever they please to represent them in bargaining collectively with their employers. The mandate of the law is clear and unequivocal. The wording of the statute leaves no room for reservation or qualification. It is for Congress and not the employer to rewrite the law. Whether employees shall be represented by fellow workers or by outsiders is a question for them alone to determine and the attempts of respondent to limit their freedom of choice are interdicted by the law.

The union felt it had not been organized to assist its members toward joining the unemployed." He said immediately following the organization of the union, or on September 27, 1933, "the company originated the idea of a social and athletic club, as the source of 'information' in regard to 'working conditions." On October 9, 1933, this company union, he said, was created. Although the chairman of this association, William Wright, suggested resigning to join the union, "he has not done so, and he has kept his job."

Replying to charges brought before the National Labor Board today by representatives of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, that the Republic Steel Corporation was fostering a company union at his Birmingham division, Thomas F. Veach, counsel for the company, testified that "our position is that of the steel industry generally and we will take such steps as lawfully necessary to uphold the employees' representative plan."

Questioned by Pierre S. du Pont, who acted as chairman, whether the employees had "absolute control of the plan", Mr. Veach replied that while the men had power to "initiate changes", they could not change the fact that the company has representatives on the control committee functioning under the system. There is equal representation of company and employees on this committee, but full attendance with two-thirds' vote is necessary committee, but full attendance with two-thirds' vote is necessary to effectuate any action by the committee.

Mr. du Pont further asked if the company would be willing to "retire from the committee, in order to perfect the plan for holding an election." He asked: "You would rather do that than to have the plan thrown out and an entirely new one put in, wouldn't you?" William P. Belden, of Cleveland, Ohio, another counsel for the company, replied, "I want to tell you what we lawyers would recommend to our executives upon that point." He said the Weirton plan has been changed in this direction, and he would recommend it here. First, he suggested that the qualification of a year's employment for a worker committee representative be suspended during the life of the N.I.R.A., and, secondly, that while joint committees may consider all matters, company representatives on such committees may have no vote, leaving determination "solely" to the elected worker committee members. However, Counsel Belden said this question "is purely academic here."

Thereafter he said secret hallots were held by the men to

Thereafter, he said, secret ballots were held by the men to choose representatives, with more than 90 percent of the men at the Raimund mine and Thomas furnace voting. While the plan contained a restriction that in order to be eligible to vote a man must be employed for at least 90 days, Veach said "this was not enforced." He said no "outside" names were posted on the ballots and the men "did not desire to have any outsiders to represent them."

Act

to represent them."

The plan worked satisfactorily for several months "with no strife or trouble among the men" until "officers of the union who were not employees of the company" called upon company officials and presented complaints "which were admitted on all sides to be of no great importance." Following refusal to recognize these men, he said, a strike was called on December 17 and following that a hearing at Atlanta on January 17, where "the union officials claimed the right to represent the men by reason of certain so-called 'petitions', which purported to bear the signature of most of the employees." Following this hearing, he said, the strike had been called off "without prejudice to the company or to the union." He denied the validity of the petitions and stated the company "owes a moral duty to recognize the representatives duly elected by the men in their election last June by secret ballot." He said another election was scheduled for this June, when all questions as "to who should represent the men can and will be settled in an orderly fashion."

Veach maintained there was no dispute with the employees,

Veach maintained there was no dispute with the employees, but "there is simply an attempt on the part of the American Federation of Labor to enlist all of our workmen in its organization, and it seems to us there is present a gigantic attempt on the part of the American Federation of Labor to create in itself a monopoly of labor throughout the United States of America in violation of the prohibitions of the National Industrial Recovery

Mr. du Pont pointed out that "it seems quite important under the act that the company should separate itself from the com-mittee." He then asked if it were considered "material to keep mittee." He then asked if it were considered "material to keep management membership on the committee, as well as surrendering the voting power of management representatives." Beginning that "as a general thing, for the purpose of proper contact, the company should have membership on the committee." In reply to a further question Belden said he did not believe this to be in conflict with the law. "It is only due the employer", he said, "that he should have representatives who sit on committees."

George L. Googe, of Atlanta, representing the Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers' Union, told the Board the strike had occurred in Raimund because of nonrecognition of the union and oppresin Raimund because of nonrecognition of the union and oppression of minor officials in the mine. He said the strike vote has not been taken in the Thomas Furnace pending the National Labor Board's decision. He read a detailed analysis of the plan as effectuated by the company, claiming that among other things, it prevents recall of representatives by the workers, permits management control of committee tie votes and personnel of the committee. Under the plan the system of handling grievances was long drawn out, he said, and did not permit collective action until permission was granted by the management. He introduced affidavits from workers purporting to show oppressive tactics to induce workers to relinquish the outside union and join the company union. He told the Board that the "stalling tactics" of the Republic Co. in this case had become general with other industries in the South and that the workers were resenting it. tries in the South and that the workers were resenting it.

The genesis of the strike is to be found in the opposition of the company to the attempts of the Brotherhood to unionize this plant. Late in October an organizer of the Brotherhood was ejected from the premises of the company. Mr. Corcoran, one of the owners, immediately decided to conduct an election and personally prepared a ballot, reading as follows:

"Do you wish to be represented in all matters pertaining to labor, prices, and conditions by a shops crew committee of your own choosing?"

The workers were given 2 hours' notice of the election. The ballot was explained to them by the foremen, who had received their instructions from the superintendent of the plant. The vote their instructions from the superintendent of the plant. The vote was 115 in favor of such representation and 92 opposed. There appears to have been no request for an election from the workers; the idea of a poll originated with the management; the arrangements were made by the company and the form of the ballot, as stated, was prepared by one of the owners. There thus was no self-organization of employees; the balloting and organization was dictated and superimposed by the management with a haste that can only be characterized as unseemly.

[Excerpts from N.R.A. release no. 3433—Feb. 23, 1934] LABOR BOARD RULES IN NATIONAL LOCK CASE (ILLINOIS

The Board finds "that the National Lock Co. interfered with its employees' right to organize to bargain collectively", and rules that the strike shall be called off and strikers placed on a preferential list and that an election shall be held under the supervision of the National Labor Board, employees on the new roll of August 21 to be included in these places. pay roll of August 31 to be included in those eligible to vote.

The formation of the employees' representation plan was described in considerable detail by the witnesses for the company at the hearing before this Board. An election was held within the plant for the choice of employee representatives on October 3. This plan was promulgated by the company and was explained to the employees less than an hour before the election. A meeting of the employees in each department was called by the management. The works manager admitted that he had not only selected these who were to explain the plan to the employees. ing of the employees in each department was called by the management. The works manager admitted that he had not only selected those who were to explain the plan to the employees, but that he had also explained it himself in several of the departments of the plant. All of the employees were instructed to vote. Section 7-a was not read to them, and they were not afforded an opportunity to pass upon any other form of organization or representation. Nominations were oral. The judges of the election were selected by the employees. Various officials of the company called off the names of the employees as they proceeded to the ballot box. The ballot itself was secret, but the company officials were in a position to know whether or not an employee participated in the election. Immediately after the election the length of the terms of the individual representatives were fixed by pulling numbers out of a hat. The company not only proposed that the terms should vary from 1 to 3 years, but suggested and supervised the device which was employed to determine the length of each representative term. No constitution or bylaws were prepared for the plan either before the election or since, and no collective agreement with the management has ever been reached by the elected representatives. At ment has ever been reached by the elected representatives. least two of the elected representatives are assistant foremen.

During August 1933 the employees at the Berliner-Joyce and During August 1933 the employees at the Berliner-Joyce and General Aviation plants of the General Aviation Mfg. Corporation at Dundalk, Md., formed a Federal labor union and received a charter from the American Federation of Labor. Shortly after the companies became parties to the President's reemployment agreement, a committee selected by the union members of both plants protested against the new wage schedules which the company was putting into effect. A few days later the management posted notices containing an outline of a representation plan for the guidance of employees and requesting the selection of three posted notices containing an outline of a representation plan for the guidance of employees and requesting the selection of three committeemen for each plant. The proposed plan for the Berliner-Joyce factory limited the eligibility of representatives to those who "have at least 1 year's service in the Berliner-Joyce plant." A similar plan was suggested for the General Aviation factory but was not acted upon by the employees there. On September 29 the Berliner-Joyce workers, who were not offered an factory but was not acted upon by the employees there. On September 29 the Berliner-Joyce workers, who were not offered an express opportunity to accept or reject the plan itself, selected as their representatives the same persons who were members of the original union committee.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have already stated today my personal opposition to adjournment without further legislative action as suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, at Sparrows Point, Md., the plant of the Bethlehem Steel Co. is located. It is the largest single employer of labor in the State of Maryland. I hold in my hand a very significant letter sent by some of the employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co. at Sparrows Point, Md., which I ask the clerk to read very distinctly for the benefit of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I will yield before the reading of the letter.

Mr. WAGNER. May I ask the Senator whether the letter he presents is from members of a company union or of a regular labor union?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the reading of the letter will answer the Senator's question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read as

The legislative clerk read as follows:

SPARROWS POINT, MD., June 15, 1934.

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,

United States Senator, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: As the duly elected representatives of the employees of the Maryland plant of the Bethlehem Steel Co., chosen in an election conducted by the employees, in which 86 percent of our working forces, or a total of 9,553 employees, 86 percent of our working forces, or a total of 9,563 employees, participated, we are very much concerned over the threatened strike, at some plants of a certain group of employees for union recognition. The workmen at this plant are not in sympathy with this proposed strike, and we feel that the large group of employees, who are working under satisfactory relations with our employers, are being misrepresented in Washington. The plan of employees' representation has been functioning at this plant for 17 years and furnishes us with a highly satisfactory method for the settlement of the various problems arising in our employment relations. ment relations.

ment relations.

From the impression we get from the press articles coming out of Washington, the entire labor situation appears to be greatly clouded by misinformation, and if the absolute truth were told by everybody concerned in the present labor controversy, our plan of employees' representation would need no defense.

The employees' representatives at Sparrows Point, and the workers in this plant, are convinced that our plan is entirely satisfactory, and that the present strike threat has been fomented by men who have done so for strictly selfish reasons.

We cannot conceive that a strike order would have any effect on our local operations, but we fear that the general situation would curtail orders coming into this plant, and work a hardship on our employees who are enjoying steady work and get-ship on our employees who are enjoying steady work and getting out of the debt, accumulated during the depression. With the improvement in steel operations, we are more concerned now in maintained employment for the men we represent than in trying out any new scheme whereby outsiders will have a voice trying out any new scheme whereby outsiders will have a voice in the affairs, which we are competent, through our present machinery, to settle ourselves.

We earnestly entreat you not to be misled by those men who are doing the most taiking, and who claim to represent the working men in the steel industry.

We are against the closed shop. We have not been discriminated against if we wanted to join a union, but we seriously object to the making of any man join a union in order to get a job.

Our men are very inexperienced in the matter of strikes, this plant having been remarkably free from labor difficulties in the past, and we sincerely hope that we may be allowed to continue to carry on as we are now doing.

Very sincerely,

Chas. H. Weaver, Chairman General Body of Employees Representatives. Albert Crew, Secretary General Body of Employees Representatives.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, that letter speaks for itself. While I am not in a position of having intimate knowledge as to conditions at Sparrows Point, I have every reason to believe that the letter expresses the untrammeled and actual sentiment of the employees of that plant who in normal times number about 12,000 to 14,000.

Mr. President, I also have another letter-

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I wish to assure the Senator that the legislation which has been proposed in no way interferes with the workers in any plant who agree or decide upon any plan of representation they choose. The only purpose of the legislation which is proposed is to make the worker free from any interference or coercion in determining what particular form of representation he desires.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in that connection the letter I am about to read is very pertinent and I ask the particular attention of the Senator from New York. The letter was written to me by a college classmate of mine who has not reached a great deal of eminence in the Republic Steel Corporation, but he is an employee. The letter is written in a very intimate vein, and I know it is written in candor and honesty. I shall not read it all. This is what he says, in part:

I hesitate to again bother you about labor legislation, but as

I hesitate to again bother you about labor legislation, but as this question is of such paramount importance to the recovery and well-being of our country, I am again taking the liberty of expressing our views on our President's "labor disputes bill."

As far as employers and employees are concerned, this new act is nothing more nor less than the Wagner bill, as we read it. This great tempest stirred up in the country about the steel strike is one of the greatest pieces of racketeering which I have yet seen. I am going to cite just a few instances to indicate the real sentiment of the majority of the employees in the steel mills. Our Buffalo plant, employing about 3,400 men, voted for the employees' representation plan, which is a vote against labor unions, practically unanimously on Tuesday of this week. The exact percentage voting was 98.17. About 2 weeks ago a number of organizers from the Amalgamated Association called a meeting in Madison Hall for the purpose of organizing the Republic Steel plants in Buffalo. The story of their success is a matter of newpaper record, as the only notice taken of its meeting on the part of our employees was that 12 out of the 15 attending voiced their disapproval of unions in general, asked to be left alone, and for the organizers to leave town. On being told by one of the Amalgamated speakers from Youngstown that if they did not have "guts" enough to go on strike they would send a crew up from Youngstown and picket their plant and force them out, one of our workmen told them that they would do so on their own responsibility and that some of them would get badly hurt in the attempt. Our men then left the meeting.

As a result of these activities, the Buffalo newspapers interviewed the employee representatives of our Buffalo plant and own responsibility and that some of them would get badly flure in the attempt. Our men then left the meeting.

As a result of these activities, the Buffalo newspapers interviewed the employee representatives of our Buffalo plant and published a very favorable report on the fairness and popularity of the representative plan in Buffalo, and also visited our plants on Tuesday, June 12, when our men held their nominations, and again published very favorable reports on the fairness with which these elections were conducted by the workers.

In our Youngstown plant, where the men voted 98.4 percent on nominations, even though literature of all kinds was handed to the men going to work, urging them not to vote, and stickers were supplied them to paste on the ballots to the effect that they were not voting for the "plan", the men still voted as indicated above, and according to the workmen who counted the votes only 3 or 4 stickers were found out of the 5,800 ballots cast. Representatives of Youngstown newspapers, through arrangements resentatives of Youngstown newspapers, through arrangements which they made through our representatives, were present at this election and reported that a very fair election was being conducted by the workmen, without any interference by people in a supervisory capacity.

In our corporation as a whole over 25,000 men (88.7 percent) voted for the "plan."

I am very familiar with the conditions in practically all the steel plants in this country, and I can assure you that the workmen in the mills are being paid as high rates as the companies can afford to pay, they are being fairly dealt with universally, the employees' representation plans are being used justly and fairly, and there is no need having legislation of any kind other than the N.I.R.A., which is now on the statute books, to bring about a better understanding or more harmony than now exists. Trying to force labor unions into the steel mills is bound to lead to trouble and strife of all kinds, as the majority of the men in the mills do not want to be forced into carrying out the wishes or desires of men not particularly interested in their welfare, but who are only trying to build and maintain for themselves lucrative positions as agitators, delegates, and heads of labor unions. Do not be overly concerned about a steel strike. The men in the mills, with very few exceptions, want to work, are satisfied with their foremen, superintendents, working conditions, rates of pay, etc. It is a miserable shame that conditions are being developed through experimentation which may throw thousands of men out of work and create great suffering in order to create jobs for a few delegates, agitators, and union heads. If the administration would put just a little of the energy which they are expending on the Labor Board in the preservation of law and order; if they would investigate the number of houses dynamited by strikers in the South: if they would investigate the case where if they would investigate the number of houses dynamited by strikers in the South; if they would investigate the case where one of our workmen was removed from a street car in Alabama and beaten to death just 4 days ago by strikers, the labor problem and recovery, as far as labor problems are concerned, would be quickly solved.

Mr. President, I have had one letter read and I have read the other one myself, for the purpose of making this observation. I think on the one hand and in many cases the employers have not permitted, perhaps, those who work for them to express a free and untrammeled opinion. On the other hand. I think the labor unions have tried in many cases to force men to join unions who actually did not want to do so. What I am fearful of is that under the terms of the measure now before us we will open an avenue which will coerce many laboring men to join organizations or not to join, as the case may be, when they ought to have a right to join or not to join whatever organization they see fit.

Mr. SCHALL obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the Senator from Minnesota proceeds, will he yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SCHALL. I yield. Mr. WALSH. I should like to make an observation about the letter which has just been read. The letter which the Senator from Maryland read is similar to hundreds of letters that all Members of the Senate have received. It is undoubtedly true that groups of employees attempt to exercise great pressure on their fellow employees to join a particular union. It is undoubtedly true that even where a majority of the employees have decided upon an independent or company union, a minority of the employees seek to prevent it and even go to the extent of striking.

The whole trouble in the problem is that any remedy which forbids or attempts to prevent a man from striking, any injunction or any law that prevents a man from striking, is a step to inflame, is a law of servitude, and that is the principle we have to keep in mind. It is the difference between freedom and servitude. A man has a right to work or not to work.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. In a moment. Men have a right to work collectively or not. We cannot prevent strikes unless we attempt to make men work and put a harness on their backs and drive them into the shop. What we can do-

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WALSH. In just a moment. What we can do is to create a board or boards in which the public will have confidence, in which the employees and the employers will have confidence, who can hear the disputes and try to adjudicate them. There is nothing in the proposed law that discriminates between a company union and a trade union. There is nothing to compel a man to join any union. There is nothing to compel employees to organize at all. What there is in the proposed law is a provision that if a group of employees want to organize they shall be permitted to do so without interference, without coercion, without force upon the part of the employers.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SCHALL. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Massachusetts drew the picture that it is wrong to compel a man to work who does not want to work. It is equally wrong to compel a man to strike who does not want to strike.

Mr. WALSH. No man is compelled to strike who does not want to strike.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator knows that when men go to work, quite often the places are picketed because those who do not want to work or have some grievance against the company do not want others to go to work.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

Mr. LONG. I make the point of order that the Senator from Minnesota has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I thought the Senator from Minnesota had yielded to the Senator from Massachusetts and to the Senator from Maryland.

PROCESSING TAXES ON LIVESTOCK

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SCHALL. Yes. Mr. CAPPER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, for the information of the Senate and the country, a letter I have just received from Mr. Joe H. Marcer. secretary of the Kansas State Livestock Association: also copies of resolutions adopted by the Lyon and Coffey County Pomona Grange, a resolution adopted by the Pomona Grange of Coffey County, and a resolution signed by 69 members of the Kansas Farmers' Union at Centralia, Kans.

This letter and these resolutions, Mr. President, protest against the imposition of any processing tax on cattle at this time. They also urge that the present processing tax on hogs be either abolished entirely, or reduced to a nominal amount. I am in hearty accord with their stand on the matter

I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that the Agricultural Adjustment Administration will pay careful heed to these protests, which are only a few of the many I have received in the last few weeks. I am speaking as one who realizes the sincerity of purpose of those in charge of the A.A.A., and who has supported a large part of the program for the relief and rehabilitation of agriculture, when I state that processing taxes on livestock are not popular with the livestock people, and I will say frankly, so far have not proved effective in bettering market prices for livestock.

The success of any such program depends not only upon the basic soundness of the program itself but also upon the cooperation of the farm groups interested in making it successful.

I believe it is becoming increasingly evident that the processing tax on perishable commodities, especially livestock, is not working out as had been planned and hoped by its sponsors. The processors so far, at least, have been able to pass the processing tax on hogs back to the producers, thereby defeating one of the major objectives of the tax, and thereby also defeating the intent of Congress in granting to the A.A.A. the power to levy these taxes. What has happened in the case of hogs leads to the conclusion that the program itself is not basically sound. Of course, this is not a final conclusion, but nearly everything that has happened leads toward such a conclusion.

On the other proposition-namely, the necessity for whole-hearted cooperation from the producers to make any such plan succeed-it seems perfectly plain that the great majority of the cattlemen are opposed to any processing taxes being levied on cattle at this time. It seems also plain, from the letters and telegrams which I have received, that a considerable proportion, very likely a considerable majority, of the hog raisers are by now convinced that the processing taxes are working to their disadvantage.

Under these circumstances I feel not only justified but also compelled to add my protest to those protests I have received from Kansans and Kansas organizations against the imposition of any processing tax on cattle at this time, and to urge a reduction, at least, of the processing tax on hogs.

I send the letter and the resolutions to the desk to be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter and resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,

Hon. Arthur Capper,

United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

Dear Senator Capper: While writing I am calling your attention again to the demoralized condition of the prices of hogs. I am still at a loss to understand why the Agricultural Department does not modify its order with respect to the amount of the processing tax on hogs. It is contended by the agricultural administration that benefits that will soon go to the hog producers of this country will in a way be satisfactory to the hog producers. This is a sad mistake. Of course, the benefits that will come eventually to some of our hog producers will in a measure be satisfactory, but a very large percentage of our hog producers in Kansas, as far as I know, have already lost more money on the fat hogs they have sold than any benefit can replace.

Furthermore, there is more than likely a wrong conception of the idea of the number of farmers that will receive benefits under the lines of the number of farmers that will receive benefits under the hog-corn program. I was advised by Dean Umberger, of the Kansas State College, who has charge of the hog-corn program in Kansas, that on May 24, approximately 79,900 farmers had signed the application papers to participate under the hog-corn program, but that less than 6,000 of these hog-corn application papers had been completed. In other words, there would be less than 6,000 farmers that would be entitled to any benefits until their hog-corn program had been completed.

I know personally of several farmers that have signed the first papers, or application papers, that will not sign a completed program. There are a lot of technicalities in this hog-corn program, and they are sent back for correction, and many farmers program, and they are sent back for correction, and many farmers become dissatisfied and refuse to go on with the program.

Am calling your attention to this matter for the reason that the A.A.A. organization is basing this tremendous tax of $2.25 in anticipation of papers contracted by the Government, many of which will never be completed. Therefore it seems to me that in justice to the hog producers of this country they should be receiving now at least $1.25 per hundred direct for their hogs more than they are now receiving. That would leave $1 of the tax going to the Government, and even though the dollar would not raise sufficient funds with which to meet the Government's obligations in benefits, perhaps the program could be prolonged and raise sufficient funds with which to meet the Government's obligations in benefits, perhaps the program could be prolonged and extended out over a longer period of time.

According to the press there are protests going to Washington from every source in connection with this processing tax on hogs, and I think it is of that consequence that Congress should give its attention. If there was no tax on hogs the hog feeder would be receiving anywhere from 5 to 6 cents a pound for his hogs instead of from 2½ to 4 cents.

I trust you will continue your efforts with Secretary Wallace and Chester Davis, Administrator of the A.A.A., in having this processing tax on hogs reduced to at least $1 per hundred. I have contended that the tax should be reduced to 50 cents a hundred and then increase quarterly. To handle the tax in this manner the Department in a few months from now will know more about the total amount of the tax needed to meet the benefit obligations of the Government. I opposed the processing tax on hogs as a member of the hog-corn conference committee of 25, considered it member of the hog-corn conference committee of 25, considered it unsound, and it certainly has proven a failure and has been an unreasonable charge upon the hog industry up to the present time.

Yours very truly,

J. H. MERCER, Secretary.

We the undersigned farmers knowing the processing tax on hogs to be a burden to us and believing it to be retarding recovery, hereby request that this tax be abolished.

We further favor the payments on the corn and hog contracts be made pro rata of total amount of tax already collected. Further, we do not favor a processing tax on cattle, and we are strongly opposed to any compulsory control of agricultural production.

The above signed by 69 members of the Kansas Farmers Union, Centralia, Kans.

DEAR SIR:

"Resolved, That we are opposed to any processing tax on cattle, we ask that this expression from this body be given your careful attention in your deliberation on this subject. We are firmly of the opinion that any processing tax on beef at this time will react to the detriment of the present strong cattle market and thus bring heavy losses to many already hard-hit cattlemen. The farmers represented at this meeting were willing to wait until the plan has been given a more conclusive trial on other commodities."

Thank you.

The Coffey County Pomona Grange, of Coffey County, Kans., in session this 2d day of June, unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we are opposed to any processing tax on cattle. We ask that this expression from this body be given your careful attention in your deliberation on this subject. We are firmly of the opinion that any processing tax on beef at this time will react to the detriment of the present strong cattle market and thus bring heavy losses to many already hard-hit cattlemen. Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask the aid of the clerk to help me place in the RECORD a speech upon censorship. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SCHALL. I yield.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether that which he desires to insert in the RECORD is an address prepared by himself, or whether he is seeking to have inserted an article from some newspaper.

Mr. SCHALL. It is an address prepared by myself. Mr. KING. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. SCHALL. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota that the clerk read his address?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I assume that the fact that there is no objection will not prevent any Senator from raising any question if there is anything improper in the address. After some things that have been placed in the RECORD, I do not desire at this time to agree to have anything put in the RECORD without an understanding in advance that any Senator shall have a right to raise a question of propriety as to whether or not any part of the address violates the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair will not prejudge an issue that has not yet arisen. A motion is always in order to expunge from the RECORD.

Is there objection to the reading by the clerk of the speech of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SCHALL. I think I have the right to the service of the clerk's sight. Other Senators have their sight and use it plenty in filling the RECORD. In all justice there should be no rule of the Senate requiring the consent of anyone in this Senate and why have I not the right with the aid of the clerk to read my remarks into the RECORD just as every other Member of the Senate does without creating such consternation in the Democratic ranks? I stand back of my written remarks just as I stand back of spoken remarks, and if there is any objection or anyone who wants them verified or further explained, I am here to take on the job. In the mood I am, concerning the actions of this administration, in its evident purpose to censor the press and radio and clog all avenues of information to the people of what is going on behind the scenes at Washington, I might, if speaking extemporaneously, say what is in my heart and mind in reference to the coup d'etat being prepared by this administration in unparliamentary language, and I have, therefore, in order to save time and the feelings of the Democrats, reduced my remarks to writing and have asked the clerk to read them. Is that any crime? I cannot understand why Democrats are so zealous to direct the course of my speech or the exercise of my right of free speech, whether it be spoken or written.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if any Senator objects to the clerk reading the remarks, I will read them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I agree entirely with the Senator from Minnesota. I think he is entitled to have his address read, subject, of course, to the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the address will be read.

Mr. SCHALL. As I take it, an objection is not in order. I have the floor, and I certainly have the right to the use of the sight of the clerk without "if you please" to anyone. Perhaps, if such a rule can be possible, it will be necessary for me to ask some of my Republican colleagues to loan me their sight. It is hard to understand why so much attention is paid to me by the Democrats.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SCHALL. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure no one objects to the Senator inserting in the Record some matter, or having some matter read.

Mr. SCHALL. I should think not. I use very little space in the RECORD, comparatively.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator has had read some utterances that reflect very grossly upon certain people, and really violated the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SCHALL. I do not intend to violate any rules, and I do not believe I have violated any rules in my past utterances. I have spoken the truth as I see it in reference to the personnel of this administration and I intend to continue to do so, for God knows there was never a time in the history of our country when plain speaking was so imperative of what is going on here at Washington in taking from the people their Republic and substituting instead a Russian or Italian dictatorship as there is today.

Almost every bill we have passed this session has contained a censorship either directly or indirectly and has in itself constituted a dictatorship. In the last special session 77 powers were filched from the judiciary and Congress by this administration under the guise of emergency which the administration now wants made permanent. Somebody, somewhere, ought to speak; and if it does hurt, I am sorry, for I place the welfare of my country above the welfare of any party.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will permit me, he may criticize as much as he wants to, but the poll of the Literary Digest shows that in the Senator's own State he is very much in the minority.

Mr. SCHALL. That may be very true, but if the people of this country had not had all the avenues of information clogged as to what is going on here and had not been fed just what the administration wants them to be fed, the poll of the Literary Digest would tell a different story, because if the voters had the truth, there would be an understanding of the design and purpose of an ultimate dictatorship of this administration, which they would not tolerate if they knew. Somebody, somewhere, must speak, and since the Senate is the only place left in Congress where free speech is still prevalent, I shall attempt to do what little I can to call attention of the people of my country to conditions as they are.

Mr. HARRISON. The other side has a very poor spokesman in the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SCHALL. I am not judging as to that. In that case the Senator from Mississippi ought not to object to the Senator from Minnesota speaking.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not objecting. The Senator is doing the Democratic Party a great service. We hope he will continue. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHALL. I shall continue to speak the truth as I see it and if the people are able to get just an inkling of what is going on, I think it will be found that the administration has obliterated the Democratic Party. No one of any other party needs to injure the Democratic Party. They are doing it themselves in the dictatorship they have established.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SCHALL. I think I will make my speech, and then I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. GORE. Let me ask the Senator a question. We had up yesterday a joint resolution designed to save the small packing houses. I understand that a different program has been worked out that will take care of that situation; but the amendment is to be attached to a House bill, and it will have to go back to the House for the concurrence of the House. I was wondering if the Senator would yield for a moment to see if we cannot take care of that situation.

Mr. SCHALL. This is just a short address.

Mr. GORE. Very well.

Mr. FESS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. GORE. I am going to insist on some action in regard to this packing-house matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read the address.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WHEN THE KING CONTROLS THE PRESS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, at the city of St. Paul, the capital of my State, the American Newspaper Guild, a new national organization of news writers, was recently assembled in its second annual convention.

On June 7 Jonathan Eddy, the guild secretary, wired the American Publishers Association, New York, urging the joint opposition of the publishers and the news writers against section 606 of the Rayburn communications bill. I hereby ask, Mr. President, consent to publish in the Record the text of that message as given both in the New York Herald Tribune and the St. Paul Dispatch.

Without free channels of information-

Reads the message of the American Newspaper Guild—there can be no guaranty of liberty and the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of this Republic becomes a naked fraud.

Again .

Enactment of the quoted provision would place in the hands of one man the power to dam these channels or to transform reporting facilities into a grotesque propaganda machine, thereby frankly prostituting our calling, which, potentially honorable, has already suffered the shame of thinly cloaked commercial control.

Yet again:

Nothing could protect the American people from being cajoled and browbeaten into war to sacrifice precious lives for filthy profits or from helplessness to call a halt upon ruthless slaughter once begun.

Still quoting, Mr. President, and may I take the liberty to add that the party majority in control of this Senate does well to heed this warning by the news writers of America assembled in national convention:

The American Newspaper Guild by its convention condemns section 606 (c) of the Rayburn communications bill as un-American and inhuman, an irresistible invitation to dictatorship in its ugliest form.

Mr. President, Senators will recall that the older commercial organization, the American Publishers Association, has already gone on record against the press code of the N.R.A. Their fight is that the press code interferes with the freedom of the press. They ask that article I of the Bill of Rights, guaranteeing that no law or no secret subterfuge to secure the effect of such a law, shall be passed abridging freedom of speech and freedom of the press, shall be set up by the Government as a basic interpretation of the N.R.A. press code. Their petition has been denied by the administration.

There is a natural difference in viewpoint as between the publishers and the news writers. It is the natural difference in viewpoint as between the employers and the employed. Publishing is a commercial enterprise. The publisher derives revenue from propaganda. The writer, on the other hand, gets only his wage or his space rate. The writer's concern, aside from his wage, is that the public shall get the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help him God. The sale and suppression of the news article, as well as the censorship and coloring of the news by the business office to meet the forced political policy of the Government and the ends of Federal publicity is. therefore, denounced by the American Newspaper Guild as a "naked fraud", "the shame of thinly cloaked commercial control", a system to transform reporting facilities into a grotesque political propaganda machine, "an irresistible invitation to dictatorship in its ugliest form "-a system at once "un-American and inhuman."

I cannot conceive, Mr. President, how any Senator, if he divests himself of his political interest, his affinity for administration patronage, and the appropriation hog trough, can doubt in his inner consciousness that this message of the news writers of America to the publishers of America speaks the truth.

If we cannot see the truth by looking into our hearts and conscience, because of our party feeling and our political interest in control of news, we can at least see the truth of what the American Newspaper Guild tells us, when we read the history of press censorship in early England, in Rome under Mussolini, in the history of Bourbon France, and the later history of press domination in Soviet Russia.

British censorship of the press in the days of John Wilkes started a revolution throughout England and was partly responsible for emigration to America. Thomas Jefferson, who one time was worshiped in this country as the founder of Democracy with a big "D"—though not today, "Alas, alas, and Alaska", as the old ditty runs—had in mind the presecution of John Wilkes, John Milton's defense of free printing, and Lord Glenville's attempt to throttle the press in order to stem the rise of American independence, when he wrote article I of the American Bill of Rights calling for the rights of free speech and the freedom of the press. Under free speech and a free press George III could not hold in subjection the freemen of the Thirteen American Colonies.

Mr. President, let the majority here remember that what happened on American soil on July 4 may also happen on the second Tuesday in November. It is not easy to throttle independence in America. That was shown when a certain administration tried it in a crude way on the old printing office of Lovejoy and again at the office of William Lloyd Garrison in Boston.

An administration may think that it controls the press when it imposes an N.R.A. press code with Crack-Up Johnson to enforce the code. Let Johnson beware of the fate of Lord Glenville. Even kings are compelled to change their minds. There was one time an archbishop who bewailed the fact that, if he had served his God as well as he served the king, he would not have been deserted at beheading time.

Does any Senator doubt that censorship of news communications is un-American? When Garrison declared, "I will not yield an inch, and I will be heard", did he not speak the truth? You can hear it yet ringing through the Civil War and through Lincoln's speech at Gettysburg.

Mussolini still thinks that he became the permanent emperor of all Italy—a larger edition of Caesar—when on January 1, 1927, he clamped down a censorship on the press of Italy. But verily he is receiving his reward, for yesterday's press says that Mussolini or the Italian Government admits that economic conditions are worse in Italy than they have ever been before. And America is not yet, at least not in my Commonwealth, committed to the Fascisti program of press censorship, of farm domination, of N.R.A. monopoly, now reigning in Italy.

If this administration chooses—and one of its Cabinet members says "America must choose"—to set up Mussolini and his press censorship as a superior guide of new-deal democracy, a superman ranking above Thomas Jefferson, it is its political privilege, as it is the privilege of the Senate majority. But do not forget that the American people have memories. Tugwell and Moley of the "brain trust" may tell you that the ideas of '76 are forgotten. Article I of the American Bill of Rights they also forget.

As to the followers of Tugwell and Moley, that may be true in a way—or does it merely express a desire or a fear? But those memories and those convictions and the American common sense and common honesty behind the memories still prevail in every county in the States.

On July 4, 1934, you may not hear the Declaration of Independence read in any gathering of "brain-trust" orators. July 4 may well disappear as a national holiday of an administrative dictatorship. But in the farm hinterland of America, in the town halls and churches, in the village groves and schoolhouses, the ideas of 1776, the doctrine of article I, the call of Jefferson and Lincoln, will bring the people together on July 4, 1934, as on July 4 of every year since 1776. And the convictions of July 4 may be expressed in ballots in November.

No "crack-up" administration can do in America what the Glenville administration failed to do in England 200 years ago—permanently throttle the freedom of the press. Every attempt—the press code, the Rayburn bill, the censor—ship of the radio and telegraph, the suppression of public documents now in Government vogue—simply drives home to the people in the homes and plow furrows that censorship and suppression mean simply that there is something which the governing majority has to conceal.

No administration with a righteous cause wants press censorship or the throttling of the news.

No administration that is true to the principles of Thomas Jefferson has anything to conceal.

If you are aping Mussolini and are blind followers of a Moley, if you take Tugwell as your guide in place of Jefferson, you need a press censorship, lest something may happen in November. You need the press code of the N.R.A., so that the workmen of America may not discover that they are serfs of Crack-up Johnson.

You need what the American Newspaper Guild calls "un-American and inhuman", lest the people of the United States may read from now till November the accounts of the greatest wave of strikes and riots and incipient rebellion against dictatorial rule that has ever yet risen on American soil.

Put into force your force bills. Throttle the press with your press code. Strong-arm, by your new gag rule, both Houses of Congress. Prevent—as you did the other day the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson]—a Senator from discussing his own amendment. Force upon the country a censorship of press communications which, as denounced by the message of the American Newspaper Guild, is "an irresistible invitation to dictatorship in its ugliest form."

What do you accomplish in the end? You simply deepen the conviction in the public mind that you have something to conceal. Then they will want to know what those things are that you are hiding in fear.

They will dig up the old last year's almanac and find that you got their votes on the false pretext that your tariff making was to be "free from Executive interference."

They will read in the Congressional Record of January 3 the Executive message demanding that his executive emergency powers be made permanent—a demand that the temporary dictatorship shall be made permanent, which means good-bye to government by the people.

Your press censorship and your censorship of news communications will not prevent the public from reading the Budget message of January 4 in the Congressional Record—that the Treasury deficit is to go to $7,000,000,000 under new-deal financing, that the public debt is to go to $30,000,000,000 under "brain trust" bold experiment, that the Government monthly outgo now exceeds the yearly outgo during the administration of Theodore Roosevelt, that the disbursements of the new deal exceed the revenue receipts about 3 to 1, and that a year of this kind of recovery still leaves the farmer in bankruptcy and 10,000,000 unemployed and 2,000,000 still under Federal dole.

"No wonder those 'new dealers' need a press censorship" will be the popular verdict. They need an N.R.A. press code. They need a news censorship of communications, which has all been stealthily planned and arranged for in the just passed communications bill. They need a Crack-up Johnson—a new Lord Glenville. They need the administration mazagine of Moley, owned by Lord Admiral Astor. of the flagship Nourmahal.

Then they will read again that old article I, written by Thomas Jefferson—the guaranty of free speech and a free press. And they will recall John Milton, John Wilkes, and Garrison. And they will say:

"If 'America must choose', as a Cabinet member suggests, our choice for guidance would be Jefferson and Lincoln, Milton and Garrison, rather than the new-deal Tugwell-Moley bunch. As between the N.R.A. and the U.S.A., the old-fashioned U.S.A. is good enough for us. As between a doctored press and a free press, we prefer ours without doctors. As between the blue eagle of Russia and the old American banner, we choose the old red, white, and blue—the Stars and Stripes of our daddies, the emblem of the American Republic."

It is vital to the life of our Republic that my Resolution No. 248 or a similar resolution should be passed to appoint a committee of Senators to stand guard during the adjournment of Congress to protect the people in their right of freedom of the press and freedom of speech from the insidious underground methods being used by the administration and his left- and right-hand bowers to keep the facts from the bright rays of today's sun.

During the last extra session of Congress the administration filched from Congress and from the judiciary 77 powers. Almost every bill that has been before this Congress is in itself a little censorship, a little dictatorship, either giving the power directly to the President or lodging it in some trusted political henchman.

Make no mistake, it is the administration that is demanding censorship of the press, and his subordinates are only carrying out his desires.

Congressional records show that the first attempt by Roosevelt to censor the press was made on March 29, 1933, or 25 days after he assumed office. On that day there was introduced into the House of Representatives by Mr. Sum-NERS of Texas, House bill No. 4220, which provided a fine of $10,000 and 10 years' imprisonment for any publisher who dared to print any article concerning our Government, which was not passed as matter for publication by Roosevelt or one of his duly authorized agents. Under the whip of the President of the United States, the bill passed the House but that section relating to publishers was stricken out in the Senate.

Referring to the report of the Judiciary Committee of the House on this bill, I quote the following:

The executive branch (Roosevelt) of the Government has requested the enactment of this legislation at the earliest practicable date, and has satisfactorily demonstrated to the committee the need for it. The legislation is by its nature very properly auxiliary to the emergency legislation enacted and to be enacted by Congress at the present session.

Could anything be plainer or more definite as to the ultimate purpose? Roosevelt was asking for dictatorial powers over the Government, under the guise of emergency, and a censorship bill by which he could put any publisher in jail for 10 years who dared to critize any of his acts.

The Dill-Rayburn wire-control bill is the new wedge to censorship of the press of the United States. Under its provisions a committee of Congress is to report back to the next session Roosevelt's ideas of wire control. This bill places telegraph and telephone companies under the same restrictions as the radio. Everyone knows that the radio is censored by the Roosevelt administration.

The President desires censorship even more than he did in the first session when he demanded passage of the Sumners bill which made publishers liable to $10,000 fine and 10 years in prison for printing news matter not first approved by the President or his duly authorized agents. Even more now because if the truth is told to the people from now until election there will be returned an anti-Roosevelt Congress. Since the committee appointed under the Dill-Rayburn bill will be named by his agents, its report can be forecast in advance as favoring censorship of press dispatches.

Thus, for this reason alone if there were not plenty of others, the safety of the Nation lies in getting over to the voters of the Nation what is going on behind the governmental scenes. If our Republic is to endure, a vigorous campaign should be waged against every candidate who will not pledge himself to support article I of the Constitution of the United States. I am ready to go anywhere or do anything I can to help.

The press must be protected in its freedom. The newspapers are entirely too reticent about this matter, and the people must take it in hand for themselves, as their future liberty is all dependent on the right of a free press and free speech. These are the two essential weapons to get back for us the rights already stolen from us by this administration under the guise of "recovery." The new deal is a "double deal."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask if that concludes the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SCHALL, Yes.

Mr. McNARY. There seems to be a newspaper clipping. Mr. SCHALL. I ask unanimous consent to have the newspaper article printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The newspaper article is as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune]

The publishers made public a telegram from Jonathan Eddy, executive secretary of the guild, the organization of newspaper workers which is having its second national convention in St. Paul, and their reply.

The American Newspaper Guild in its convention here went on record unanimously today in opposition to section 606 (c) of the Rayburn communications bill. It unanimously voiced the opinion that, "without free channels of information there can be no guaranty of liberty and the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of this Republic becomes a naked fraud. can and inhuman, an irresistible invitation to dictatorship in its ugliest form. The Guild furthermore challenges the publishers who so loudly protest against section 3 (d) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, on the pretense that it interferes with freedom of the press, to cease their sham battle and engage with us in a real fight by insisting upon the defeat of this outrageous legislation.

This is addressed to you at the direction of the convention. Executive Secretary, American Newspaper Guild.

[From the St. Paul (Minn.) Dispatch, June 6, 1934]

GUILD ASSAILS RAYBURN BILL AS DIRE THREAT-CONVENTION CON-DEMNS COMMUNICATIONS MEASURE AS BLOW AT FREEDOM—PURPOSE CALLED WORTHY—PUBLISHERS REQUESTED TO CEASE SHAM BATTLE AND ENGAGE IN REAL FIGHT

The Rayburn communications bill, now in Congress, was condemned today as "most alarming and a dire threat to freedom" by the convention of the America Newspaper Guild in St. Paul.

The resolution, which was approved unanimously, called on publishers who opposed certain sections of the N.R.A. code to "cease their sham battle and engage with us in a real fight."

their sham battle and engage with us in a real fight."

The resolution read:

"Much has been said lately by the members of the American Newspaper Publishers Association about freedom of the press, yet few publishers have protested against section 606 (c) of the Rayburn communications bill.

"The chief purpose of the bill is worthy, but if enacted into law this section would give the President power, practically at will, to close wire and radio news stations, or censor the news that is permitted to pass through them.

"The bill has passed the Senate and is now pending before the House. The language of section 606 (c) is most alarming and contains a dire threat against freedom. It reads as follows:

"'Upon proclamation by the President that there exist war, or threat of war, or a state of public peril or disaster, or in order to preserve the neutrality of the United States, the President may suspend or amend for such time as he sees fit the rules and regulations applicable to any or all offices and stations for wire or radiocommunication within the jurisdiction of the United States, as prescribed by the Commission, and may cause the closing of any such office or station and the removal therefrom of its apparatus and equipment or he may suthorize the use or control any such office of station and the removal therefrom of its apparatus and equipment or he may authorize the use or control of any such office or station and its apparatus and equipment by any department of the Government under such regulations as he may prescribe, upon just compensation to the owners.'

"Without free channels of information there can be no guaranty of liberty and the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of this Repub-lic becomes a naked fraud.

"Enactment of the quoted provision would place in the hands of one man the power to dam these channels; or to transform reporting facilities into a gruesome propaganda machine, thereby frankly postituting our calling, which, potentially honorable, has already suffered the shame of thinly cloaked commercial control.

CALLED MOCKERY

"Nothing could protect the American people from being cajoled and browbeaten into war to sacrifice precious lives for filthy profits; or from helplessness to call a halt upon ruthless slaughter, once begun. 'Just compensation to the owners' would only further mock the victims of resulting wars to whom compensation would be impossible.

"The American Newspaper Guild by its convention condemns section 606 (c) of the Rayburn communications bill as un-American and inhuman; an irresistible invitation to dictatorship in its ugliest form.'

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think I ought to take this occasion to say that from time to time the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Schall] has been rising in his place here and making statements, or having read at the desk bitter and, in my judgment, unwarranted and unreasonable attacks on the President and on the administration for interfering with the freedom of the press.

It is not appropriate to prolong the session of the Senate by a full discussion of this subject, but I do deem it proper to state that in my judgment there is no basis for the attack which the Senator from Minnesota has made and which he has so often repeated.

The President does not interfere with the press. I put in the Record the other day an article from the pen of Mr. Raymond Clapper, entitled "Why Reporters Like Roosevelt", and in the course of that article it was disclosed that the President has won the esteem and the affection of press reporters in Washington.

Neither the Congress nor the President has done anything to interfere with the freedom of the press. And that there is absolute freedom of expression here is evidenced by the fact that day after day the Senator from Minnesota has exercised that liberty to the extent that if he made anywhere else the statements which he makes here he would be liable to prosecution for libel or for slander.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3645) to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to establish a credit system for Indians; to provide for higher education for Indians; to extend toward Indians the right to form business and other organizations; and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9620) to encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions; to provide a system of mutual mortgage insurance, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Steagall, Mr. Goldsborough, Mr. Prall, Mr. Luce, and Mr. Beedy were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3231) to provide a retirement system for railroad employees, to provide unemployment relief, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6462) to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9476) to empower certain members of the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice to make arrests in certain cases, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8544) making receivers appointed by any United States courts and authorized to conduct any business, or conducting any business, subject to taxes levied by the State the same as if such business were conducted by private individuals or corporations.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 504. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make a long-term contract for a supply of water to the United States naval station at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba;

S. 555. An act to authorize the acquisition by the United States of the land upon which the Seneca Indian School, Wyandotte, Okla., is located;

S. 822. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to amend section 217, as amended, of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States', approved March 4, 1909", approved January 11, 1929, with respect to the use of the mails for the shipment of certain drugs and medicines to cosmetologists and barbers;

S. 3151. An act to convey to the King Hill Irrigation District, State of Idaho, all the interest of the United States in the King Hill Federal Reclamation Project, and for other

urposes;

S. 3618. An act to grant a portion of the Fort Douglas Military Reservation to the University of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah;

S. 3655. An act to amend the act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1906, as amended:

S. 3696. An act authorizing the President to make rules and regulations in respect to alcoholic beverages in the Canal Zone, and for other purposes;

S. 3764. An act to reduce the fee to accompany applications for entry as second-class matter of publications of limited circulation:

S. 3779. An act to amend section 4 of "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of backruptcy throughout the United States', approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto", approved June 7, 1934;

H.R. 8544. An act making receivers appointed by any United States courts and authorized to conduct any business, or conducting any business, subject to taxes levied by the State the same as if such business were conducted by private individuals or corporations;

H.R. 9476. An act to empower certain members of the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice to make arrests in certain cases, and for other purposes;

S.J.Res. 106. Joint resolution authorizing loans to fruit growers for rehabilitation of orchards during the year 1934; and

S.J.Res. 138. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An Act to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 169, 73d Cong.), approved April 21, 1934.

PROCESSING TAX ON HOGS

Mr. POPE obtained the floor.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. POPE. Not now.

Mr. President, referring to the matter brought up by the Senator from Oklahoma a few moments ago, there is a very important measure which contains the amendment referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma. It also contains a provision for refunding the tax on jute and cotton bags, and so far as I know there is no objection in this Chamber to those important measures. House bill 9829, which passed the House and came over to the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture. I ask unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside the pending business for the purpose of immediate consideration of the House

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the pending business, a Senate joint resolution, so that he may ask for the immediate consideration of the bill to which he refers which the clerk will report by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. The bill (H.R. 9829) an act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act with respect to the processing tax on hogs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I still think, as I expressed myself this morning, that we should continue one piece of legislation at a time. We are all anxious to see this great labor measure enacted. Secondly, while I am in favor of the Senator's proposal, as I explained to him, he now refers to a similar one made by the Senator from Oklahoma. am not sure that I favor that. I desire to question the Senator from Oklahoma more than I did yesterday. Is there any relationship between the proposal of the Senator from Idaho and any other which might be offered in connection with the Agricultural Adjustment Act?

Mr. POPE. I may say to the Senator that it is an amendment in the same bill which merely extends the time within which the processing tax may be paid for 90 days. It is in the same bill as the jute tax.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; but has it any relation whatsoever with the proposal soon to be offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore]?

Mr. POPE. Yes; it is the same proposal, as an amendment to this bill, both of which amend the Agricultural Ad-

Mr. McNARY. I am not sure but that might lead to some controversy. The Senator from Oklahoma yesterday proposed some matter which had not been referred to any committee or any department. It may be very worthy. I desire to hear a further explanation. If they are entirely disassociated and are not dependent upon one another, I should be willing to have this bill considered. I want this made clear. Is there any combination or any connection between the Senator's proposal and that soon to be offered by the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. POPE. Not at all.

Mr. McNARY. I understood the Senator from Idaho to say a moment ago that there was.

Mr. POPE. Not at all, except they refer to the same general subject matter. They are both amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The one is to permit a refund of the tax on floor stocks of jute bags and cotton bags, and the Committee on Agriculture included the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma as a part of their amendment here, which merely extended the time in the discretion of the Bureau of Internal Revenue to 90 days within which to pay the processing tax generally.

Mr. McNARY. Do the Department of Agriculture and the Committee on Agriculture favor the Senator's proposal?

Mr. POPE. They unanimously favor my proposal, including the proposal of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE ].

Mr. McNARY. Under those circumstances I shall not object, but I shall object to any other matters being considered until the final disposition, at least, of the unfinished

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order. The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill presented by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Popel?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I reserve the right to object to the present consideration of the bill if it leads to debate, and I shall object to every other request for unanimous consent until the present unfinished business shall have been completed.

Mr. POPE. I can assure the Senator that it will not lead to debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of House bill 9829?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 9829) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act with respect to the processing tax on hogs.

Mr. POPE. I offer the amendments which I send to the

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, it is proposed to strike out lines 3 to 9, inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert the fol-

That (I) section 16 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act is amended by adding thereto the following new section: "(C) Upon the sale or other disposition of any article processed wholly That (I) or in chief value from any commodity with respect to which the existing rate of the processing tax is to be increased, or decreased, that on the date such increase, or decrease, first takes effect with respect to the commodity, is held for sale or other disposition (including articles in transit) by any person, and upon the production of any article from a commodity in process on the date on which the rate of the processing tax is to be increased or decreased, there shall be made a tax adjustment as follows:

"(1) Whenever the rate of the processing tax on the processing of the commodity generally or for any designated use or uses, or of the commodity generally or for any designated use or uses, or as to any designated product or products thereof for any designated use or uses, or as to any class of products, is decreased, there shall be credited or refunded to such person an amount equivalent to the difference between the rate of the processing tax payable or paid at the time immediately preceding the decrease in rate and the rate of the processing tax which would have been payable with respect to the commodity from which processed, if the processing had occurred on such date: Provided, however, That no such credit or refund shall be made unless the rate of the processing tax immediately preceding said decrease is equal to, or less than, the rate of the processing tax in effect on the date on which any floor-stocks tax was paid prior to the adoption of this amendment. amendment.

"(2) Whenever the rate of the processing tax on the processing of the commodity generally, or for any designated use or uses, or as to any designated product or products thereof for any designated use or uses, or as to any class of products, is increased, there shall be levied, assessed, and collected a tax to be paid by such person equivalent to the difference between the rate of the such person equivalent to the difference between the rate of the processing tax payable or paid at the time immediately preceding the increase in rate and the rate of the processing tax which would be payable with respect to the commodity from which processed, if the processing had occurred on such date.

"(3) Whenever the processing tax is suspended or is to be refunded pursuant to a certification of the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of the Treasury, under section 15 (a) of this act, the provisions of subdivision (1) of subsection (c) of this section shall become applicable.

shall become applicable.

"(4) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture revokes any certification to the Secretary of the Treasury under section 15 (a) of this act, the provisions of subdivision (2) of subsection (c) shall become applicable.

"(5) The provisions of this amendment shall be effective on and after June 1, 1934."

(II) Section 15 (a) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) If at any time the Secretary of Agriculture finds, upon investigation and after due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties that any class of products of any commodity. to interested parties, that any class of products of any commodity is of such low value, considering the quantity of the commodity used for their manufacture, that the imposition of the processing tax would prevent in whole or in large part the use of the commodity in the manufacture of such products and thereby substantially reduce consumption and increase the surplus of the modity in the manufacture of such products and thereby substantially reduce consumption and increase the surplus of the commodity, then the Secretary of Agriculture shall so certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, specifying whether such result will in his judgment most effectively be prevented by a suspension of the imposition of the processing tax or a refund of the tax paid, with respect to such amount of the commodity or any product thereof as is used in the manufacture of such products, and thereafter, as shall be specified in such certification, (1) the imposition of the processing tax shall be suspended with respect to such amount of the commodity as is used in the manufacture of such products and thereafter, as shall be specified in such certification. products, and thereafter, as shall be specified in such certifica-tion, until such time as the Secretary of Agriculture, after further tion, until such time as the Secretary of Agriculture, after further investigation and due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, revokes his certification to the Secretary of the Treasury, or (2) the Secretary of the Treasury shall refund (in accordance with the provisions of, to such persons and in such manner as shall be specified in, such certification) the amount of any tax paid (prior to the date of any revocation by the Secretary of Agriculture of his certification to the Secretary of the Treasury, upon further investigation and after due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties) under this title with respect to such amount of the commodity or any product thereof as is used after the date of such certification in the manufacture of such products." facture of such products."

SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph (4) of subsection (d) of section 9 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is repealed.

(b) Paragraph (7) of subsection (d) of such section 9 is amended to read as follows:

amended to read as follows:

"(7) In the case of any other commodity, the term 'processing' means any manufacturing or other processing involving a change in the form of the commodity or its preparation for distribution or use, as defined by regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture; and in prescribing such regulations the Secretary shall give due weight to the customs of the industry."

And on page 2, to strike out lines 10 and 11, inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 3. Section 19 (b) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the word "ninety" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and eighty."

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Idaho if the exemption relative to the processing tax on hogs has been eliminated from this

Mr. POPE. It has. That was section 1, and that has been stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SETTLEMENT OF LABOR CONTROVERSIES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 143) to effectuate further the policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to substitute House Joint Resolution 375 for Senate Joint Resolution 143, as amended, and to consider the House joint resolution at this time. They are identical, with the exception that the House joint resolution does not contain the two amendments which were adopted to the Senate joint resolution this morning, and I will ask to incorporate the amendments referred to in the House joint resolution if consent shall be given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 375) to effectuate further the policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Now I move the following amendment:

On page 1, line 11, after the word "commerce", to strike out the period and insert a comma and the following language, being the language of the first amendment adopted this morning:

The salaries, compensations, and expenses of the board or boards and necessary employees being paid as provided in section 2 of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on account of the noise in the Hall, the Senator did not make clear to me the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not think this amendment is necessary, but it has been reported by the Committee on Education and Labor. I think the salaries and expenses will be paid out of the National Industrial Recovery funds without the adoption of the amendment, but, in view of the fact that the committee thought the amendment necessary and reported it and the Senate agreed to it this morning while we were considering the Senate joint resolution, I have moved the amendment to the House joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move a further amend-

On page 2, line 22, after the word "resolution". I move to insert the words "with reference to the investigations authorized in section 1."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I reoffer to the pending House joint resolution the amendment in the nature of a substitute which I offered to the Senate joint resolution, and upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I want to appeal to my friend from New York and to my friend from Wisconsin not to complicate this matter, because it is going to mean that we are not going to be able to do anything at all for the working people at this session of Congress. I hope my friend from New York, if necessary, will intercede with my friend from Wisconsin not to complicate this matter at all at this late hour. I am in favor of the amendment if it were timely and if it would do any good to consider it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. How could it complicate the pending measure simply to take a vote upon this question?

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, this is really one of the most embarrassing moments of my whole political life. Every Senator knows and I think the public knows that I have devoted myself to the task of preventing strikes and composing differences after strikes occur since early in August, when the President of the United States asked me to leave behind a very pleasant vacation and assume the duties of the chairmanship of the National Labor Board. From then until now I have devoted all my time not spent in the Senate to the work of that Board. From last August until the session began I rarely left Washington except to go where a strike was in progress or was threatened. I might add, although I do not need to, I know, that for this I received no compensation of any kind. Many a night, on one occasion for 3 nights in succession, I remained up until 4 o'clock in the morning with a group of workers and industrialists for the purpose of preventing a strike which I knew would have been a serious impediment to our recovery program. I make these preliminary remarks so that nobody will doubt my devotion to this cause, a devotion which has resulted in some sacrifice of my

I want to say a word to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typingsl, who a moment ago protested against a threatened strike and censured this proposed legislation as an invasion of the liberty of the worker. As an example of the exercise of freedom of contract he cited the so-called 'representative plans" which are in existence in certain industries under the control of large employers. May I briefly explain to the Senate the plan which the Senator from Maryland says protects the freedom of the worker, while he claims that the legislation we propose is intended to deprive the worker of his just freedom? The view of the Senator from Maryland was expressed so energeticallyand I know in good faith-that I want him to know the facts as I have obtained them, not from reading a few letters but from actual evidence presented by the very many controversies before the National Labor Board.

How do these representative plans permit freedom of contract and freedom to organize on the part of the workers? First let me say that nearly all these so-called "company-dominated unions" have been organized since the enactment of the National Recovery Act by the same large employers who before the act refused to permit their workers any form of organization for the purpose of collective bargaining. The corporation referred to by the Senator from Maryland, it is true, has had a representative plan for many years, but it has nevertheless possessed the characteristics of the newer ones.

I may say that the proposed legislation does not interfere with the workers if they want a representative plan. If they want one, they should have it. But the question should be decided by the workers and not by the exercise of the economic coercion which the employer can yield over his employees.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

Mr. WAGNER. Let me finish this thought and then I shall be delighted to answer any question I can. How are these company unions, which, it is said, protect the worker, organized? Here is an actual case. I am giving evidence now; I am standing at my machine, working. The foreman walks over to me and says, "Here is your constitution." He goes along throughout the entire shop and says to each worker, "Here is your constitution." The worker takes the constitution and puts it in his pocket. He has no alternative. Refusal means the loss of his job. That is the way a company-dominated union is organized. There is no meeting in any large hall; there is no discussion of the provisions of the constitution; there is no request of the worker, "Do you want to join this organization, or would you rather have an outside union?" No. "Here is your constitution."

The Senator from Massachusets [Mr. Walsh] will bear me out in my statement. A number of these constitutions were presented to the committee. Is there liberty of selection in these constitutions? In the first place they provide that nobody may be chosen as a representative unless he is employed in the plant. In other words, the employer wants to be sure that he may always exercise the economic coercion which he has over men who work for him. If the employee dares to be militant in advocating collective bargaining or seeking agreements for higher wages or lower hours, the employer may say, "Now, boys, you had better mind your own business and go back to your machines or out you go." The worker is not permitted, under such a plan, to have an outside organization or an outside individual who may be free from that economic coercion to represent him in his bargaining. Now, what is next?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Am I to understand the Senator from Maryland to suggest that the condition the Senator from New York has described is in fact industrial liberty?

Mr. WAGNER. It is the industrial liberty to which the Senator from Maryland referred. I am sure, however, that he did not know all the facts; I know he is as strong a friend of the working man as anybody on this floor; I want him to listen to my experience.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—
Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator allow me to finish these remarks in regard to the company union?

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, if the Senator will not yield to others I do not ask him to yield to me, but inasmuch as he is discussing me I think he ought to yield to me. However, I shall wait.

Mr. WAGNER. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator. The only representative the worker may elect to represent him is somebody in the plant.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is the Senator now speaking about his bill and not the resolution?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Maryland has defended the representative plan as being the ideal plan.

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, no, Mr. President! That is why I wanted the Senator to yield to me. All I did protest about was that men wanting the representative plan should not be coerced into taking a plan which they do not want. That is all I am protesting about. I am 100 percent for the Senator's argument that the men who do want the other plan ought to have the right to take that plan. I am equally opposed to the men who do want the representative plan being coerced into joining a union which they do not want to join.

Mr. WAGNER. All we can do is to provide by law that the worker shall be free to make his choice. I am trying to show that the worker about whom the Senator is talking is not free to make any choice.

Mr. TYDINGS. In Maryland?

Mr. WAGNER. No. I am speaking about the representative plan the Senator mentioned.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator know of any way to prevent any employee from coercing another employee to join or not to join a union?

Mr. WAGNER. Why, no. But we know there is no possibility that the same coercive power can be exercised by one employee against another that can be exercised by the employer against the employee. If the employee does not do what is wanted by the employer, he does not retain his job. To lump employers and employees together is to bewilder the listener and confuse the situation.

What else happens? Suppose the worker says, "We would like to vote for a union to represent us. We feel that you. Mr. Employer, can hire lawyers and economic experts to prepare a perfect case for you upon all the economic questions which enter into a discussion of hours and wages and other conditions of work. Will you let us have an outside organization, free from economic coercion, which will hire lawyers and economic experts to prepare our case so that at least we may have the equality of bargaining power guaranteed under the Constitution and under a democracy? All we want is freedom. That is all we ask."

The employer answers: "No; you cannot. We drew the constitution, and under it you cannot vote for anybody to represent you except some man working here."

Mr. President, what are we trying to do? All we provide is that the employer must leave the worker alone during an election. The employee says: "You have privileges under the N.R.A. that you never had in all the history of the country. You are free from antitrust laws. You may organize your associations. You may combine for the purpose of exchanging economic information. No employee denies to you the right to organize and to choose your representatives. If he dared to do so, he would lose his job. Let us be as free as you are. If we want to elect an outside representative or an outside union, will you not give us the ordinary American right of voting for that kind of representative?" The employer says "No!"

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator give us the names of those employers, because I am citing concrete cases, and I wish the Senator would do so too. I do not mean to say they do not exist, but I should like to know the names of the employers who will not allow the men to have that privilege. I do not say there are none, but I want to know who they are.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator will take the trouble to read the testimony at the hearings on the Wagner labor disputes bill he will find, and I am sure members of the committee will bear me out, that there were presented 6 different constitutions of company unions organized by 6 of the largest employers in the United States right after the Recovery Act was approved, all having exactly the same

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not familiar with those constitutions. Do the men have the right to belong to a union and to amend the constitution?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; they cannot belong to a trade union.

Mr. TYDINGS. I asked the Senator if the men who live under the constitution have the right to amend it?

Mr. WAGNER. No; they have not. I am coming to that next. The employers, through the ingenuity of a very skillful lawyer, no doubt, provide that the men may not amend this constitution. This is interesting. They say, You cannot amend this constitution unless I, the employer, agree to it." Is that liberty?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; it is not.
Mr. WAGNER. No; it is not liberty. I knew the Senator would agree with me.

Mr. TYDINGS. But that is not the point. I will go just as far as the Senator will go in correcting that situation, allowing men to join any union they want to join. My theory is that there may be men who do not want to join the union who will be coerced under the Senator's bill into joining a union where really they are happy and contented as they are and do not want to be forced to join a union.

Mr. WAGNER. How is that possible?
Mr. TYDINGS. I am only reading the testimony.
Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is arguing against universal suffrage. His argument is that I ought not to have a right to vote because someone might come to me and improperly influence me one way or the other. [Laughter.] That is the argument.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am only arguing that in my own State, where there is the largest employment of men in any single industry, the men have written me as their Senator stating that they fear under this bill they will be compelled or coerced to join a union which they do not want to join. In voicing their protest I feel that I am doing nothing more than they would have me do as their representative.

Mr. WAGNER. Here is all there is to it. We are extending the right to the workers to elect any individual or organization they choose, instead of being restricted. How is that compelling anybody to do anything? The charge of compulsion is a gross misrepresentation that has circled the country.

Let me tell the Senator another thing that is done. There is nothing more advantageous to a plaintiff than to be able to pay the fee of the attorney for the defendant. Then he has both sides. Now, under these constitutions, the employees' representatives are paid by the employer. Whenever they take time off to devote to the work of the company union they put in a slip to the employer, who pays the whole bill. As representatives of the public, it is our duty to preserve equality of opportunity and of contract by putting a stop to this unfair practice.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield. Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is more familiar with this matter than I am, because, I think, he was one of the members of the Board or at least had contact with the Board. I am now going to read a paragraph from the letter from which I previously read and which I did not read at that time. The writer of the letter says:

I cite you these instances to show you the fairness with which the elections are conducted. Our workmen want to be reprethe elections are conducted. Our workmen want to sented by other workmen if they are given the opportunity. The sented by other workmen all made by a secret ballot. The elections referred to above were all made by a secret ballot. The three men receiving the highest number of votes for each zone become candidates in this direct-primary system. Elections are then held to select one man from the three men receiving the highest number of votes.

In the elections which the Labor Board has held over the country nomination is made in all cases by petition. Any 10 signers can place, as a rule, 6 names in nomination. From a Labor Board election experience which we had at our Russellton mine, we know that men are afraid to nominate people other than union men, and candidates will not run for fear of being besten up having their houses dynamical at the As a metter of beaten up, having their houses dynamited, etc. As a matter of fact, some of the men, after having signed petitions, were frightened so badly that they asked to have their petitions withdrawn. It is my personal belief and opinion that the Labor Board have been much more interested in entrenching the American Federation of Labor in industry in this country than they have in securing fair elections.

I do not mean to say that all union men are dynamiters.

Mr. WAGNER. They say so. Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, no. The Senator is too fair to say that.

Mr. WAGNER. I will withdraw that statement. Mr. TYDINGS. What I do want to do is to get, if I can, what the Senator calls an industrial contract. If the conditions pictured in the letter which I have read really exist, and I have no doubt they do, then certainly there is good and bad on both sides of the equation.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not say that there is not good and bad on both sides. All I want is to promote equality.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I want to do.

Mr. WAGNER. Then the law will do the rest.
Mr. TYDINGS. But I do not want to have a man coerced into joining a union if he does not want to join it.

Mr. WAGNER. There is nothing in the bill that coerces or permits coercion. It merely gives the worker the right to select an organization instead of an individual, if he wants to do that. That is an American right that he ought to enjoy, because what does it profit a man to have so-called "political freedom" if he is made an economic

The Senator suggested something about men being prohibited from striking. I am as devoted to the prevention of strikes as anybody can be. As I said before the Senator from Maryland came into the Chamber, I have devoted my time since last August, day and night, to avoiding strikes, because they should be the last resort. But if men are deprived of that right altogether, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] so eloquently said, they are made economic slaves.

Mr. TYDINGS. Nobody approves of that.

Mr. WAGNER. I did not intend to say all of this, but I want the Senate to know my experiences. Now, let me refer to the matter of elections.

We have held over 300 elections. Let me give one typical illustration. We held one in the captive mines in 2 days. We did it without a policeman, without a soldier, and 15,-000 men voted on the subject as to whether they wanted a company union or an outside union. Fifteen thousand men cast their ballots as free from disturbance as any election could possibly be, with nobody around except the representatives of the National Labor Board and representatives of both employer and employee.

I ask the Senator not to believe these stories about dynamiting. Who is this worker we are talking about? Is he some enemy of this country? Is there any reason why he, unlike other people, should be shackled in some way? He is a man of flesh and blood like you and me, with hopes and aspirations, who wants to preserve America for himself and for his children. He has fought to protect our Nation in its hour of danger, and with his hands he has built its cities and produced its wealth. All he asks in return is an opportunity to work; an opportunity to earn enough to feed himself and his family, plus a little education and a little leisure and security. That is all.

That is the man for whom I am pleading. I do not ask any undue advantage for him. I simply want to see him get an opportunity in life, because I love this country, which gave me my opportunity, and to which I owe everything I have. For the rest of my life I shall devote myself as best I can to serving my country. I never can repay my country for what it has done for me.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has stated that the Labor Board has conducted a large number of elections; I think he said over 300.

Mr. WAGNER. Over 300.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that under existing law the Labor Board has no authority to hold these elections, but has been able to do it only by mutual agreement?

Mr. WAGNER. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. And is it not a fact that under the pending joint resolution, whatever board is created will have authority to hold elections such as the Senator's Board has been holding, and prevent such occurrences as the Board has experienced, of refusal on the part of employers to hold elections?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

What has been my difficulty with Mr. Weir? He has made it a personal matter. It was not really a personal matter. Mr. Weir is a very fine gentleman, a great industrialist, a man of the highest character. He has a different philosophy from mine on the subject of labor relationships. All that I asked of him was to have the ballots in such form that the workers might select the representatives they desired, whether an inside or an outside organization, in an election free from any influence or coercion. That is all I asked, and I thought my request was as fair as could be, and I felt sure he would accept it in behalf of his company; but he | I believe that if this amendment of his were presented as a chose not to do so.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President-

Mr. WAGNER. A Senator asks me whether there was a strike. There was. We intervened by asking the men to go back, and after 2 days they did so. We told them we would insure them a fair election, which was all they asked. I could not get it for them; but they did go back to work, 10,000 of them, I think.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me now?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield. I have already said too much.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to this fact, which appears to me very simple and plain:

Is it not just as unreasonable for the company employer to dictate to the employees as to what union they shall belong to as it would be for the members of the union to dictate to the corporation whether or not it shall join the chamber of commerce?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly; and in the bill as reported by the committee it is provided not only that the employer must not interfere with the employee in selecting his representatives but also that the employee must not interfere with the employer in selecting his representatives.

Mr. WALSH. Or trade associations.

Mr. WAGNER. Or trade associations. We provided that neither side should use coercion against the other. There never has been any serious contention, however, that the employees have interfered with the employers in the selection of the employers' representatives.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; but it would not be more ridiculous than the position of the employer as regards the union. The unions or the laboring people never have questioned the right of the stockholders of a corporation to choose their own superintendent, and they do not have to choose him among their stockholders. They can get him from any part of the country. It seems to me that the employees should have the same right to select their business agent wherever they can hire him. They want the best business agent or organizer they can get, and they have the same right to choose their own representative that a corporation has.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, it does seem so to me; but there seems to be an opinion, particularly among large employers of labor, that that is not the fact; that they are not entitled to that right. I never have been able to understand this view, but I think many employers are sincere about it. I am not condemning them at all; I just do not agree with their philosophy.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That was true of the old-time slave owner. He was sincere.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, yes. The feudal lords used to say, "Do not stir up these people. Leave them alone. They are happy." I would not buy peace at the price of slavery. Some may, but I shall never subscribe to the proposition that peace is so valuable that we should have it at the expense of liberty.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I am now going to make an appeal. I said at the start that this is a very embarrassing moment for me, because I was going to ask the Senator from Wisconsin to withdraw his amendment.

The Senator knows that there is no one for whom I have a higher regard than I have for him. I can remember that in the early days of the depression, when its full extent had not yet penetrated to the consciousness of many officials, and while even Congress was quite complacent, thinking that prosperity either was here or "just around the corner" the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], and I fought to secure relief for the destitute and a large public-works program to put the unemployed back at work. I never can forget that association; and I know that the heart of the Senator from Wisconsin throbs for the unfortunate and those who need our help. I know how devoted he is to this whole cause. new proposition it undoubtedly would be adopted.

But I know how many of my colleagues are situated, particularly on this side of the aisle. Like myself, they are following the leadership of the President. The President feels that at this time this temporary measure ought to be passed to relieve an emergency situation, and that by next year, through study and experimentation and experience. we shall be able to frame some permanent legislation. Therefore, many of the Senators, on this side of the Chamber particularly, while in sympathy with this legislation as a permanent matter, feel that they ought to follow the President's lead in this situation and, therefore, might cast a vote against this amendment and be put on record as opposing something which the laboring people feel is for the better protection of their rights. I do not feel justified in subjecting the Senators to this embarrassment when there is no chance of passing the measure and, in addition, jeopardizing the eventual success of the full measure. Therefore, I will ask the Senator to withdraw his amendment at this time. We will fight for it next year, when the country will have become sufficiently educated as to the need for it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator's request is very embarrassing to me.

As I stated before, when I was discussing this substitute. the amendment in large measure, of course, is the work of the Senator from New York. I did not offer it, however, without notifying him that it was my intention to do so.

I wish to make it clear, however, that the embarrassment of other Senators is not the controlling factor in my response to the request of the Senator from New York.

I feel, however, that he has some claim upon this piece of legislation. After all, it is the child of his brain, in large part. How far he has the right to control its disposition in the form of an amendment is a close question.

I was not brought up "to march up the hill and march down again." So far as I know, I have never started a fight in this body and quit. Since the Senator from New York asks me not to press his bill which forms the basis of my amendment, I feel compelled to make this difficult decision in his favor. I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have another amendment I desire to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution, it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

Nothing in this resolution shall prevent or impede or diminish in any way the rigiconcerted activities. the right of employees to strike or engage in other

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask either the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Arkansas whether he is in position to accept this amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the amendment was suggested to me, and I consulted the counsel of the Department of Labor and others. They all inform me that there is absolutely no need of this prohibitive clause against action which would deny the right to strike, because of the fact that the Board provided for would be empowered only to investigate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I agree with the strict construction of the joint resolution, but if that be true, and inasmuch as we have often placed such safeguarding amendments in other legislation, I see no reason why the Senator should not accept this amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I am not refusing to accept it; I am simply stating the fact, that it would have been put in if it had been necessary. In my opinion, it is not necessary, and in the opinion of the legal department which drew the joint resolution it is not necessary. However, I have no objection to it going in.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not mean to infer any criticism of the Senator or of the committee.

Gore

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there was so much noise permitted by the present occupant of the Chair that I do not know now what has occurred. I should like to have the amendment read and have some explanation of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

Nothing in this resolution shall prevent or impede or diminish in any way the right of employees to strike or engage in other concerted activities.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Oregon what I said a few moments ago to the Senator from Massachusetts? This joint resolution, I think, under a strict construction of its terms, does not in any way affect the right of labor to engage in collective action. However, often in legislation of similar character safeguarding amendments have been adopted and are upon the statute books. There is grave apprehension, I may say to the Senator, in the minds of some of those who represent the wage earners, that a broad construction of the phraseology of section 1 of the joint resolution may be enlarged to include this power.

The Senator from Massachusetts states that he does not think any such power is involved in the joint resolution, and therefore the committee did not recommend it, but if that be the case, I am appealing for the adoption of this amendment in order that certainty may be made double sure. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is detained from the Senate on official business. I am informed that if present the Senator from Virginia would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I am permitted to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). Announcing my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and transferring that pair to the Senator from

New York [Mr. COPELAND], I vote "yea."

Mr. WALCOTT (after having voted in the affirmative). Mr. President, I should have announced that I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], but I am informed that if present he would vote "yea" on this question. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am asked to announce that the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] is detained by illness.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Florida, [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] are necessarily absent. If present, these Senators would all vote "yea."

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] is absent on account of illness, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is necessarily absent from the city. I am not advised how either Senator would vote on this question. The general pair of the Senator from Pennsylvania and its transfer has been stated. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] has a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS].

The result was announced—yeas 86, nays none, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills and joint resolutions of the Senate:

S. 1510. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to adjust water-right charges, to grant other relief on the Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes", approved May 25, 1926, with respect to certain lands in the Langell Valley Irrigation District:

S. 3178. An act authorizing the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to print and distribute additional sets of the writings of George Washington;

S. 3742. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Board of Public Works of the State of Vermont to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Lake Champlain at or near West Swanton, Vt.;

S.J.Res. 108. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Eloy Alfaro and Jaime Eduardo Alfaro, citizens of Ecuador; and

S.J.Res. 117. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to present the Distinguished Flying Cross to Emory B. Bronte.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1103) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with certain public works at the Naval Air Station. Pensacola, Fla., with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1948) amending the act entitled "An act authorizing the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in the civilization fund claim of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States", approved February 6, 1921 (41 Stat. 1097), with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed without amendment to the concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 23) as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized in the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 9830) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental general and emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, to insert on page 2, after line 23, of the House engrossed bill, the following: following:

"For payment to Susan I. Brumm and Joan L. Brumm, sisters of George F. Brumm, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, $8,500."

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the following concurrent resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

House Concurrent Resolution 39

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be compiled and printed, with illustrations, in such form and style as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, 7,000 copies of the proceedings at the joint session of the two Houses of Congress in the Hall of the House of Representatives on May 20, 1934, held in commemoration of the centennial anniversary of the death of Gilbert du Motier, Marquis de La Fayette, together with such other matter as the committee may deem pertinent, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 copies shall be for the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Joint Committee on Arrangements.

House Concurrent Resolution 44

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That 2,500 copies of the prayers offered by the Reverend James Shera Montgomery, Chaplain of the House of Representatives, at the opening of the daily sessions of the House during the Seventy-second and Seventy-third Congresses, be printed and bound for the use of the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 9275. An act to provide for the protection and preservation of domestic sources of tin; and

H.R. 9946. An act providing for the ratification of Joint Resolution No. 59 of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, approved by the Governor May 5, 1930, imposing an import duty on coffee imported into Puerto Rico.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 9275) to provide for the protection and preservation of domestic sources of tin was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SETTLEMENT OF LABOR CONTROVERSIES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the passage of the bill.

Mr. NYE obtained the floor.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to say that when the last roll call began I had intended to vote against the amendment, not because there was anything in it that particularly changed the bill, but a day or two ago I understood there was an agreement with respect to this joint resolution that, so far as possible, it was to be supported without change. I was undertaking to carry out that agreement, but when I found that no one agreed with that as part of the program I changed my mind.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] has found it necessary to withdraw the amendment, the amendment which took the form pretty much of the original of the Wagner bill. In light, however, of the request that was made for its withdrawal, I fail to see how the Senator from Wisconsin could have done otherwise. And I hope as much as I can hope for anything that a new session of the Congress is going to devote itself to the providing of those provisions for labor which will give labor its share of national recovery.

All over this country for months there has been agitation, there has been danger of grave labor uprisings and difficulties. The one thing, Mr. President, that has stayed the hand and mind of those who have felt that grave injustice was being done them under certain operations of N.R.A. has been the hope and expectation that there would be adoption by this Congress of the provisions of the Wagner bill. Now, there is offered in its stead a substitute in the form of a resolution calling for the creation of a board to see that something is done to do what the National Recovery Act assured would be done, namely, give to labor fair play and an equal share of whatever was accomplished in the way of recovery.

Section 7 (a) of the National Recovery Act provides very specifically:

SEC. 7. (a) Every code of fair competition, agreement, and license approved, prescribed, or issued under this title shall contain the following conditions: (1) That employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection; (2) that no employee and no one seeking employment shall be required as a condition of employment to join any company union or to refrain from joining, organizing, or assisting a labor organization of his own choosing; and (3) that employers shall comply with the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, and other conditions of employment, approved or prescribed by the President.

Every employer, Mr. President, who accepted any part in or responsibility under an approved code knew that section 7 (a) was a part of the thing he was assuming responsibility in or under. And yet we are told that there has been flagrant violation of section 7 (a), so flagrant a violation that we need more legislation to make the employer do what thus far we have failed to make him do under the National Industrial Recovery Act. So, we are asked to adopt this resolution and create a board to do what? Is it fair to answer: to make the administrators of N.R.A. do what the National Industrial Recovery Act requires that they shall have done? Employers signing—placing their signatures to codes, including the provisions of section 7 (a) of this act, knowing what their code provided for, now flagrantly violate those provisions.

Why in the world does not the National Industrial Recovery Administration take the code away from those violators? It has taken it away from others. The little pants presser has lost his blue eagle because of some little violation of his code. Why, then, is the great employer not deprived of whatever blessing the blue eagle is to him? Why, instead of taking away that blue eagle from him, we continue to let this greedy employer make nothing short of a goose of the Blue Eagle, and then chase labor back here to Congress to get law beyond what has already been written and which ought to be amply sufficient to meet his needs in the present controversy?

We are asked to adopt a resolution which does not do much more than to create a board or boards whose function will be that of striving to protect the interests of labor. I hope that the passage of this resolution will do what its friends think it will do. I hope I am mistaken in my assumption that it will leave labor precisely where it is today so far as relates to its relationship to N.R.A.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think there is any doubt but that every one of the Senators who examines the National Industrial Recovery Act would feel that labor was taken care of, and it is only by reason of the interpretations put upon it by the legal department of the N.R.A. that labor has not been able to get its rights under the present N.R.A. act. I am afraid, as is the Senator from North Dakota, that with the passage of this joint resolution they will find themselves in practically the same position they found themselves in before.

Mr. NYE. And do I understand the Senator from Montana to mean that we will be no farther ahead under the joint resolution than we are now?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. NYE. Precisely. I think I am quite in agreement with the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Unless, Mr. President, the N.R.A. officials carry out the provisions of the resolution just adopted better than they did with reference to the old N.I.R. Act, I do not believe that labor will get very much benefit out of this provision.

Mr. NYE. Yes. I point this out to the Senator from Montana. We are creating a board now to give labor what the administrators of the N.R.A. declined for some reason to give them.

There are other provisions in the National Industrial Recovery Act which some employers and some industrialists have flagrantly denied and ignored. There are provisions within the National Industrial Recovery Act protecting the public against the growth or enlargement of monopoly. Section 3 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, in paragraph 2, provides:

Upon the application to the President by one or more trade or industrial associations or groups the President may approve a code or codes of fair competition for the trade or industry or subdivision thereof represented by the applicant or applicants. If the President finds * * * that such code or codes are not designed to promte monopolies or to eliminate or oppress small enterprises and will not operate to discriminate against them and will tend to effectuate the policy of this title.

Because men found that provision was being violated, that monopolies were under the code intrenching themselves as they had never been intrenched before, because complaints were made to that effect, a board was appointed to see that the small business industries of the country won fair play, to see that monopolies did not make this thing an instrument to destroy all remaining competition. The board was appointed just as a board is to be appointed to try to give labor the blessings of the labor provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

That board became known as the "National Recovery Review Board." It went to work in March, and after weeks of diligent study, aided by splendid hands and splendid minds, reported to the President that this code, that code, and the other code, 7 or 8 or 10 of them, were aiding monopoly, were fostering monopoly, and were all but eliminating small industrial operators in the country.

What has been the result of that report? It has been followed by all manner of language flowing out of the offices of the National Industrial Recovery Administration, belittling and scorning the committee of men who made those findings and reported them to the President. But, finding and offering criticism as they did, have they been thanked for it? No; they have virtually been invited to close their doors and go home.

I wonder what the result might have been if that Board had found, instead of what it did find, and had reported that those codes were not aiding monopoly, that those codes were not working injury upon small enterprises? I wonder if then the request would have been upon the Board to abandon its work and go home?

I am not going to undertake to answer that question, but I do want to make the point that we are now only authorizing another board such as the National Recovery Review Board, headed by Clarence Darrow. We are naming another board. What is going to happen to that board if it does not find in keeping with the beliefs, the interests, and the opinions of those in whose hands the administration of the National Industrial Recovery Act has been placed? Will it be heeded or asked, as has been the review board, to quit and go home?

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CUTTING. I quite agree with everything the Senator has been saying, but it also occurred to me just now, when the Senator read the original provisions of section 7 (a), that they were couched in very much stronger language than anything we have in the pending resolution. I believe everyone on the floor of the Senate at the time believed, when we adopted section 7 (a) of the National Recovery Act, that we were in a sense abolishing the scandal of company unions.

As the act has been administered, does not the Senator agree with me that the effect in practice has been to stimulate the company union, because the company union was the only way by which the management of certain corporations could get around the provisions of section 7 (a). If we are now going to enact legislation on this subject without strengthening the former provisions and without stopping up the loopholes, are we not going to find ourselves in a position rather worse than the position in which we are at the present time?

Mr. NYE. I think that finding ourselves in a worse position than we are is quite inevitable. I think we will be reconvening here next January and wondering what in the world ever possessed us to run away from what was so plainly our duty here now, namely to provide for those needs of labor whose needs have been so terribly ignored and stamped upon during these more recent months.

One board, named because N.R.A. was not operating as the law declared it should operate, is about to go out of existence vitals, and screeches its song of victory for monopoly.

primarily because it has made findings contrary to the belief, the opinion, and the wishes of those in whose hands has been placed the responsibility of administering that law. Have we any right to hope that the appointments made to the new Labor Board or boards are going to be materially different than have been the appointments made in the case of those who are administering the main provisions of N.R.A. today?

The findings of the review board have been, it seems to me, very positive in the conclusion that in those instances where the board has studied the experiences under the code, in those industrial fields where monopoly has ever had any footing, monopoly is more strongly entrenched than it ever was before. There is large complaint in those fields on the part of the smaller operators. In other industrial fields where monopoly has never taken real root, where the field does not lend itself readily to the interests of monopoly, codes are working fairly well and there is pretty general approval on the part of the larger operators and the smaller operators in those fields.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NYE. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from North Dakota, knowing as I do the attention he has given this matter, whether the condition to which he refers in industry is added to by the terms and expressions of the code, or is it his contention that those injustices have resulted from the construction and method of administration of the code?

Mr. NYE. It is my conclusion that they have resulted from the manner of administration by those who administer the codes.

Mr. LEWIS. The able Senator concludes and concedes that the terms of the relief act and the codes being administered would have avoided those injustices if otherwise administered.

Mr. NYE. I am sure of that.

Mr. LEWIS. So, therefore, the evils would rather be in the individuals who administered, and the remedy would be in the removal of the individuals?

Mr. NYE. Quite so; and the necessity now is not that of more law, but is of thorough and detailed administration of existing law.

In the first report made by the Recovery Review Board, if I recall correctly, there were eight codes studied and reviewed. In each and every one of those instances the finding was that great injury was being done the small operator in that field, while monopoly—the larger operator—were enjoying such advantages as had never before been theirs.

I have said since the time the first report was submitted that it was my intention to speak from time to time upon the findings in the report of the review board. The opportunity has not been ours here in the Senate to go into any thorough detail in connection with that report. Since the making of that report another report has been submitted to the President, and will, I understand, be given to the public within the next few days. It is not my intention now, though I think the opportunity should be ours, to deal at any length with the findings which have been made concerning the result of operations under many of these codes.

For the purpose of setting forth in a general way what has been found true with reference to practically all codes in those fields where monopoly exists in any form, I desire to confine myself, and do it quite briefly, to the findings that were made respecting the code covering the moving-picture industry—a code which it has been alleged was annihilating small business, and wrecking life in many homes and in many communities that were affected by that particular code.

Under the moving-picture code, the independents are, as I have intimated, being annihilated. The independents in the moving picture field not only have their backs to the wall, but they are actually being driven through the wall as the Blue Eagle claws at their faces, sinks its talons into their vitals, and screeches its song of victory for monopoly.

prices charged for its movie entertainment, lower quality films foisted upon small theaters, and-according to officials of the United States Government—a destructive influence even upon our children.

Those statements are backed by the testimony of witnesses before various official tribunals. That evidence and testimony is available to anyone who wishes to inspect it at any time. Some of it I will quote today.

To understand the insidious way in which the motionpicture monopoly is being permitted to use the Blue Eagle's claws to destroy opposition, ruin business men, and spread grief through many homes, it is necessary to consider four separate divisions in the entire situation.

First is the manner in which the motion-picture code was drawn, the extremely shady background, and the connections of the various individuals taking part. I say frankly that in my mind there was at least ethical crookedness in drawing that code, and I shall shortly present testimony to support that belief.

Second is the relation of the Government administrator of that code to the motion-picture industry, his relation at the time he supervised the drawing of it, and the manner in which he is now helping to administer it. In this I refer to Sol Rosenblatt, N.R.A. divisional administrator, right-hand man of the motion-picture monopoly group. These statements I shall back by testimony before Government tribunals.

Third, there is the aid and assistance which the Blue Eagle gives the Movie Trust to strangle anyone opposing their destructive plans and policies, and the methods by which this power is used to ravage American business interests.

Fourth is the effect of all this on our own families and Let us turn directly to Mr. Rosenblatt.

Why was this man chosen to draw up the motion-picture code, and then to administer it?

Was it because Mr. Rosenblatt is the former law associate of Nathan Burkan, member of the board of directors of two of the Big Eight of the movies-the Movie Trust?

Was it because Mr. Rosenblatt would refuse to permit any records to be kept or notes to be made of many of the hearings when the motion-picture code was being formed?

Did Mr. Burkan, intimate associate of Will Hays, movie czar, actually pull the strings from behind the scenes as Rosenblatt wielded the hammer which was to destroy the living-making power of many honest American citizens?

Was it because it was known in advance that when protests came, when there was danger of upheaval, Rosenblatt would not make decisions alone, would not turn to higher Federal groups, but would slip hurriedly to New York to consult with Hays and Pettijohn, the Hays organization's $50,000 a year attorney, and Burkan?

Was it because the movie trust knew Mr. Rosenblatt of old, and knew that if such trouble came in the future as in independent investigation of this code, Mr. Rosenblatt would refuse to testify, and would rush to their defense with absolutely false statements?

These are vital things in any consideration of this movie messenger boy, who is willing to bear the brunt of attack for one of the most shadily-operated and formed trusts that ever disgraced the pages of American economic and business

What is it that makes Mr. Rosenblatt willing to stand so steadfastly by this piratical gang? Is his $7,000-a-year salary ample for such loyal performance?

Let us examine the testimony of witnesses before the National Recovery Review Board:

On page 90 of volume 2 of the mimeographed transcript, the testimony of Mr. Harry Brandt starts. Mr. Brandt lives in a rather fashionable neighborhood, at 115 Central Park West, New York, and is president of the Independent Thea-

The public is being made to suffer equally with higher | understand, as a thoroughly trustworthy and reputable citizen. The testimony reads:

> Q. Have you a transcript of the testimony taken in the N.R.A. with reference to the drafting of the motion-picture code?—A. No. There were no records taken at all. There were no minutes of any of the meetings, with the exception of one when Mr. Schechter, the attorney for the independents, started to take notes—he could take shorthand—and Mr. Rosenblatt, the administrator, told him that if he took any notes of the meeting he would call the meeting to an end.

> There is other testimony by other witnesses that Mr. Rosenblatt declined to let anyone have any record of what transpired as he maneuvered the formation of this code. Why did he do this? Did he fear that what he was doing would rise in some future day to smite him with blows of evil machinations perpetrated by him for those who control this industry? If so, those fears are justified, for the blows now are being struck, notes or no notes, through the fearless reports of the Recovery Review Board.

> The facts in those reports cannot be downed or obliterated, no matter how much General Johnson and his paid evasionists and obliterators shout "Red." Not all of the Johnson jingle in the world can change the fact that under this Rosenblatt code life is strangled for the independent, and he must pay for the hemp to make the rope.

> On page 199, volume 2, of the record of the Review Board, there is this testimony by Mr. Louis Blumenthal:

Q. Was Mr. Rosenblatt in the practice by himself or did he work for someone?

This was, of course, before N.R.A., I might mention.

. He worked for someone.

Q. What was the man's name?—A. Nathan Burkan. Q. Who is Nathan Burkan?—A. An attorney.

Q. Do you know whether or not Mr. Burkan represents any of the movie interests?—A. He does. He is attorney and member of the board of the Columbia Motion Pictures Corporation, and he is also attorney and member of the board of the United Artists Corporation.

Now, Mr. President, both of these are members of the Big Eight, of the trust, the monopoly. Mr. Rosenblatt went directly from his association with Nathan Burkan to his association with General Johnson, and to the place of supreme designator of what the Movie Trust could or could not do.

The record shows that he threw the gates wide open, figuratively told the trust to do as it pleased, gave them everything they wanted, fought their battles, and reported to them personally in New York rather than to his own Federal Government superiors.

I ask what is the obvious answer to the question:

Who sent Rosenblatt from Burkan's office to N.R.A.—who made the choice?

Thus in this industry, where there are hundreds of independent theaters not part of the trust, some of them costing half a million dollars, the trust gang had their own man make the code, has their own man as the Government representative on the code authority, and has 8 of its own gang on the movie code authority of 10 men.

The independents are lead to the scaffold by a Blue Eagle screeching raucously of victorious oppression—and it is a scaffold that they are forced by the administration of Federal law to help construct and to help pay for.

There is one more bit of testimony about Mr. Rosenblatt I wish to present here.

It is especially significant, for it is testimony of Mr. Rosenblatt himself.

Mr. Rosenblatt, in his reply to the Darrow Board report, says, on pages 28 and 29 of the mimeographed press release of the entire N.R.A. replies, that the movie-code report is-based solely upon the vicious mouthings, innuendoes, and conjectures of a few disgruntled and disappointed enemies of the National Industrial Recovery Act and particularly of the motionpicture code.

I now quote from the testimony of Mr. Rosenblatt before the Darrow Board which he says heard only the dister Owners' Association of New York. He is known, I gruntled. The facts are that Mr. Rosenblatt twice had opportunity to testify before the Board and twice refused. Perhaps he feared to; perhaps he was ordered by the trust not to. Perhaps General Johnson "cracked down" and told him to keep his mouth closed-who knows?

On page 4, volume 1, of the Review Board transcript, is this colloguy:

Mr. Mason. Do you refuse to testify, Mr. Rosenblatt?
Mr. Rosenblatt. I do not see any requirement on my part to testify at this hearing. I have not been subpensed to come here. My files have not been subpensed.

And then this-

Mr. Mason. Let the record show that Mr. Rosenblatt refused to testify.

Without further record reading I will say that Mr. Rosenblatt again refused to testify on another occasion.

What a spectacle! A board appointed by the President, proclaimed by him as a great forward step, approved by .Johnson

A servant of the Government, holding one of the second highest offices in N.R.A., writing and administering one of the Nation's most important codes-refusing to testify before a Presidential board and then attacking that board as seeking evidence only from the disgruntled.

I think in view of this it is quite proper to ask whether Mr. Rosenblatt is working for the Government or for the movie trust, whether his task is furthering the programs of President Roosevelt or the panderings of spokesmen for

On page 27 of the Review Board transcript as of March 26, 1934—there is no number on the volume—Abram Myers, representing independents, testifies that the code was finally approved in a room at the Mayflower Hotel, that only Rosenblatt and the exhibitors' code committee were present, that no effort was made to do anything except hand the code to the independents and say: "Take it or leave it." In other words, do as you are told or the ax falls.

Now, who are the Big Eight of the Movie Trust? are: Radio-Keith-Orpheum or RKO, Fox Film Co., Paramount, Warner Bros., Universal Film Co., United Artists, Columbia, and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

And who are the members of the code authority who enforce the code drawn up under supervision of Rosenblatt, associate of the Big Eight attorney and board member, Nathan Burkan? They are:

Merlin Aylesworth, president of R.K.O. companies, one of the Big Eight.

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film Corporation, one of the Big Eight. (And, incidentally, the records on file here in the Capitol show that Mr. Kent was a heavy contributor to the Democratic campaign fund.)

George J. Schaeffer, general manager of Paramount Picture Corporation, also one of the Big Eight. And Paramount was one of the companies where, it is understood, nefarious stock juggling by the inside bosses reaped millions for them, wrecked the company's stock after it weathered much of the depression, and ruined thousands of small Harry M. Warner of Warner Bros., another of the Big Eight and who has admitted in sworn testimony that he and his brother sold their company's stock long and short to reap a harvest from the pockets of poor, small stockholders.

Robert H. Cochran, vice president of Universal Film Manufacturing Co., another of the Big Eight

W. Ray Johnson, president of Monogram Pictures Corporation, and the only true independent in the code authority.

Abe Kikendall, president of the Motion Pictures Corporation of America. Some term him an independent—I believe Rosenblatt does. But there are so many things of which Mr. Rosenblatt is sublimely, and sometimes opportunely, ignorant that it is not surprising that he apparently does not know that the United States District Court of Nebraska, in an official opinion, stated that Kikendall's corporation was subsidized by Paramount-Paramount of the Big Eight.

Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce, intimate with the Big Eight through having the concession for candy-vending machines in their theaters Nathan Yamins, president of the Independent Theater Owners of New England.

Then, of course, there is the Government representative, Mr. Rosenblatt, who left the office of a Big Eight attorney to draw the code.

Truly, the independent under this code must let his enemies write the law he is to obey, interpret that law, draw the indictment against him, prosecute the case, act as judge, render their own decision, and enforce their own punish-

There is nothing in American history so contrary to every fundamental principle of decency, fairness, honesty, and the square deal guaranteed by the Constitution and promised in the present new deal.

The new deal under this code is simply a shuffle into annihilation through legal means for those not in with the

Mr. Rosenblatt says that only disgruntled persons came before the Darrow Board. I wonder if he considers Special Assistant to the Attorney General Russell Hardy, a Government official, a disgruntled witness?

Mr. Hardy testified before this board that more complaints of unfair monopolistic practices are received about the motion-picture industry than any other industry in the

Mr. Hardy testified also that the Federal Department of Justice sent a memorandum to N.R.A., outlining the following complaints received about the movie code and the Movie Trust:

- 1. Refusal of major companies to contract with complainants for any pictures at all.
  - 2. Refusal to give complainants first-run pictures.
  - 3. Refusal of even second or subsequent runs on pictures. 4. Refusal of large companies to contract with inde-
- pendents unless the large companies—the trust—were permitted to fix admission prices for the smaller companies.
  - 5. Refusal to sell pictures except by block booking.

In other words, general charges of monopoly, freezing out of opposition, combination to fix prices, and so on.

And what did N.R.A. do about this memorandum? Heaven only knows, for Mr. Hardy testified the Department of Justice never even received an answer.

Now let us turn to some of the actual results of existence of this trust and the code under which its destructive practices thrive as never before.

Block booking thrived, of course, before the code came into existence. We cannot charge that the Blue Eagle laid . this egg. But it can be shown that the Blue Eagle carefully hatched it, nurtured the young vulture that came forth. and shelters with protecting wings of legalization what all hoped would be wiped off the movie map under the promised new deal of N.R.A.

Block booking simply means that a theater owner must buy his pictures in blocks. To get one picture he wants, he may have to take many he does not want, cannot use, and which are total loss to him.

Irving P. Gerber, testifying, on page 109, volume 2, of the board's transcript, said that he could not buy certain pictures from Columbia unless he agreed to take a certain number of short subjects also. Quoting from the transcript:

Q. What conversation took place in the short-order department of Columbia at this time?—A. In this particular instance ment of Columbia pictures were absolutely the last contract I was buying for the theaters, and I already had more shorts than my theater policies required, I told Mr. Wormser, the manager of the short-subjects departments, that I was unable to buy any shorts, as I only make three changes a week and I already have 800 shorts, telling him that under the code I think I am entitled to some privileges or rights, and I said: "Doesn't the code protect me from buying shorts?" And his exact words were, "To hell with the code. They don't give you any features."

And then this witness testified that he has been compelled to buy 976 shorts for two theaters and that it will take him 2½ years to run them all—but all come in the contract for | able for children to see, pictures with at least an element 1 year and must be paid for in advance in most cases.

"To hell with the code"-why should not the Big Eight refuse to worry about a code, drawn as this one was drawn?

There are literally hundreds of similar instances that could be related, many of them in the records of the board, but for brevity I will cite only a few. H. A. Cole, page 223, volume 1, of the transcript, cites an independent exhibitor who, at the request of women's clubs in his town sought to get the picture Little Women to offset the run of sex and gangster stuff being forced down his throat. From Mr. Cole's testimony:

"So, he went down to R.K.O. and said; 'I want to buy this picture.' The reply was, 'Well you can have it if you take 30 pictures with it.' He answered, 'I have not room for them. I have done my year's buying.' The answer was, 'That is the only way we will sell it to you.' He said, 'I will tell you what I will do. My people want that picture and if you will sell it to me I will give you 100 percent of the receipts.' The answer was, 'No; we can't take it.'"

Imagine, Mr. President, an exhibitor offering every cent of his receipts in order to get a decent, clean picture for his town and being refused!

That, let me remind you, is what is happening daily as the Blue Eagle spreads its protecting wings over Hollywood and Long Island studios.

Nor is that the worst part of it, for under that system the exhibitor at least can get pictures by signing on the dotted line to surrender his economic life and turn himself along the path to bankruptcy and destruction.

But the Big Eight, in addition, actually freezes out the little fellow by refusing him any pictures at all under any terms, in many cases.

On page 99, volume 2, of the transcript Mr. Charnow testifies that he went to Paramount and talked with the New Jersey manager about pictures for his New Jersey picture house.

Charnow was refused any pictures under any terms.

Charnow's testimony includes this conversation he had with Mr. Myron Settler, the Paramount manager:

Then I said to him: "I would like to put in a bid for those pictures." He said, "Mr. Charnow, you have known me long enough to know that it is not a question of how much you would like to pay for those pictures, whether you can afford to pay it or not, these pictures will be sold to the Fox interests for their entire circuit."

So Mr. Charnow went to the Fox people to get films and there, he testifies, Dave Levy, sales manager, said:

It is not a question of price.

And that no matter how much Charnow offered he could not get pictures.

Many others have testified to similar experiences with the Big Eight-it is either nothing at any price, or take 10 times what you can use and at our price.

Mr. President, I doubt if there is any industry in the Nation where such damnable collusion by a small group of pirates exists or where such extreme oppression is possible under the guidance and with the sanction of N.R.A. as a result of its codes and administration of them.

At no time in history has the little fellow been so friendless, so helpless, so unable to defend himself, so certain of complete destruction as since the Blue Eagle first soared from the mind of monopoly to become a vulture, a bird of prey, sinking its beak and its talons into the hearts of honest men.

I could go on indefinitely with illustrations, but I will present only one more. I think that everyone here should carefully study the testimony given before the board by Alida C. Bowler, director of the delinquency unit of the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor.

Let us remember that she is a Government official in an impartial department and that her testimony carries special weight, despite Mr. Rosenblatt's charges that only the disgruntled were called.

Miss Bowler tells of her own work and that of her department and of various civic organizations to get pictures suit-of decency and cleanliness. She tells how this is impossible under block booking, for Mae West must be included with Jackie Cooper under such a system.

Then Miss Bowler stated-page 174, volume 2:

When the N.R.A. was set up we all breathed a sigh of hope, and when we learned that the N.R.A. was to build a code of fair practice we were very hopeful because that had a good sound so many of these organizations with which I am in close contact presented their views largely to the effect that block booking had no place whatever in a code of fair practice, that an exhibitor should be able to be so responsive to these groups in his community that were interested in welfare, particularly the welfare of the child. Those protests were filed with formality at the code hearings and through all kinds of correspondence later. They felt that at least an independent exhibitor, and through him the children, should have a 50-50 break and be allowed at least a 50-50 selection on pictures which would, as pictures go, perhaps raise standards considerably if 50 percent could be rejected.

When Deviated the code came out those hopes were dashed completely.

Mr. President, what a tragic statement those 10 words form-"when the code came out those hopes were dashed completely."

What hopes? Why the hopes of our Government's welfare workers, of representatives of 4,000,000 mothers in this country seeking, pleading for merely a 50-50 break in the motion-picture entertainment offered their children.

Just 50-50 is all that was asked. Let us pick half of the pictures you sell us and we'll take anything you want for the other half-but just give us enough of a break so that we can at least get a little of what we want, of what the mothers of our towns want, of what our children should see.

And when the code came out, those hopes were dashed.

No truer statement ever was made. When the code came out those hopes were dashed on the rocks of destruction. dashed from aloft by the soaring blue bird of prey, the vulture hatched by the Big Eight and its associates, administered by it, and aimed directly at the life and happiness of thousands of small theater owners.

That is the tragic tale of N.R.A. from its first official actthe dashing of hopes of the downtrodden, dashing of the confidence built up through the promised answer to prayers for a new deal, dashing the brains of small, independent industrials against the impregnable stone wall of trusts and

Death for the small business man; riches and accomplishment of greed for the trust; ever-increasing burden of living costs for the consumer, and-to quote the testimony again-" to hell with the code!"

In other words, down with any thought that the code will stop any of this and let us drink a toast to the realization that the code fosters, encourages, and permits all of it.

Who is to blame?

Certainly, the trust for much of this. Who is to blame for permitting the trust to exist, to destroy its opponents with Government aid and sanction?

There can be only one answer.

The Blue Eagle—the N.R.A.—the new deal for monopoly which makes legal acts condemned and denounced either in fact or principle through centuries.

If there is any doubt of the trust's intimate connection and association with N.R.A. and the code, we have only to search a little further in the record and we will find that when an avalanche of complaints descended on Rosenblatt, he went not to Johnson but to Pittijohn, the trust's attorney in New York and to others of the trust.

Truly, had I had a part in making that code, in sanctioning it, my days would be uneasy, my nights well nigh sleepless.

Mr. President, this afternoon the newspaper carries this headline:

Johnson assails Darrow Board as communistic.

That is the only answer that has been made by N.R.A. to the findings of monopoly benefits by the Darrow Review Board—"the board is communistic." They have covered up the actual findings the board has made with that one herring "Communism! Men who only hear disgruntled witnesses!"

Ah, Mr. President, one of these fine mornings there is going to arrive in America a real awakening as to the terrible, frightful advantage which greedy and selfish monopolies have taken of the thing which was presumed to be and which was going to be a blessing upon small industry, a blessing to all the people; and yet today inventory reveals that the large measure of blessing which has flown from it has been that which has flown to monopoly itself. Today monopoly, the greedy, selfish interests, flagrantly ignore and deny those sections of the act which require that they play ball fairly with labor. Because they ignore them, labor and labor's friends come for more law to give them what another law assures them and insures them.

What we ought to do and what N.R.A. ought to do with those interests which are ignoring these labor factors is to take the code away from them, take away from them whatever blessing they enjoy under N.R.A., and cease this business of continually letting monopoly make a goose out of the Blue Eagle.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask for a vote on the joint resolution. It will have to go back to the House, in view of the fact that three amendments have been adopted. I think the debate is over.

Mr. LONG. Let us vote.

Mr. CUTTING. What joint resolution does the Senator mean?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Black in the chair). The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of House Joint Resolution 325.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD and Mr. CUTTING addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota desire recognition?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; I will wait until the vote is taken. Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate on the joint resolution.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I wish to address the Senate for about 10 minutes on another matter.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a vote on the joint resolution?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Very well; I will wait. I shall not delay a vote on the joint resolution.

PUBLIC WORKS AT NAVAL AIR STATION, PENSACOLA, FLA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1103) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with certain public works at the Naval Air Station, Pensacola, Fla., which was, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "$9,955,000", and insert "$5,363,000."

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVILIZATION-FUND CLAIM OF OSAGE NATION OF INDIANS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1948) amending the act entitled "An act authorizing the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in the civilization-fund claim of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States", approved February 6, 1921 (41 Stat. 1097).

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, by reason of the amendment carrying a direct authorization of appropriation of something like three-quarters of a million dollars, I move that this bill be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS COMMEMORATIVE OF CENTENNIAL OF THE DEATH OF THE MARQUIS DE LA FAYETTE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution No. 39, which was read, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 39

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be compiled and printed, with illustrations, in such form and style as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, 7,000 copies of the proceedings at the joint session of the two Houses of Congress in the Hall of the House of Representatives on May 20, 1934, held in commemoration of the centennial anniversary of the death of Gilbert du Motier, Marquis de

PRINTING PRAYERS OF REV. JAMES SHERA MONTGOMERY

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution No. 44, which was read, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 44

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That 2,500 copies of the prayers offered by the Reverend James Shera Montgomery, Chaplain of the House of Representatives, at the opening of the daily sessions of the House during the Seventy-second and Seventy-third Congresses, be printed and bound for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate agree to the concurrent resolution.

SETTLEMENT OF LABOR CONTROVERSIES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 375) to effectuate further the policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate on the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. I regret to delay a vote on this question. What I have to say will be said in a very few moments.

I think the Senate has been placed in an unfortunate situation, and I desire to make a brief protest expressing nothing but my own personal opinion.

I blame no individual for this situation, least of all the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette], who, in my judgment, was placed in a position where he could not possibly have done anything else except withdraw the amendment which he had offered. By any other course of action he would have been held responsible for a defeat of the amendment, which, owing to conditions outside of his control, was inevitable.

I desire to say, however, that I, for my part, cannot accept the theory that any Member of this body can acquire a vested right in a question of public policy. When we present a bill and have it printed, it then becomes a part of the public program before the Senate of the United States.

I appreciate as much as any man in this Chamber the splendid work which the junior Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] has done in preparing the so-called "Wagner bill"; but I submit that there were many Members of this body who were equally interested in this subject, and who refrained from any active participation because we relied upon the fact that the Senator from New York was in charge of it, and would at the proper time bring it before the Senate. I think that placed us all in a peculiar position, and I am sure the Senator from New York appreciates that situation as acutely as any of us.

The Senator said that it was the program to pass the pending joint resolution as an emergency measure, and that at the next session we could come back and pass permanent legislation along the lines of the original proposal.

Mr. President, the Senator from New York and many of the rest of us are just as much convinced now as we ever were that the original Wagner bill represents a sound public policy. Why do we have to postpone it for some 7 months, at the shortest possible period, in order to come back and do the same thing, after all of us know the results of administering the N.R.A. without some amendment to section 7 (a) of that act?

The National Recovery Act was always, to my mind, a highly doubtful piece of legislation. I voted for it, as did many other Members of this body, because we refused to accept the anarchic condition in industry which existed prior to that time. There was no other definite proposition before us, and we accepted it rather than by a negative vote to say that we wanted the existing chaos to continue.

The one chance, in my opinion, for the N.R.A. to have been successful was the building up of the purchasing power of the country; and that meant, in essentials, that wages would have to rise more speedily than prices. We all know that the reverse has been the case, and that as a consequence purchasing power has been diminished rather than increased.

One of the chief reasons for that is that labor, which essentially is equivalent to the consuming public, has not been given the same rights that were given by the administration of the act to the employers. That was not the intent of Congress. Section 7 (a) as originally written shows on its face that it was the intention of this body and the body at the other end of the Capitol to see that labor could be represented by agents of its own choosing. That has not been the case. It has been obvious that section 7 (a) ought to be amended.

In my opinion this joint resolution does nothing of the sort, and from all the discussion I have heard on the subject I believe it is scarcely worth passing.

Now we are going away from here, and we are not coming back until January. We are so anxious to get away-why, I do not know-that we must postpone a question of this enormous importance, and a question in which I believe a majority of the Senate are in accord with the position originally taken by the Senator from New York. We are not only leaving that legislation unsettled; we have before us a calendar of more than nine pages, containing at least a dozen measures of major importance. The situation before us, of course, is not the fault of the junior Senator from New York, and I am not blaming it on him; but we all know that within the past few days there has been a kind of bipartisan agreement to get all controversial matters out of the way so that we could get away at the earliest possible date, no matter how many questions might be put over for the next session of Congress.

Why should any of us lend himself to such a program? I do not know how, under the circumstances, one can best express one's opinion on the pending legislation.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I think the Senator and I have voted together on nearly everything, and I think we pretty well understand about what we can and what we cannot pass; and we are just wasting time.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I hope I am not wasting a great deal of the Senate's time. I know that this protest will be entirely unavailing. I know that the Senate has made up its mind to adjourn. I know that the same feeling exists at the other end of the Capitol; but I feel that a vote either for or against the pending joint resolution would be subject to complete misinterpretation unless I stated the attitude with which I intend to vote.

I think there are a few little things in this joint resolution which in some measure improve the situation as it exists at present, and if there is to be a record vote, I shall vote in the affirmative. To go home leaving the National Recovery Administration in the condition in which it is now, with 7 more months to go ahead before Congress will meet again, with nothing to improve the situation except what is in this joint resolution, seems to me outrageous. I can see no excuse for it.

No matter who believes differently, I wish to voice my own personal protest before we go. The new deal is being strangled in the house of its friends. We are going away from here when a fight could have put over the major portion of the program which is still on our calendar.

Mr. President, it is too late to revive the fight tonight. I do not intend to do so. The Senator from Louisiana has admonished me that I am wasting the time of the Senate. I do not care to discuss the relative amount of time consumed by the Senator from Louisiana and myself during the present session, but I will say to my friend that I know he feels the same way about the situation which exists as I feel.

Mr. LONG. I do, absolutely.

Mr. CUTTING. I hope that when we return and take up legislation of this sort, we may consider it at the beginning of the session, and take up nothing else until these things in the interest of the laborer and of the consumer of this country are taken care of.

We have done a good deal at this session, but most of it has been along the old lines; it has not been in the interest of the common people of the United States, and even though it be at such a late moment in the present session I desire to register my protest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed. On motion of Mr. Robinson of Arkansas, the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 143) to effectuate further the policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act was indefinitely postponed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 3419. An act to exempt articles of machinery belting from the tax on floor stocks imposed by the Agricultural Adjustment Act;

S. 3526. An act to amend the Air Commerce Act of 1926 and to increase the efficiency of the Aeronautics Branch of the Department of Commerce with respect to the development and regulation of civil aeronautics:

S. 3604. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the Bainbridge Island Chamber of Commerce, a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Agate Pass connecting Bainbridge Island with the mainland in Kitsap County, State of Washington", approved March 2, 1929;

S. 3626. An act referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement;

S. 3741. An act to convey certain lands to the State of South Dakota for public-park purposes, and for other purposes; and

S. 3788. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at Boca Chica, Tex.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 9936) to compensate widows and children of persons who died while receiving monetary benefits for disabilities directly incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service in the World War, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 551. An act for the relief of A. W. Holland;

S. 3739. An act to authorize the President to transfer to the Government of Haiti without charge to that Government certain property of the United States in Haiti; and

H.R. 9404. An act to authorize the formation of a body corporate to insure the more effective diversification of prison industries, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF BANKING ACT OF 1933 AND FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3748) to amend certain sections of the Banking Act of 1933 and the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment.

Mr. BULKLEY obtained the floor. Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BULKLEY. I promised to yield to the Senator from Arizona, but I should like to inquire whether the business he wishes to have transacted may be done by unanimous consent without displacing the pending bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no disposition to displace the unfinished business; and if the bill I wish to present shall lead to debate, I shall withdraw it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the proposal made by the Senator from Ohio is quite contrary to the rule. He can lay aside his bill temporarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending business before the Senate is the bill called up by the Senator from Ohio. The only way any other legislation can be considered is by unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business for the purpose of considering some other measure.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I think we had better go ahead with Senate bill 3748, unless unanimous consent can be obtained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does any Senator ask unanimous consent temporarily to lay the bill aside for the purpose of considering other legislation?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the bill in which I am interested is a bill which is recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary. Under the present law, whenever a boat, ship, or airplane brings contraband liquor into the United States, the courts have no jurisdiction; they must return the ship or the airplane to the persons who are charged with illegally introducing liquor into the United States.

The bill which I am about to report from the Committee on the Judiciary was drafted by the Treasury Department upon the suggestion and with the aid of the Department of Justice. It has been ordered reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and, I repeat, it does nothing more than leave it to the discretion of the judge as to whether or not he may return the boat, the ship, or the airplane.

What is the use, forsooth, of seizing a ship, a boat, or an airplane bringing liquor into the United States, when the law requires the judge to return it to the person unlawfully using it? Why not leave it to the judge's discretion to return the boat, the ship, or the plane, if in the judge's sound discretion it should be returned? That is all there is to the bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the bill to which he has referred. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

VESSELS INTRODUCING CONTRABAND LIQUOR INTO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary I report favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3646) to amend section 938 of the Revised Statutes to vest the courts with discretion to refuse to order the return of vessels seized for violation of any law of the United States; and to amend subsection (b) of section 7 of the Air Commerce Act of 1926, as amended, to provide for the forfeiture of aircraft used in violation of the customs laws; and I submit a report (No. 1454) thereon.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there was some confusion, and I should like to inquire of the Senator whether this is a House bill.

Mr. ASHURST. No; it is a Senate bill, and that is the reason why I have been so eager to secure action. While I do not suppose I am permitted to quote what will take place in another body, I am assured that the House will within an hour or two act on this bill. That is the reason why I am so importunate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 938 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 28, sec. 751) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Notwithstanding the provisions of this section or any other provisions of law relating to the return on bond of vessels seized for the violation of any law of the United States, the court having jurisdiction of the subject matter, may, in its discretion and upon good cause shown by United States, refuse to order such return of any such vessel to the claimant thereof.

United States, refuse to order such return of any such vessel to the claimant thereof.

SEC. 2. That subsection (b) of section 11 of the Air Commerce Act of 1926, as amended (U.S.C., Supp. VII, title 49, sec. 181), is amended by striking out the first sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following two new sentences: "Any person who (1) violates any provision of subdivision (a) of this section or any entry or clearance regulation made under section 7 (b) of this act, or (2) any immigration regulation made under such section, shall be subject to a civil penalty of $500 which may be remitted or mitigated by the Secretary of Commerce, or the Secretary of Labor, respectively, in accordance with such proceedings as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe. Any person violating any customs or public-health regulation made under section 7 (b) of this act, or any provision of the customs or public-health laws or regulations thereunder made applicable to aircraft by regulation under such section shall be subject to a civil penalty of $500, and any aircraft used in connection with any such violation shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture as provided for in such customs or public-health laws, which penalty and forfeiture may be remitted or mitigated by the Secretary of the Treasury."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3580) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 7742) for the relief of the present leaders of the United States Navy Band and the band of the United States Marine Corps, in which it requested the concurrence of the

INSURANCE CODE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that I may bring forward, I hope successfully, and have passed the bill H.R. 9178, the so-called "insurance bill." If it leads to any debate, I shall withdraw it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9178) to regulate the business of life insurance in the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when this bill was presented 2 days ago I objected to its consideration because I was not familiar with the bill. In the meantime the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Hebert] has made a study of it, and I rely upon his statement that there is no objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who announced that on today, June 16, 1934, the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

S. 74. An act to authorize payment of expenses of formulating claims of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians of Oklahoma against the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 1173. An act for the relief of Gladding, McBean & Co.; S. 2347. An act to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended;

S. 2674. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes ", approved May 12, 1933;

S. 3117. An act authorizing and directing the Court of Claims, in the event of judgment or judgments in favor of the Cherokee Indians, or any of them, in suits by them against the United States under the acts of March 19, 1924, and April 25, 1932, to include in its decrees allowances to Frank J. Boudinot, not exceeding 5 per cent of such recoveries, and for other purposes;

S.J.Res. 100. Joint resolution authorizing suitable memorials in honor of James Wilson and Seaman A. Knapp; and S.J.Res. 121. Joint resolution authorizing the President to return the mace of the Parliament of Upper Canada to the Canadian Government.

AMENDMENT OF BANKING ACT OF 1933 AND FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3748) to amend certain sections of the Banking Act of 1933 and the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

PUERTO RICAN IMPORT DUTY ON COFFEE

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland for what purpose he wants me to yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Agricultural Administration has asked that House bill 9946 be considered and passed at this time, because the loans which they have made on the coffee crop in Puerto Rico will be to some extent jeopardized without this proposed legislation. The situation, in a sentence, is is follows: The Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act permitted the Puerto Rican Legislature to place a 10-cent tax on coffee imports coming into Puerto Rico. The legislature passed the act 10 days before the Smoot-Hawley Act was finally signed.

Mr. BULKLEY. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside the pending bill and to consider House bill 9946. I do not think it will cause any debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings] asks unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the pending unfinished business, and that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of House bill 9946. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I cannot object until I know whether the bill has been reported by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill does not seem to be in possession of the clerk, so it is pretty hard to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. TYDINGS. I myself reported it, Mr. President, so I know it has been reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There seems to be some confusion. The clerk advises the Chair that there are two such bills.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am referring to House bill 9946, the duplicate Senate bill being Senate 3799.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland asks for the consideration of the House bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. I desire to have the House bill considered.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H.R. 9946) providing for the ratification of joint resolution no. 59 of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, approved by the Governor May 5, 1930, imposing an import duty on coffee imported into Puerto Rico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? The title is so brief I could not gather the purport of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Under the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act the Puerto Rico Legislature was authorized to levy a tax on coffee. They levied such a tax on coffee; but the law preceded the final signing of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill. The court has declared that action illegal. This is only to correct that hiatus.

Mr. McNARY. Has the bill been referred to the committee?

Mr. TYDINGS. It has been referred to the committee, and been approved by the committee and passed the House. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration asked for its passage so as to protect their loans on coffee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 9946) providing for the ratification of joint Resolution No. 59 of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, approved by the Governor May 5, 1930, imposing an import duty on coffee imported into Puerto Rico, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TYDINGS. I move that Senate bill 3799 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF BANKING ACT OF 1933 AND FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3748) to amend certain sections of the Banking Act of 1933 and the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BULKLEY. For what purpose does the Senator from Mississippi ask me to yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to delay the consideration of the bill now under consideration. However, I have a few matters which will not cause debate which I should like to have taken up.

Mr. BULKLEY. I am quite willing to yield to the Senator from Mississippi to propound a request for unanimous consent, as indicated by him, but I want to say that I am not going to yield any further for similar requests.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside and that House Joint Resolution 365 be immediately considered. This is the joint resolution proposing to amend the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended, containing a provision for withholding $20,000,000 now in the Treasury of the United States which will be paid out very soon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the resolution by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H.J.Res. 365) to amend the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the House joint resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I cannot keep up with the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The measures are read only by title, and, of course, the Senator must take them on good faith. That is the view of the Chair.

Mr. McNARY. What is the bill about?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will permit me, I will make an explanation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, would not the Senator from Mississippi be willing to put off the consideration of the bill until the banking bill has been passed? There may be objection to the measure the Senator is proposing.

Mr. HARRISON. If it is going to cause discussion, I will put it off.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection has been heard.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Chair will recognize me following the disposition of the bill now under consideration. The measure I refer to is a very important one.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, Senate bill 3743 is an omnibus bill providing about 20 amendments of a minor character to the Banking Act of 1933 and the National Banking Act and to the Federal Reserve Act. Every provision in it has been recommended either by the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Reserve Board, or both; and every provision in it has been carefully considered and unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. A careful report has been submitted to the Senate and printed; and in view thereof, I do not think we ought to consume the time of the Senate in discussing the individual provisions of the bill.

There are several amendments which I desire to offer, the first four of which have been considered and authorized by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 2, line 7, after the comma, to insert "or to other financial institutions or private bankers."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 8, between lines 2 and 3, to insert the following new section:

SEC. 10. The first sentence of paragraph (m) of section 11 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 12, sec. 248), is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, That with respect to loans represented by obligations in the form of notes secured to loans represented by obligations in the form of notes secured by not less than a like amount of bonds or notes of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States, such limitation of 10 percent on loans to any person shall not apply, but State member banks shall be sub-ject to the same limitations and conditions as are applicable in the case of national banks under paragraph (8) of section 5200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 84)."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have been waiting for nearly 6 hours for a message from the other end of the Capitol transmitting some House amendments to a Senate bill. I think it will be here in 5 minutes. At about 2 o'clock I had a report that the House amendments would be over in about 10 minutes; and at 3 o'clock I received a report that they would be over in about 15 minutes. At 4 o'clock I received a report that they would be over here in 20 minutes. At 5 o'clock I received a report that they would be here in 10 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is holding his own. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Chair may be permitted to say so, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley] has presented an amendment, which is being considered.

Mr. LONG. I am discussing that amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is sure the Senator from Louisiana realizes that the Senate is not responsible for the delay of his amendments in the House of Representatives.

Mr. LONG. That is why I am discussing the amendment which is now before the Senate. That is why I am addressing myself to that amendment. Now, along about 6 o'clock they cut the time down to 5 minutes, so I went over and told one of my colleagues to stay here, and we have sat here all day long; we have not had a bite to eat, waiting for those amendments to come in here in order to move to concur in them, but for some reason or other we cannot seem to get any results at all.

I am referring to the House amendments to Senate bill 3580, which passed the House practically unanimously. I do not want to interrupt the business of the Senator from Ohio, but I should like to know, if I can, from the Senator how many more amendments he will have to offer after this one.

Mr. BULKLEY. About three or four.

Mr. LONG. Three or four; and that will wind up this bill?

Mr. BULKLEY. I do not know whether the bill will be wound up or not.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I will wait about 5 minutes to see what happens.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY].

send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 8, line 14, to strike out "and the District of Columbia" and insert "the District of Columbia, and the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska", and in lines 15 and 16 to strike out "and the District of Columbia" and insert "the District of Columbia, and the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. I offer a further amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 12, line 18, after the period, to insert the following:

Nothing contained in this paragraph shall prohibit any executive officer of a member bank from endorsing or guaranteeing for the protection of such bank any loan or other assets which shall have been previously acquired by such bank in good faith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 17, after line 19, add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 20. The fifth paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 324) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "Such reports of condition shall be in such form and shall contain such information as the Federal Reserve Board may require, and shall be published by the reporting banks in such manner and in accordance with such regulations as the said Board may prescribe."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me at this point?

Mr. BULKLEY. For what purpose?

Mr. LONG. I am willing for the Senator to discuss the amendment if he desires to do so.

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I now have information that the Frazier bill, to which I have previously referred, will be over here in 10 minutes

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is interesting! [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. I am glad to know I have interested the Chair. I have been trying for the last 12 months to interest the Chair, and this is the first time the Chair has acknowledged in a public manner that he is interested. [Laughter.] That is the progress I have made. Some people think I have not made any progress since I have been in the Senate. Whenever I attract the attention of the second highest officer of the United States, sitting underneath the American flag, and that officer publicly acknowledges it, that is progress to be reported back to the people of Louisiana. [Laughter.]

There is some very important business we have been trying to get Congress to undertake. I do not intend to interrupt the passage of the bill in charge of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], because I think it will take 10 minutes. Several Senators think we ought to take a temporary recess after we pass his bill, but I do not think we ought to do that. It will take at least 10 minutes to get through with the bill in charge of the Senator from Ohio, because if the bill in which I am interested has not come over from the House in the meantime, I shall want to address some remarks, some very interesting remarks, to the Chair and to the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment, which I offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 2, line 13, before the quotation marks, to insert a comma and the following:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. I offer a further amendment, which I and to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Provided further, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to make it unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation engaged in the business of receiving deposits subject to check or otherwise, from engaging at the same time in the business of selling or distributing at retail notes or other similar obligations the payment of which is secured by deeds of trust, mortgages, or other similar liens on real property.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, who offered the amendment?

Mr. BULKLEY. I offered it.

Mr. COUZENS. After the omnibus bill was reported out of the Banking and Currency Committee, how did all these amendments arise without being considered by the com-

Mr. BULKLEY. Most of the amendments have been considered by the committee. This particular amendment was not, but it relates to this subject. It has been interpreted that mortgages are securities within the prohibition against commercial banks dealing in securities. It would generally be admitted, I think, that we did not intend to prohibit them from dealing in mortgages. The amendment was prepared by the legislative drafting bureau to cure that interpretation.

Mr. COUZENS. May they deal in mortgages to the same extent that was provided in the bill which we passed today, known as the "National Housing Act"?

Mr. BULKLEY. No; it does not provide the extent to which they may deal nor increase their right to do so. It simply provides that the prohibition against dealing in securities shall not prevent them dealing in mortgages.

Mr. COUZENS. Then they may buy and sell mortgages? Mr. BULKLEY. If they have the right otherwise. It simply provides that the inhibition against dealing in securities shall not apply, as I have described.

Mr. COUZENS. Does it meet the approval of the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], whose act it amends?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Virginia to answer the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, on account of illness I turned the management of the omnibus bill over to my colleague from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley], and in circumstances of that sort the Senator from Michigan will readily agree that I ought not to dissent from anything he proposes.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield. Mr. WALCOTT. I am familiar with all the amendments except the last two. With those two I am not familiar. Some of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber are asking about them. I should like a little further explanation, because I do not know about them. I know about the others, and I am in favor of them.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have undertaken to explain it. We have prohibited banks from dealing in securities. That prohibition has been interpreted to mean that mortgages are securities. I think the Senator from Connecticut will agree that we had not intended to prohibit dealing in mortgages. The amendment is to clarify that situation and to make clear that we have not that intention.

(At this point Mr. Bulkley yielded to enable the Senate to receive a message from the House of Representatives.)

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio permit the Chair to lay before the Senate a House amendment to a Senate bill which has just come over from the

Mr. BULKLEY. I would rather proceed with the bill now before the Senate and let the Senator take up his matter at a later time.

Mr. LONG. Then, I want to make a speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator may not make a speech unless the Senator from Ohio yields to him.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule of the Senate provides that only one Senator may occupy the floor at a time.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I appreciate very much indeed the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio in answering my question. I am satisfied with the Senator's explanation of the amendment and am in favor of it. I am familiar with it.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, was the amendment agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not yet been agreed to. Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. From the explanation the Senator made I got the impression that the thought he meant to convey or the belief he has is that a mortgage is different from other securities. Has there been a distinction made between what are generally called "securities and mortgages "2

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; and the amendment is intended to make clear that we intended such a distinction, because we have prohibited banks from dealing in stocks and bonds, but we did not intend to prohibit them from dealing in mortgages.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What is the reason for the distinction? Mr. BULKLEY. It is rather a long story. The dealings in stocks and bonds have had a very injurious effect on the general financial situation. By almost unanimous consent, under the Banking Act of 1933, we prohibited that business from being carried on; but dealing in mortgages is an entirely different kind of business, and I, for one, have never presumed that the act would be interpreted as having prohibited dealing in mortgages. Does the Senator think we ought to prohibit a commercial bank from dealing in mortgages?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I cannot see why a commercial bank should be permitted to buy long-term mortgages.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, we cannot hear what is going on.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. We want to know something about this proposal. What is the use of hurrying here? We want to know what is being passed. This is important legislation. Why rush it through? We have a right to know.

Mr. BULKLEY. The Senator has a right to discuss it; certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What is this hurry? What I cannot understand is why a bank should be permitted to buy a long-term mortgage and not a long-term bond. What is the difference?

Mr. BULKLEY. This amendment does not increase any powers that the banks have to deal in mortgages, but simply makes it clear that the inhibition against dealing in stocks and bonds does not include mortgages.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator describe the difference between a mortgage bond and a mortgage itself, if a bank is not permitted to deal in bonds?

Mr. BULKLEY. I think the Senator is familiar with the difference between a bond secured by a mortgage and a mortgage itself.

Mr. COUZENS. If we are going to open up these commercial banks, which I understand the Senator from Virginia has always protested against, to dealing in securities. what difference does it make whether they deal in a lot of individual mortgages or whether they deal in a bond secured by mortgages?

Mr. BULKLEY. It seems to me there is a great deal of difference.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not see it. I wish it could be explained to me.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is just what I should like to have explained.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, frankly, I do not care very much one way or the other about this amendment. I am offering it at the request of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd]. I do not think it is necessary. I do not think the prohibition means to include mortgages, anyway. The amendment is offered out of abundance of precaution. I should rather withdraw it than to go to any great debate over it; but if Senators are opposed to it, why not have a vote on the amendment?

Mr. COUZENS. I do not want to take advantage of the | chairman of the subcommittee that handled this matter; but I am unable to see the difference between a commercial bank handling 10 mortgages of $5,000 each and handling a bond issue secured by a mortgage based on 10 bonds of $5,000 each. What is the difference? They are both mortgages. In one case there is a prohibition against handling bonds secured by mortgage, and the amendment that is proposed permits dealing in mortgages without the bonds. It is the same thing so far as the security is concerned.

Mr. BULKLEY. It is the same thing as far as it always has been permitted. It does not enlarge the authority to any degree.

Mr. COUZENS. But the banks have been dealing in bonds; and although we put in a prohibition against dealing in securities, the door is being opened wide, not only by this omnibus bill but by the amendment which the Senator is offering.

Mr. BULKLEY. It is quite apparent to me that the Senator's interpretation of what was done in the Banking Act of 1933 is quite different from mine. Did the Senator understand that by that act we were prohibiting dealing in mortgages?

Mr. COUZENS. I think a mortgage is a security the same as any other kind of security that the banks heretofore dealt in; and if the door is to be opened wide to commercial banks to engage in the same kind of activities that they were engaging in when the collapse came, then we are going to open the door to everything that has been happening in the past?

I think this amendment, if it is to be presented, ought to be defeated.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What is a bond but a mortgage?

Mr. BULKLEY. I really should be glad to have the amendment submitted to a vote. I do not think it is an important amendment at all. It was not considered by the committee.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BULKLEY. I do. Mr. COUZENS. If the Senator does not think the amendment is important, I think it would relieve the situation if the Senator would withdraw it, because it never has been considered by a committee.

Mr. BULKLEY. It never has.
Mr. COUZENS. No consideration has been given to it; and in spite of all the trouble we went to, in passing the Glass Act of 1933, to prevent this sort of thing, it is now proposed to open the door to it again.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I think it is very appropriate to ask that the amendment be withdrawn on the ground that it has not been considered by the committee. That is the fact, and I am willing to withdraw it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. Mr. BULKLEY. I now offer a further amendment. I will say frankly that this amendment has not been considered by the committee but it is requested by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and has the approval of the chairman of the committee. It has not been considered by the full committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 8, line 3, after "Sec. 10", it is proposed to insert "(a)".

On page 8, after line 20, it is proposed to insert the following:

(b) Section 12B, as amended, of the Federal Reserve Act is further amended by inserting after the eighth paragraph of subsection (1) of said section 12B the following additional para-

"Whenever a bank whose deposits are insured under the terms of this section desires to consolidate with or merge with or assume, in whole or in part, the deposit liabilities of another banking institution, whether operating or closed, it shall apply to the Corporation for approval thereof, and if the board of directors disapprove the plan the consummation thereof notwithstanding such disapproval shall immediately terminate the membership of such bank in the fund or in the Corporation, as the case may be. If the plan be approved and the consolidation, merger, or assumption become effective, such bank shall immediately subscribe to class A stock in the Corporation or pay an assessment, as the case may be, on account of the added deposit liability assumed in accordance with the standards prescribed by this section for original subscriptions or assessments."

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the purpose of the amendment? It is a long amendment, and it has not been considered by the committee.

Mr. BULKLEY. The purpose of the amendment is to make clear what happens with respect to the adjustment of relations between a bank and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in cases of mergers and consolidations of banks. It is a purely technical amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I have no further amendments. Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, between lines 18 and 19, it is proposed to insert the following:

(c) The provisions of section 21 (a) (2) of the Banking Act of 1933 (relating to engaging in the business of receiving deposits by certain financial institutions not subject to examination and regulation under State or Federal law) shall not take effect until June 16, 1935, in cities having a population of less than 100,000 inhabitants as determined by the Fifteenth Decennial

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, just one word of explanation.

This amendment merely proposes to extend the operation of the Banking Act of 1933, as it affects private banks located in cities of less than 25,000 population, for a period of 1 year. In some of the States the smaller communities have had private banks which render a real service, and those institutions desire to have the State legislature make arrangements to enact legislation that will enable them to get into the State system.

This proposal was introduced as a separate bill, and has been submitted to various members of the Banking and Currency Committee, and has been pending before the committee for some months. I do not think there can be any substantial opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the amendment has not been considered by the committee, but I have no objection to it and I think the chairman of the committee has no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, between lines 6 and 7; it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. - Paragraph "seventh" of section 5136 of the Revised SEC. —, Paragraph "seventh" of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 24; supp. VII, title 12, sec. 24), is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end of the second sentence thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the purchase and holding by any association for its own account, within the limitations herein prescribed, of (1) the investment securities of any corporation, and at the same time own account, within the limitations herein prescribed of (1) the investment securities of any corporation, and at the same time (2) the investment securities of any corporation affiliated with such corporation, whether or not the investment securities of such affiliated corporation are guaranteed by the parent corporation, or are by their terms or as a matter of law the obligations of the parent corporation or of any other affiliated corporation thereof".

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, that is the amendment which was spoken of in the committee. I was asked to consult the Comptroller about it. In cases of consolidations of railroads it is merely to permit the corporation to have 10 percent in the New York Central, for instance, 50 percent in the Lake Shore, and 50 percent in the West Shore. They are different corporations, but owned by one.

I think the Senator having charge of the bill will accept the amendment.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, after line 24, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 6. The last sentence of section 5153 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 90), as amended, is amended to read as follows: "Any association may, upon the deposit with it of public money of a State or any political subdivision thereof or any public district or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, or of any money by any officer, employee, or agent thereof, in his official capacity, give security for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the money so deposited, of the same kind as is authorized by the law of the State in which such association is located, in the case of other banking institutions in the State; and security for deposits described in this sentence heretofore given shall be valid except to the extent that enforcement of such security has been denied by the Comptroller of the Currency."

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, in order to meet a condition which existed in the State of Illinois, I introduced a bill providing that national banks could be required to give security to secure the deposits of public funds made by States, municipal subdivisions, or their officers. The bill was considered in the Committee on Banking and Currency, or the Committee on Finance, and the committee did not seem to want to go so far as to adopt the policy of the national banks securing public deposits.

In the State of Illinois we have a law under which public officers charged with the handling of funds can require the State banks to give security for such public deposits. The treasurer of the State of Illinois has under his control for deposit in the various depositories something like $54,000,000. Of this amount, some $24,000,000 is deposited with national banks.

Heretofore the Comptroller of the Currency has permitted those banks to give security for those deposits, but under a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States it was held that it was not within the power of the Comptroller to order the banks to do that.

This amendment simply places the national banks in my State on a par with the State banks and provides that where the State law requires security for public funds in a State the Comptroller may authorize the national banks to give security for State funds.

Unless this amendment shall be enacted, it goes without saying that our treasurer will have to withdraw from national banks some $24,000,000. This amendment was drafted by the Comptroller's Office and meets with the approval of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the subject matter covered by the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois was considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the committee refused to take any action on it, on the ground that the committee is opposed to the general principle of public deposits having any security and to giving them a preference over the deposits of the ordinary depositor. Therefore the committee has been unwilling to take any action along this line.

However, it is recognized that there is a practical situation to be met if the national banks are required to compete with State banks, and in many States there are laws permitting securities to be given for public deposits. If national banks are not permitted to meet that competition, and if nothing is done to require State banks to submit to the same inhibition under which national banks labor, the national banks will be at a disadvantage which might well be called an unfair disadvantage.

Furthermore, the Comptroller of the Currency is already under some embarrassment on account of security having been given for public deposits, and it already having been sold in satisfaction of debts, and many of those transactions would have to be unwound if the amendment of the Senator from Illinois were not agreed to.

Therefore, still protesting against the principle of having any security given at all for public deposits, I do not think we ought to resist the adoption of the amendment just offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DIETERICH. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to move to amend the bill by striking out section 18. I can explain in just a moment why I desire to strike the section out. As a matter of fact an effort has been made to put through this identical provision of law before, at this session of the Congress, but it did not succeed.

I first call attention to the fact that when the banking bill was passed last year, I think to the great surprise of a number even of the members of the committee, the Federal Reserve bank was given the right to sue in the Federal courts in the various States, even on a $50 note. That has caused a great deal of trouble in the various States.

Section 18 of the bill before us carries that matter still further and provides that the Federal courts shall have original jurisdiction in all suits by receivers. That would mean that if a man having a note in a bank went into the hands of a receiver and the note was for $50 or $100, and he lived a hundred miles away from a Federal court, a suit could be filed in the Federal court.

I do not believe this body thinks that such a thing should be enacted. I cannot believe that the committee thoroughly understood the effect of that provision.

What it means is this. It changes the law. It would give jurisdiction to a Federal court, which might be a hundred miles away from a farmer who had a note in the hands of a bank which went into the hands of a receiver, and would require any suit on that note to be defended in the Federal court.

I believe that a receiver ought to take his chances in the State court, the same as a bank does, and for that reason I do not think we should further extend the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Already the Federal courts can entertain actions if the indebtedness is as much as $3,000, and, speaking for myself, I would favor decreasing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, rather than increasing it.

It is far less expensive to defend a suit in a State court. There is no reason why a man who may live 50 miles away from a Federal court should have to go 50 miles from his home and employ a lawyer to defend a suit. It costs more to defend, and I do not believe it is fair. I hope the Senator will not insist upon this particular section being retained.

This matter has come before this body on previous occasions, and the Senator from Florida will recall that about a month ago, at my request, he agreed to an amendment which took out from another bill a provision still further extending the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

I hope the Senator from Ohio will follow the same course in this matter.

Mr. BULKLEY. The Comptroller of the Currency has asked for this largely to resist what I believe to be extreme cases of preferences given by way of secured deposits in banks. The rule in many State courts is much more liberal with respect to allowing preferences than it is in the Federal courts. I quote from a communication from the Comptroller of the Currency in which he says:

Recently attorneys for claimants asserting preferred claims have attempted to avoid this Federal rule and obtain preferred treatment for their claims by bringing suit against failed banks as corporations rather than against the receivers, to prevent the removal to the Federal court and circumvent the strict Federal rule as to preferred claims.

Believing that all depositors have a right to equal treatment and that we ought to frown upon all preferred claims, I hope that the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] will not prevail.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator from Ohio if the statement I made is not correct, which is, that if this bill should become a law as it is, a man who happens to owe a $100 note in a bank which goes into the hands of the receiver could be required to defend in the Federal court instead of the State court? That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BULKLEY. I think so.

Mr. BLACK. That is the reason I am opposing the provision in the bill and offering the amendment, and I am going to ask to have a vote on it. If necessary, I should like to have a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I suppose most Senators are like I am in this respect, that they have not read the bill. We do not know what it is about. We hear Senators saying it is an outrage to pass legislation in this way. I just heard the Senator from Alabama, who, I assume, is somewhat familiar with this bill, say that the bill which is pending increases the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. If it does, it ought, in my judgment, to be defeated.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator has been in the Senate for a long time. I wish to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Nebraska. There is now pending on the desk in the Senate a House amendment to the Frazier bill. It is the only amendment there is on the desk. Every other amendment that has come in from the House tonight has been adopted, until the Frazier bill was reached, and when that was brought in here, after taking some 6 hours beyond the regular time, then suddenly they stopped laying House amendments before the Senate.

As an experienced Senator I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he understands that kind of proceeding? I am mystified. I am at a loss to understand it. This is getting to be a serious matter, and I want the Senator, if he can, to tell me what is it which causes them to stop at the time when the farmer is about to get some kind of relief, when the Senate seems to be voting relief for everyone else but the farmer

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). May the Chair remind the Senator from Louisiana that the Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio does not have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair has just taken the chair. The Senator has a right to have bills that come over from the House laid before the Senate if the Senator from Ohio yields for that purpose.

Mr. BULKLEY. No, Mr. President; I will not yield for that purpose, because I gave notice sometime ago on the subject. I tried to be generous and yielded to a number of Senators to take up other matters, and the present occupant of the chair asked for a similar unanimous-request consent; but in view of the fact that it seemed that it would lead to debate, I refused to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have been recognized by the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris].

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to protest about what has been going on here, about asking the Senator from Ohio to yield when he is offering 15 or 20 amendments to a bill. Any man who will give it any thought whatever will have to agree that that is a proceeding which cannot be defended. When the Senator from Ohio offers an amendment to a bill, if a Senator desires to talk on it he must get the consent of the Senator from Ohio. There must come a time in parliamentary procedure when we are called upon to vote upon an amendment, and any Member of the Senate is entitled to recognition in his own right and obtain the floor. I do not think the Senator from Louisiana or any other Senator can require the Senator from Ohio to yield the floor when he is making a speech; but when the Senator from Ohio offers an amendment, before it is voted on any other Senator has a right to speak on that amendment. The Senator from Ohio cannot retain the floor from one amendment to another and have them adopted.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BULKLEY. The Senator certainly does not understand that I have presumed to keep the floor when an amendment was being discussed.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I will say that, so far as the Senator from Ohio is concerned, I do not know that he has tried to do that. But that has been going on. The Chair has been saying, "Here is an amendment. The Senator from Ohio has the floor." He finally puts the question, and says, "Without objection, it is agreed to." It is an impossible parliamentary procedure to shut anyone off from debate and an opportunity to be heard on an amendment. Then the Senator from Ohio offers another amendment and the same procedure is gone through with. All these amendments are subject to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair admits that that in his version of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was induced to take the floor because of what the Senator from Alabama said. I believe that if the Senators knew that this bill, or some amendment to it-I do not know exactly the one now pending-which it is sought to put through here at the last moment of the session, when everyone is thinking of something else, perhaps to be followed by some other bill that they want to have taken up-if they knew that an amendment was being adopted, or a bill was being approved by the Senate which will compel a man, as the Senator from Alabama has said, who has had a claim in a national bank which is in receivership to travel, in some instances, 400 miles for a hearing in court, when he ought to be heard in his own county, when he would be heard in his own county if the State courts had jurisdiction, they would want to give it further consideration. If this bill gives to the Federal court any such jurisdiction, it ought to be defeated. At least we are considering a bill here that has never been read by the clerk.

The first thing we did was to start in to consider amendments. No one could tell by the reading of those amendments, which referred to a particular page or a particular line, what the amendments meant. We did not know what it was about. The result is that one or two men are now passing legislation through the Senate which the other Members of the Senate know nothing about. I protest against it.

Mr. President, we ought to proceed in an orderly way. If it takes 2 weeks more, let us take them. I am perfectly willing to take up the bill which the Senator has in charge, if it could be considered as we ordinarily consider legislation, but there is such a feeling here that if a Senator says a word or asks a question he is out of place. We have got to vote on these amendments. We do not like to vote them down when we do not understand what they are about. We do not want to be discourteous or unfair to the Senator from Ohio, who is back of this bill. But now something has happened. If the statement made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] be true, in my judgment, it demonstrates that there is something wrong with this bill, as I look at it.

Mr. BULKLEY. Now, Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BULKLEY. Certainly the Senator will agree that I have endeavored to answer thoroughly and frankly every question which has been asked.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator has. I am not finding fault with the Senator.

Mr. BULKLEY. I am not asking that anything be rushed through. I invite full discussion on any question in which any Senator may be interested.

Mr. NORRIS. A full discussion of the bill will take 2 or 3 days.

Mr. BULKLEY. I hope the Senator will not take that view. We are trying to get through a bill before adjournment. Frankly I do want to cut debate short. I stated my reasons why I think the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], to strike out this section should not prevail, but I am perfectly satisfied to go ahead and take a vote on it: and if it is the judgment of the Senate to strike out this section, I consider that it has nothing to do with anything else in the bill, and the bill will be just as good in other respects with this section out.

Mr. NORRIS. I move to strike the section out.

Mr. BULKLEY. I am willing to take a vote on it now without any further debate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I made that motion to strike it out

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black].

DIRECT LOANS FOR INDUSTRIAL PURPOSES-CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GLASS submitted a conference report on the bill (S. 3487) relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(For conference report, see p. 12226.)

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have every desire in the world to see the banking legislation expedited as fast as my friend from Ohio wishes to have it done, but I wish to make a statement now so I will have it in the RECORD.

I tried to get this matter answered by my friend from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], but I am going to state it again. There has been laid before the Senate every House amendment to a Senate bill that has come over from the House. We have concurred in House amendments as fast as they came until we reached the House amendments to the Frazier bill.

This afternoon I was told at about 1 or 2 o'clock, or along about that time, that the House would send the Frazier bill over here in about 10 minutes. They kept whizzing around about it, and finally it got to be 5 o'clock, and I began to smell something rotten in Denmark. I had about 16 Members of the other House and half a dozen Senators and two or three Ambassadors from Turkey and Mesopotamia and other places over there trying to find out what was going on, what was wrong with that outfit, that they did not get the bill over here.

About 6 o'clock they reduced the time to 10 minutes, and about 6:30, I believe, it was reduced to 5 minutes. It is now 7 o'clock, and I have been trying to get my friend from Ohio to do what we have done here all day long, and that is to let the matter be laid before the Senate and let us concur in the House amendment to the Senate bill. We are ready to concur in it, but I cannot get it laid before the

We have been very considerate about the banking bill. do not know much about the banking bill, but it does not do much good to get rid of bank bills, because they wind up with the whole thing in a maze anyway. One time for 21 or 22 days I tried to study and understand the bank bill, and when I got through I did not know any more about it than when I went into it. I concluded it would do no good to study it 22 days more.

We have laid down every amendment that came over from the House until we reached the farmer amendment. We laid down the bankruptcy amendment for the benefit of the railroads p.d.q. We laid down the bankruptcy amendment for the benefit of corporations p.d.q. We laid down the bankruptcy amendment for municipal corporations p.d.q. But when we come here with a bankruptcy bill for farmers on the closing night of the session, we cannot get it laid down; and I do not understand what it is that prevents our having action on it. It is the only one we cannot get laid down.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. NYE. Perhaps what the Senator referred to as smelling is not so far away as Denmark.

Mr. LONG. No; it is not. It is getting too close to us. It is the queerest thing I ever saw happen in the Senate. It beats anything I ever saw as long as I have been here and as long as I have been anywhere else. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest to the Senator that he ask the Chair to lay the matter before the Senate.

Mr. LONG. I do so now. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, and ask now that the House amendment be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the rule of the Senate with reference to such matters is as follows, being paragraph 7 of rule VII:

The Presiding Officer may at any time lay, and it shall be in order at any time for a Senator to move to lay, before the Senate, any bill or other matters sent to the Senate by the President or the House of Representatives, and any question pending at that time shall be suspended for this purpose. Any motion so made shall be determined without debate.

Mr. LONG. Then I move that the Chair lay before the Senate the message from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3580) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 75 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended, is amended as follows: In section 75, entitled "Agricultural Compositions and Extensions", after subsection (r) add a new subsection (s), to read as follows:

"(s) Any farmer failing to obtain the acceptance of a majority in number and amount of all creditors whose claims are affected by a composition or extension proposal, or if he feels aggrieved by the composition or extension, may amend his petition or answer asking to be adjudged a bankrupt. Such farmer may, at the time of the first hearing, petition the court that all of his property, whether pledged, encumbered, or unencumbered, by at the time of the first hearing, petition the court that all of his property, whether pledged, encumbered, or unencumbered, by liens or otherwise, be appraised, and that his exemptions as prescribed by the State law, subject to any liens thereon, be set aside and that he be allowed to retain possession of any part or parcel or all of the remainder of his property and pay for same under the terms and conditions set forth in this subsection (s).

"(1) Upon such a request being made in the petition or answer, at the time of the first hearing, appraisers shall be designated and appointed. Such appraisers shall appraise all the property of the debtor at its then fair and reasonable value, not necessarily the market value at the time of such appraisal. The appraisals shall be made in all other respects, with right of objections, exceptions, and appeal, in accordance with this act: Provided, That in case of real estate either party may file objections, exceptions, and appeals within 1 year from date of order approving the appraisal.

vided, That in case of real estate either party may file objections, exceptions, and appeals within 1 year from date of order approving the appraisal.

"(2) After the value of the debtor's property shall have been fixed by the appraisal as herein provided, the referee shall issue an order setting aside to such debtor his exemptions as prescribed by the State law, subject to any existing mortgages or liens upon any such exemptions to an amount equal to the value, as fixed by the appraisal, of the value of such exempt property as is covered by any mortgage or lien, and shall further order that the possession, under the control of the court, of any part or parcel or all of the remainder of the debtor's property, shall remain in the debtor subject to a general lien, as security for the payment of the value thereof to the trustee of the creditors, if a trustee is appointed, such a lien to be subject to and inferior to all prior liens, pledges, or encumbrances. Such prior liens, pledges, or encumbrances shall be subject to the payment of the claims of the secured creditors holding such prior liens, pledges, or encumbrances up to the actual value of such property as fixed by the appraisal provided for herein. All liens herein on livestock shall cover all increase, and all liens on real property shall cover all rental received or crops grown thereon by the debtor, as security for the payment of any sum that may be due or past due under the terms and provisions of the next paragraph, until the full value of any such particular property has been paid.

"(3) Upon request of the debtor, and with the consent of the lien holder or lien holders, the trustee after the order is made

"(3) Upon request of the debtor, and with the consent of the lien holder or lien holders, the trustee, after the order is made setting aside to the debtor his exemptions, shall agree to sell to the debtor any part, parcel, or all of the remainder of the bank-rupt estate at the appraised value upon the following terms and conditions, and upon such other conditions as in the judgment of the trustee shall be fair and equitable:

"a. Payment of 1 percent interest upon the appraised price within 1 year from the date of said agreement.

"b. Payment of 2½ percent of the appraised price within 2 years from the date of said agreement.

"c. Payment of an additional 2½ percent of the appraised price within 3 years from the date of said agreement.

"d. Payment of an additional 5 percent of the appraised price within 4 years from the date of said agreement.

"(4) An agreement having been reached as provided in subsection (3), the debtor may consume or dispose of any part or parcel or all of said property whether covered by the general lien to the trustee, if a trustee is appointed, or subject to pledges or prior liens or encumbrances held by secured creditors, provided he pays the appraised value of such part or parcel or all, as the case may be, to the secured creditors, as their interests may appear, and the trustee of the unsecured creditors, as his interests may appear, if a trustee is appointed, or he may put up a bond approved by the referee in bankruptcy that he will make payments, as provided for herein, of any property so consumed or disposed of.

"(5) In case the debtor fails to make any payments, as herein provided, to any or all of the secured creditors or to the trustee of the unsecured creditors, then such secured creditors or the trustee may proceed to enforce their pledge, llen, or encumbrances in accordance with law. It shall be the duty of the secured creditors and of the trustee of the unsecured creditors to discharge all liens of record in accordance with law, whenever the debtor has paid the appraised value of any part, parcel, or all of his property as herein provided.

"(6) Having complied with the provisions of subsection (3), the debtor may apply for his discharge as provided in this act.

"(7) If any secured creditor of the debtor, affected thereby, shall

"(7) If any secured creditor of the debtor, affected thereby, shall file written objections to the manner of payments and distribution of debtor's property as herein provided for, then the court, after having set aside the debtor's exemptions as prescribed by the State law, shall stay all proceedings for a period of 5 years, during which 5 years the debtor shall retain possession of all or any part of his property, under the control of the court, provided he pays a reasonable rental annually for that part of the property of which he retains possession; the first payment of such rental to be made within 6 months of the date of the order staying proceedings, such rental to be distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear, under the provisions of this rental to be distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear, under the provisions of this act. At the end of 5 years, or prior thereto, the debtor may pay into court the appraised price of the property of which he retains possession: Provided, That upon request of any lien holder on real estate the court shall cause a reappraisal of such real estate and the debtor may then pay the reappraised price, if acceptable to the lien holder, into the court, and thereupon the court shall, by an order, turn over full possession and title of said property to the debtor and he may apply for his discharge as provided for by this act.

"If the debtor fails to comply with the provisions of this subsection, the court may order the trustee to sell the property, as provided in this act."

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, when this bill was reached on the calendar the other day it was objected to by a number of Senators. Subsequently, and I assume after those who had objected had left the Chamber, the bill was called up again on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. At any rate, I was absent from the Chamber when it was called up and I know that at least one other Senator who objected to it was absent from the Chamber.

I opposed the bill when it was before the Committee on the Judiciary. I am still opposed to it and I wish to be heard on it, though I am not unwilling that the Senator from North Dakota should explain it to the Senate.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. When we were on the calendar last Wednesday and came to this bill the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] asked some questions. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] called for the regular order and finally objected. I spoke to the Senator from Ohio and he said he would have no further objection. I went to the Senator from New York and talked with him and he said he had no objection. He said "You may call it up later on." Afterward I called it up, when the Senator from New York was in his seat, and he made no objection. No objection was made. Afterward there were two or three motions filed to reconsider the vote by which it was passed. The Senator from New York made such a motion, and I went to him and

"e. Payment of an additional 5 percent of the appraised price within 5 years from the date of said agreement.

"f. Payment of the remaining unpaid balance of the appraised price within 6 years from the date of said agreement.

"Interest shall be paid on the appraised price and unpaid balances of the appraised price yearly as it accrues at the rate of 1 percent per annum, and all taxes shall be paid by the debtor.

"The proceeds of such payments on the appraised price and interest shall be paid to the lien holders as their interest may appear, and to the trustee of the unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear, if a trustee is appointed.

"(4) An agreement having been reached as provided in subsection (3), the debtor may consume or dispose of any part or made by the Senator from North Dakota for passage of the bill. He asked me to do what I could to have it reconsidered and felt that every effort should be made to have the bill thoroughly discussed before final action was taken. So much for the Senator from New York and his attitude toward the matter.

May I say that the matter for some reason or other is highly controversial. Many protests have come to me. I do not know whether they are well founded, but there is great apprehension and great distress lest the proposed legislation be injurious to policyholders of insurance companies. I do not mean to claim that the contention is correct. I have no information about that. But I do think a bill of this magnitude ought not to have been passed under the circumstances under which it was passed. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will not press the matter, but will let it go over until the next session of Congress.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield the floor, but before doing that let me say that I do not know, I am sorry to have to say, about the merits or demerits of the bill. I do know that it is a measure which is highly controversial, one of those measures which ought not to be passed on a mere calling of the calendar.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield to me?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I have the attention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier]? The Senator has not indicated what the House amendment is to this bill. Will he please state what the House amendment is?

Mr. FRAZIER. I have not the floor. I shall be glad to state it if I can get the floor.

Mr. HEBERT. I will yield to the Senator from North Dakota to explain the amendment; then I desire to discuss

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the same bill was introduced in the Senate and in the House. The Senate Judiciary Committee made a few amendments to the bill. When the bill was reported here from the Judiciary Committee, and was passed last Wednesday, it went over to the House. Today the House struck out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and inserted the House bill as it has been amended. There are only a few slight changes.

This bill, in short, provides for scaling down the farmer's indebtedness, and for a moratorium of a 5-year period.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, what changes did the House make in the Senate provisions?

Mr. FRAZIER. Practically the only changes made were as follows:

First, the difference in the period of payment by the farmer, after appraisals are made, to repurchase his property. The Senate bill provided for a period of 31/2 years. The House bill provides for a period of 6 years in which to make these payments to repurchase his property, paying 1-percent interest in the meantime. It also provides for a 5-year moratorium instead of a 6-year moratorium in section 7, the last provision.

There are one or two other slight changes, but they amount to very little. I do not care to take up the time. If anyone wants to ask any questions, I shall be glad to answer them as best I can.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I am not sufficiently familiar with the provisions of the House bill to discuss them at this time, though after the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota I assume that there has been no change except as to the period of time for the owner of property to redeem it; so I shall proceed to discuss the bill as it was considered by the Committee on the Judiciary when it was pending there.

I should like to read, for the information of the Senate, what I consider to be the salient provisions of this measure. Paragraph (s), on page 2 of the printed bill—I am referring now to the Senate bill—provides as follows:

(s) Any farmer failing to obtain the acceptance of a majority in number and amount of all creditors whose claims are affected by a composition or extension proposal, or if he feels aggrieved by the composition or extension, may amend his petition or answer asking to be adjudged a bankrupt. Such farmer may at the time of the first hearing petition the court that all of his property, whether pledged, encumbered, or unencumbered, by liens or otherwise, be appraised at its then actual value and that his homestead and exemptions be set aside and that he be allowed to retain possession of any part or parcel or all of the remainder of his property and pay for same under the terms and conditions set forth in this act.

As I construe that provision, Mr. President, it provides that the owner of a piece of property may file a petition in a court of bankruptcy and ask that his property be appraised. It must be appraised at its then value.

Now, let us assume for the purpose of this argument that there is outstanding on that property a mortgage of $1,000. Conditions may be such that at the time of the appraisal it may be held to have a value of only $500. That need not be its actual value for the purposes of the mortgagee, because under the terms of his mortgage he might well continue to hold his security, proceed in pursuance of the instrument that he holds, take possession of the property, and hold it as long as he cares to do so; but this bill goes on to provide—and again I read on page 2, paragraph 1, line 16—

Upon such a request being made in the petition or answer, or at the time of the first hearing, appraisers shall be designated and appointed. Such appraisers shall appraise all the property of the debtor at its then reasonable actual value.

I call attention to the fact that the bill does not provide for the appraisal of the property at its cash value; nothing but the actual value.

Mr. FRAZIER and Mr. FLETCHER addressed the Chair. Mr. HEBERT. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota. Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the House amendment provides, in section (1), page 2:

(1) Upon such a request being made in the petition or answer, at the time of the first hearing, appraisers shall be designated and appointed. Such appraisers shall appraise all the property of the debtor at its then fair and reasonable value, not necessarily the market value at the time of such appraisal. The appraisals shall be made in all other respects, with right of objections, exceptions, and appeal, in accordance with this act.

There is a slight change there.

Mr. HEBERT. I observe that there is a slight change. Now I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I heard the Senator read something about exemptions. In some States there is an exemption of 160 acres of land in the country, or half an acre or a quarter of an acre, as the case may be, in the city; but if 160 acres of land are to be exempt, it will take all the property there is, will it not?

Mr. HEBERT. If it is a homestead, there is an exemption for a homestead here.

Mr. FLETCHER. It may be 160 acres. In some States it may be more, but I know in Florida a homestead comprises 160 acres.

Mr. FRAZIER. If the homestead is mortgaged, of course, the exemptions do not apply. The House has amended that very slightly. They have left out the word "homestead" and included homesteads in substance as prescribed by the State law.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, when the actual value has been ascertained, it is provided in paragraph 2, on page 3, that—

The referee shall issue an order setting aside to such debtor his homestead and exemptions, subject to any existing mortgages or liens upon such homestead or upon any such exemptions to an amount equal to the value, as fixed by the appraisal of such homestead or to the value of such exempt property as is covered by any mortgage or lien, and shall further order that the possession, under the control of the court, of any part or parcel or all of the remainder of the debtor's property, shall remain in the debtor subject to a general lien.

In other words, let us assume that a petitioner comes into court seeking the aid of the court in bankruptcy, and thereupon the court is directed to appoint appraisers to fix the value of the property, and then turn it back to the debtor, so that anyone having a claim against it may not have that claim satisfied. It is not bankruptcy; it is taking away the rights of persons who have claims against the debtor. There is no way under this proceeding for a creditor to have his claim satisfied until after the expiration of 6 years, if then.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. When the Judiciary Committee reported this bill no minority report was filed. When it was called up for consideration, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl and I objected, and no action was taken. On other occasions I objected to the consideration of the bill.

The bill finally passed the Senate and went to the House. The House has amended it, and I am informed, although I have not had opportunity of studying the House amendment, that it makes more liberal the provisions in the original bill with respect to creditors.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that section 7 was an amendment put on in both the Committee on the Judiciary of the House and the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate. That section provides for creditors allowing a moratorium and letting the farmer pay rental. I do not think the Senator from Arkansas made any objection after that provision was inserted. It was the bill without that amendment in it to which the Senator objected.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. After the bill had been brought forward a number of times, I did not object to its consideration, although not in sympathy with all of its provisions. No Senator objected to it. It passed by unanimous consent.

Now the question arises on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota to concur in the House amendment. It seems to me that the rational step to take is to vote on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

I do not understand why committees apparently unanimously report legislation, members of the committee fail to take exception to it, let it pass, go to the other body, and then raise questions on the very merits which ought to have been raised in the committee. I am getting tired of that sort of thing. The committees are charged primarily with the responsibility of digesting legislation which is introduced and of suggesting amendments which may be necessary, but instead of doing that a great committee of the Senate reports a bill to the Senate without an amendment being proposed, with no minority report, the members of the committee permit the bill to be passed without objection and go to the House and be amended in terms which make it more acceptable in view of the contentions they make, and then they object to action on it.

I think the Senate ought to be permitted to dispose of this matter. Let us not deceive ourselves. There are a number of conference reports here which must be disposed of.

These matters ought to be taken up and acted upon in an orderly manner. Everyone knows that it is within the power of any Senator to delay and to defer action, under the conditions which exist at this time; but I am suggesting that the fair and orderly procedure is to vote upon these questions as they arise. If the Senate wishes to vote down the motion of the Senator from North Dakota, it has the liberty of doing so, but we ought not to put ourselves in the attitude of making issues which should have been made primarily when questions first arose.

There have been many occasions when we have considered the calendar, and some of us have stayed here and done our best to promote proper legislation, and other Senators, members of great committees, have apparently neglected their responsibility, let legislation pass, and then raised issues on the merits of legislation after it has passed the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, was there any minority report from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There was no minority report from the Committee on the Judiciary, and nothing to indicate that a single member of the Judiciary Committee was opposed to this legislation. The Senator from Idaho and I took the responsibility of holding the legislation back indefinitely, and now I think the time has come when we ought to act.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, further than that, there was not a single dissent made in the Senate at any time, except when the Senator from Arkansas held the bill up. Today it passed the House of Representatives, I am informed, with only 16 votes against it, after a thorough consideration by two committees.

Mr. WALSH. Where there are 20 members on a committee-

Mr. LONG. Twenty-two in the House, and seventeen in the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. And no minority report, there is an assumption that the legislation is approved.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is an assumption that the committee favored it—an assumption that there was no opposition to it on the part of the members of the committee who were charged in the first instance with action on it.

I do not know what view the Executive takes of this legislation—I am not prepared to say—but I do think that we ought to go forward and transact our business in an orderly way, and I think we ought to vote on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

I thank the Senator from Rhode Island for yielding to me.

Mr. HEBERT. Now, Mr. President, after the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas, I think it would be well to clear the atmosphere somewhat, and remove the misapprehensions of the Senator, and those which may have been created in the minds of the Senators by his statements.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am perfectly sure of my ground.

Mr. HEBERT. I am sure of my ground, if the Senator will just bear with me for a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. HEBERT. When this bill came up in the Judiciary Committee I announced my opposition to it and stated that I reserved the right to oppose it on the floor of the Senate. When the bill was reached on the Unanimous Consent Calendar objection was made to it, and it was passed over. Thereafter I was called out of the Chamber, and during my absence the bill was called up again out of order; I had no reason to suppose that the calendar was going to be called over again. We started that morning at a certain number and proceeded. I had no information that we were going over the calendar again.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President-

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, if the Senator will bear with me for a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator yield to me so that I may state the facts?

Mr. HEBERT. I am stating the facts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The unanimous-consent agreement, under which the Senate was proceeding, expressly provided that at the conclusion of the call of the calendar, commencing with no. 1243, the Senate would revert to the beginning of the calendar and call each bill on the calendar.

Mr. HEBERT. And proceed to where we stopped.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I cannot understand why some Senator who was a member of the Judiciary Committee, if he was at heart opposed to some legislation, did not give the Senate that information. Why was the Senate allowed to proceed with the entire understanding that the bill had the support of every member of the committee?

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator did not object for the simple reason that he was not in the Chamber when the bill was reached the second time. He did object when it was reached in its regular order. The bill was called up out of its regular order and passed. That is the reason why no objection was made to it when it was passed.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. Did the Senator object when it was called the first time?

Mr. HEBERT. I was one of several who objected. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] was another.

Mr. FRAZIER. I know. And I spoke to the Senator from New York and got him to withdraw his objection. I did not know that the Senator from Rhode Island objected to it at all.

Mr. HEBERT. I objected when it was in the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. FRAZIER. I know, but I want to say for the benefit of the Senator from Arkansas that there was a subcommittee in both the House and the Senate committees, and in the Senate the subcommittee was composed of the Senator from Nevada, the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Robinson]. The measure was considered by the full committee and reported favorably. I was told there was only one objection. I do not know whether that is right or not. I was not in the committee when the committee voted on it. But when anyone tries to make out that this bill was not considered fairly and squarely I rather resent it, because I think it was.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am a member of the Judiciary Committee, but, unfortunately, we have been having three or four committee meetings at the same time each day almost, during the latter part of this session. Upon the occasion when the Judiciary Committee met and considered this bill, I did not happen to be present, and I knew nothing of this bill until I saw it upon the calendar, at which time I indicated to a number of persons that I desired to study it before I consented to its consideration.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I hesitate to inject myself into this discussion, but I should in frankness say that there was nothing concealed, nothing unusual, nothing premature about the procedure respecting this bill. It was referred to a subcommittee, namely, Senator McCarran, Senator Logan, and Senator Robinson of Indiana. That subcommittee considered the bill and reported it back to the main Committee on the Judiciary. Representative Lemke, of North Dakota. and Mrs. Greenway, Representative from Arizona, came before the Judiciary Committee and argued in favor of the bill, and the committee voted a favorable report on the bill. It is but fair and just to say that the learned Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] did in the committee announce that he reserved the right and proposed to exercise his right to oppose the bill on the floor of the Senate. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] was frank and open in his announcement. As Chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, I took pains to secure the opinion of a number of able lawyers throughout this country as to the constitutionality of this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Was there a vote on the bill in the full committee?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Was it unanimous?

Mr. ASHURST. No; it was not unanimous.

Mr. WALSH. Who opposed it?

me from stating precisely who voted against the bill in

Mr. WALSH. The opposition was not so serious as to cause the committee not to report it.

Mr. ASHURST. No. There were surely 2 votes against the bill in committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I desire the Senator to correct me if I am wrong. It is true the Senator from Rhode Island expressed considerable apprehension as to the constitutionality of this bill, but as I understood it, it was so clearly shown to be constitutional that while when we took a vote, perhaps, the Senator from Rhode Island had already reserved his right. there was no negative vote, as I remember. I know the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] came over apparently well convinced as to the constitutionality of it. I did not notice any serious objection.

Mr. ASHURST. I would not want to be questioned now as to the vote in committee because we were quite hurried and rushed, and our memories are not telepathic or accurate amidst so many hundreds of problems, but as my memory serves me, there were 2 votes against the bill and 8 or 10 in favor of it in the committee.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I have no disposition to delay the proceedings of the Senate. That is farthest from my mind. I think my conduct here during the past 6 years will justify my making that statement at this time. I am opposed to the principles of this bill. I believe I have a right as a Senator on this floor to express my views upon it, and to say to the Senate the reasons why I am opposed to it. I do not know that I have to make any apologies for that conduct, though I merely make this explanatory statement in order that no Senator may think I am attempting to delay proceedings here by arguing or discussing this measure at this time.

When I was interrupted a short time ago I was discussing the provisions of paragraph 3, on page 4, which provides for the fixing of the value of the property by appraisers appointed by the court. And when that value has been ascertained the property must be turned back to the debtor. and he is required to pay interest, not upon the amount of any obligation that may have existed against him, not upon any mortgage indebtedness that may have been owed by the mortgagor, the debtor, the petitioner in the court of bankruptcy. That is not what this bill provides. He is required to pay interest at the rate of 1 percent upon the then actual value of the property. That does not mean if there be a mortgage outstanding on the property that the mortgagee is even going to receive interest at the rate of 1 percent. Because it may well be that in the appraisal proceedings the value of the property ascertained by the appraiser may be less; may be one-fourth less; may be onehalf less than any mortgage outstanding against the property.

Let us be clear about that point. The mortgagor, the debtor, is not going to be called upon to pay even 1 percent of his indebtedness, but 1 percent of the actual value of the property, whatever that may be. I submit to those who have some regard for the fundamental law, for the rights of property, that that is doing vengeance to all the concepts of jurisprudence with which we are familiar.

The same paragraph provides that the debtor shall pay 2½ percent, together with the 1 percent interest, on or before 12 months after the value of the property has been ascertained. Two and one-half percent of what? Does that mean  $2\frac{1}{2}$  percent of the indebtedness? The bill does not so provide. It is to be 21/2 percent of the actual value of the property as then ascertained by the appraisal. Again there is no possibility of reimbursing the holder of the obligation upon the property even to the extent of 21/2 percent of the face of his obligation.

The bill then provides that an additional 21/2 percent shall be paid on or before 18 months, 21/2 percent on or before 24 months, and thereafter he shall pay 5 percent principal, the court shall cause a reappraisal of such real estate and

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the learned Senator will excuse | together with interest semiannually, for the following years. Interest at what rate? At the rate fixed in the obligation? Not a bit of it. Will it be at the rate of 1 percent interest upon the obligation? No; it is not upon the obligation. It is interest upon the actual value of the property, whatever that may be.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I ask my friend this question because I never heard him make this objection before. The only objection I heard my friend make was as to constitutionality. The Senator is aware of the municipal bankruptcy bill, is he not?

Mr. HEBERT. I am aware of it.

Mr. LONG. Everything the Senator has said with regard to the bill now before us would apply against canceling municipal debts. Did not the Senator vote for the railroad bankruptcy bill?

Mr. HEBERT. Let me say to the Senator that I voted against the municipal bankruptcy bill and argued against it in committee.

Mr. LONG. Did not the Senator vote for the railroad bankruptcy bill?

Mr. HEBERT. I do not remember now. Mr. LONG. I will tell the Senator that he did. I remember that the Senator did.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator's memory is better than mine on that point.

Mr. LONG. The only difference between the bill now before us and the bill to which I have just referred is that one relates to railroads and the other relates to farmers. That is the only difference.

Mr. HEBERT. I am obliged to disagree with the Senator, because there are many points of difference which I shall not now take the time of the Senate to point out.

I come to the amendment adopted in committee and which is printed in italics on page 6 of the bill. That was intended as a safeguard for the protection of creditors.

Mr. President, I am still trying to make myself heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Sergeant at Arms to take the gentlemen in the back part of the Chamber and escort them into the cloakrooms. They are the guests of the Senate and have been requested to maintain quiet, but they have ignored the request.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest that the Sergeant at Arms should be directed to remain in the Chamber to maintain order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will be called into the Chamber and requested to maintain order. The Senator from Rhode Island will proceed.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I was discussing the provisions of paragraph 7, on page 6, which reads as follows:

(7) In case a majority in number and amount of all the secured and unsecured creditors of the debtor file written objections, at the first hearing, to the manner of payments and distribution of debtor's property as herein provided for, then the court after having set aside the debtor's homestead and exemptions, shall stay all proceedings for a period of 6 years, during which 6 years the debtor shall retain possession of all or any part of his property, under the control of the court, provided he pays a reasonable rental annually for that part of the property of which he retains possession. The first payment of such rental to be made within 6 months of the date of the order staying proceedings such rental to be distributed among the secured rental to be made within 6 months of the date of the order staying proceedings, such rental to be distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear, under the provisions of this act. At the end of 6 years, or prior thereto, the debtor may pay into court the appraised price of the property of which he retains possession, less rentals paid: Provided, That upon request of any lienholder on real estate the court shall cause a reappraisal of such real estate and the debtor may then pay the reappraised price, less rentals paid, into the court and thereupon the court shall, by an order, turn over full possession and title of said property to the debtor and he shall be discharged from all his debts, both private and public, as hereinbefore provided.

What benefit is the holder of any security going to derive from that proceeding? He is going to get a reasonable rental, and upon request of any lien holder on real estate the debtor may pay the reappraised value less rental pay—in other words, if the debtor has paid $100 of rental—

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I will say that the lease-rental reduction was stricken out by the House. If the Senator will use the text of the House bill he will see that I am correct.

Mr. HEBERT. Then, that removes the objection to that part of the bill which I entertained when it was under consideration here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I could not hear the Senator from North Dakota. Will he repeat his statement?

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senate bill provided that a farmer could pay the appraised value less the rental that he had paid during the period. The House struck out that provision for rental. Personally, I think it should have been in the bill, but the House struck it out.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I fail to see any justification for any such provision of law. In fact I cannot reach any conclusion that it is constitutional.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think the statement just made by the Senator from North Dakota is important. The House amendment makes the bill far less objectionable from the standpoint of many Senators than as the bill passed the Senate. If the owner of the land, the mortgagor, remains in possession of the land and pays fair rental, and in addition to that 1 percent on the value of the land, it is much better compensation than if the rental were deducted.

Mr. HEBERT. If he pays it, yes; but he does not pay it. He does not pay 1 percent if he remains in possession of the land, nor does he pay a fair rental upon the full value of the property except as that is ascertained at the time. That may be the value and it may not be the value.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That would be all the mortgagor could collect if he were in possession of the land. That is the theory of the amendment, I assume. The person in possession of the land pays a fair rental value. That is all that anyone could get.

Mr. HEBERT. No; let us understand that. The man in possession of the land pays rental based upon the value thus ascertained upon a reappraisal; not upon the value that it would represent to the man who had security, and who recovered possession of the property in pursuance of the exercise of his rights under that security.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not see the distinction the Senator is attempting to make. In other words, a mortgage was made 5 years ago. The rental value at the time the mortgage was made was very much greater than it now is. If the mortgagee forecloses and gets possession of the land, he does not get the rental value as of 5 years ago; he gets the rental value at the time he is occupying it. That is all he can get.

Mr. HEBERT. That is just where the Senator and I come to the parting of the ways. The mortgagee gets possession of the property, and, having gotten possession of the property, he fixes the value. He fixes the rental; but this proceeding prohibits him from exercising his rights.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The court fixes the fair rental.

Mr. FRAZIER. The court fixes it.

Mr. HEBERT. Yes; the court fixes it, but that does not give him the right to fix it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, if the mortgagor is to remain in possession, it is necessary to have the court fix the rental value of the property.

Mr. HEBERT. I concede that if the mortgager is to remain in possession and deny to the mortgage the rights under any mortgage which he may hold upon the property, then that is the place where the rental value should be fixed.

Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate unduly. I have stated my objections to the bill as concisely as I knew how, and in order that the Senate may have rather a fuller understanding, I hope, of its provisions and of its implications.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I think the pending motion should be defeated.

Here is a bill which calls for wholesale repudiation of obligations. It passed the Senate with only a few Members present, and without any consideration.

Who are the people who own the mortgages on the farms of this Nation? The agencies of the United States Government—are we to take steps here to repudiate governmental obligations?—the insurance companies of this Nation, which have issued policies to 68,000,000 people of this country; trust funds of widows, orphans, infants, and incompetents.

This is one of the boldest proposals I have seen presented in Congress in my nearly 10 years of service. The motion ought to be defeated. If there is any merit in this proposal, let us postpone action until we can deal with it properly.

I hope Senators will vote against the motion. We ought not to take the proposed action. I regard it as a reflection upon us who are here charged with the responsibility of representing the people of the Nation and our Government. We ought not to tolerate any such proposal of repudiation of governmental obligations and of other obligations—the taking of property without due process of law.

I am satisfied, as a lawyer, that there is not any court in the land that would uphold this bill if it should be enacted into law; and in my opinion it will be a reflection on our intelligence if we express approval of this proposal. I hope it will be defeated.

I have voted for many measures of benefit to farmers.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not care to speak on this bill if someone else wishes to speak on it. Let me say this, however:

I love my friend from Connecticut [Mr. Lonergan]. There is not a better hearted man in the Senate, nor in any other legislative body, than my friend the Senator from Connecticut. I feel the same way about my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. Hebert]; but where did we start this repudiation of public debts about which we are holding up our hands in holy horror now? We started it with the railroads of the United States of America. That is where we started it.

Where did we start writing down the interest on debts? We started it with the railroad bankruptcy bill. That is where we started it.

Where did we start writing down the principal? We started it with the railroad bankruptcy bill. That is where we started it.

Then we came along with the corporation bankruptcy bill, and we passed that.

Then we came along with the municipal bankruptcy bill, a bill relative to sovereignties created by the several States, and we passed that; and I think I showed on the floor of the Senate that there was no such thing as a right of a creditor to keep a municipality from taking advantage of bankruptcy proceedings regardless of the desire of the creditor, if the municipality wanted to cease paying its obligations and the interest on its bonds.

Now we come here, following the same precept, only in this case the proposal is a great deal more conservative. We could not ask the United States Senate to be as liberal to the farmer as they have been to the corporations. We knew we could not get that. We could not ask the United States Senate and Congress to be as nice to the farmer as they were to the corporations. We knew we could not get that. But we did ask them for what? To have the present value of the property, all the property can bring, fixed by the United States courts, subject to appeals, I suppose, as in all cases, and to allow the poor man on the farm to have the benefit that the court and the creditors see fit to extend to him, and to pay it out on such terms as will make it possible for the man to stay there.

What do we want to do with these farmers? Three thousand of them a day are being moved off the farms because they cannot pay for the farms. Why can they not pay for the farms? Because they gave these mortgages back in 1920, 1921, and on up to 1925, when the dollar was worth only 60 cents, whereas today the dollar is worth $1.36. They gave these mortgages at a time when the income of the country was such that a farmer could pay off his mortgages. Cotton was bringing 20 cents a pound. Wheat was bringing two or three times what it is bringing now. So was corn. So was oats. The farmers of the country today, with the depression, find that a farm that is mortgaged for $1,500 cannot be sold on the public market for more than half that amount; and what good is it going to do for the bank to take it over and to lease it out? It probably never will be able to lease it out. The banks are going to get just as much money in this way as they will in any other way. They are going to have the right to sit around the bench with the court and appear before the court to see that no right is taken away from them. This is said to be a radical measure of bankruptcy for farmers when it is merely along the same lines as bankruptcy for corporations, and bankruptcy for railroads, and bankruptcy for municipalities.

It was not a radical thing when we voted for bankruptcy for the railroads. It was not a radical thing when we voted for bankruptcy for the corporations and for the municipalities. Why should this be heralded as being such a contrary step?

Talk about the widows and orphans who own these bonds! We cannot get blood out of a turnip. We cannot get anything out of the poor farmer that he cannot raise. If his place is worth only $1,500, and the mortgage is for $3,000, the mortgagee cannot get any more out of it by seizing the poor farmer and putting him and his wife and children out of a home, because it cannot bring more than $1,500, and the mortgagee gets every dime of it under this bill. He does not lose a cent. He gets every dime that the court of the United States says the place is worth. The only difference is that we do not move the poor devil out into the street.

Talk about this being a radical piece of legislation. It is the most conservative piece of legislation ever enacted by Congress. Three thousand farmers were moved out last night. Three thousand more will be moved out tonight. Three thousand more will be moved out tomorrow night; and we have not benefited anybody by selling the farmer's home under the hammer.

No one has been benefited by his home being sold under the hammer. In this case the only difference will be that the United States court will have to find the value to be everything the place can bring, every dime it is worth, everything that it can possibly bring, and even more than that. The bill provides that the cash value shall not be the sole criterion, that if and when, under reasonable circumstances, it would bring more than the cash value, the court should allow even that much, giving the creditors that much better of the bargain. So there is nothing whatever that can be lost to anyone. No one can suffer any harm. Everything that can be had will be had, and why should we have delay, or opposition to the farmer?

Mr. President, one more thing. This has been the most carefully considered bill that has been passed since I have been in the Congress. The bill went before the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate, and it was referred to a subcommittee. The distinguished Chairman of the Judiciary Committee sought and obtained the opinions of lawyers in order that the constitutionality of the measure might be ascertained. The bill then was reported to the whole committee, it was reported to the Senate, and no minority report was made to this body.

The bill was here considered, after having been held up by the Senator from Arkansas, and it unanimously passed this body. It went over to the House of Representatives, and it was held there and considered by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives for several weeks or perhaps several months' time, and after sober, careful consideration, I am informed that it was reported out by the unanimous vote of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives. Then it came before the House of Representatives, was called up for a vote, and received every vote in the House of Representatives with the exception of 16.

The bill is now before us, and it is here now because the House has liberalized the provisions insofar as they concern the creditors. The bill which passed the Senate was more liberal to the farmer than the bill before us now, but the House has granted the man who has the mortgage, the creditor, the man to whom the money is owing, the man the Senator from Rhode Island wants to protect, the man the Senator from Connecticut wants to protect, more than he had under our bill. He would get more out of the House bill than he did out of the Senate bill, and here Senators are trying to beat this bill by voting down an amendment which gave them more than the bill did as it was reported out of the Senate.

This unusual precedent is being established here tonight, that the farmer cannot have any kind of a chance on earth to come out of his distress, even though he is being bound over for the entire amount his property can possibly be valued at by the court, even though the lien holder is preserved in every right he has, to the full value of the property, even though you have allowed the railroads to take bankruptcy and go free, even though you have allowed the corporations to take bankruptcy and go free, even though you have allowed the muncipalities to take bankruptcy and go free. Just because it will stop 3,000 farmers' families from being moved off their places tonight, you resort to this unusual procedure of undertaking to keep us from concurring in an amendment that is more favorable to you than the bill was when it first passed the Senate.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be concurred in. This is a late date to make opposition.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I merely wish to call attention to the very great distinction between this bill and the other bankruptcy bills referred to by the Senator from Louisiana.

Some 2 years ago, upon recommendation of the Department of Justice, an effort was made to modify the bankruptcy law of this country, the principal object being to do it in a way that would get rid of the stigma which goes with the declaration of bankruptcy. A full and complete investigation was made of the bankruptcy law, and a bill modifying it in many particulars was submitted to the Senate, and a report was made.

A subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary was appointed, of which I was chairman. The distinguished Senator from New Mexico, Mr. Bratton, and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Hebert] were also members of the subcommittee. We gave very careful consideration to all of the recommendations which had been made by the Department of Justice, with many of which we agreed generally, some of which we thought were inadvisable at the time.

There seemed to be, however, a great demand and a great necessity to take care of three particular classes of persons. One was the individual. Therefore a section was added to the bankruptcy law which permitted the individual under certain conditions to go into the court of bankruptcy, not to be adjudged a bankrupt, but during the whole proceeding he was to be called a debtor. He was to see whether he could get 75 percent of his creditors to agree—as I recollect the percentage—to accept a certain kind of settlement, whether the settlement should be in cash, or whether the settlement should be in cash, or whether the settlement should be in percentage of the measure was to permit the 75 percent of the creditors, or the 66% percent, or whatever it was, to compel the other creditors to agree with the method of settlement the debtor had offered.

That was not, generally, greatly different from the provision of the old law, which provided that a bankrupt might make a composition with his creditors by offering a certain sum in cash in payment. I have forgotten for the moment just what percentage that was. The new legislation was framed along that line. From the very beginning of the bankruptcy law, a certain percentage of creditors were compelled to accept the proposition offered by the bankruptcy to settle in the way of a composition.

We provided, as I have stated, with respect to the individual debtor who was in difficulty, and it was believed it would be-and I have understood that in many parts of the country it has been-of great assistance to the individual debtor. He has taken advantage of it, he has been able to go into the courts and to relieve himself of his debts without having it said that he had gone into bankruptcy.

In many instances it has been a mere postponement of his debt until his condition could so improve that he could meet them. But in other instances it has been the effort to pay off, perhaps 50 cents on the dollar, or 60 cents, but in order to do that he had to get a large percentage of his creditors to agree with him.

AMENDMENT OF SETTLEMENT OF WAR CLAIMS ACT

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield. Mr. HARRISON. Would the Senator object, provided it does not precipitate any debate, to my calling up a measure which must be passed at this time if it is to become law?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that joint resolution (H.J.Res. 365) to amend the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended, be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the House joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (H.J.Res. 365) to amend the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended,

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have stated an amendment to the joint resolution. The amendment has been submitted to the Senator in charge of

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is a bill the purpose of which is to hold in the Treasury some $20,000,000 which is there under the mixed claims award against German nationals. It does not interfere with any payment being made to any American citizen who may have a judgment or who may have been awarded anything by the Mixed Claims Commission, but it does withhold in the Treasury the money that might be awarded to German nationals, and that is due to the fact that our Government has advanced about $36,000,000, and that Germany has not come across with the part that she was to pay our citizens.

Mr. FESS. May I ask whether it is the same as no. 1468 on the calendar?

Mr. HARRISON. It is the same bill which was reported favorably by the Senate committee.

Mr. FESS. There was one item in that bill which goes to the extent of withholding payment where judgments have already been rendered. Has the Senator taken that into consideration?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The bill provides for withholding for the time being, in the discretion of the President, payment of judgments or awards which may have been made to German nationals, because of the failure of Germany to comply in advancing money that she was under agreement to advance to pay off American citizens.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the matter comes now before us, may I inquire, in what shape? I thought the matter had been finally determined the other day. Had it not?

Mr. HARRISON. No; this bill has not come up before.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is this the joint resolution which was presented by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi and which was reported favorably and passed by the Senate?

Mr. HARRISON. No; it has not passed the Senate. A joint resolution similar in character passed the House.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes. And is that the joint resolution now before us?

Mr. HARRISON. That is the measure now being con-

Mr. JOHNSON. It is a reprisal for the failure of Germany to pay Germany's obligation to the Government.

Mr. HARRISON. I would not say it is a reprisal, but it is because of the failure of Germany to live up to her agreement in providing funds under the agreement that it is proposed that we withhold any payment to German nationals until after compliance shall have been made by Germany.

Mr. JOHNSON. With which, Mr. President, I may say I am quite in sympathy. I have observed today the attitude of Great Britain regarding the debts due from Germany to Britain and to British interests, and I am astonished to see. Mr. President, that Great Britain, resenting as she does even the request on the part of this Government for the payment of a debt, is about to engage in real reprisals against Germany because Germany does not pay her debt to Britain, and I am more surprised, sir, to observe that the great internationalist newspapers of this country, which have viewed with such alarm and with such dread and with such hostility a measure which precluded the sale in this country of securities of nations which were in default to our Government, view with equanimity and approval Great Britain's action in reference to Germany's debt.

What a marvelous difference it makes whose ox is gored, Mr. President!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed. Mr. HARRISON. I move that Senate Joint Resolution 135, similar in character to the one which has just been agreed to, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO 1935 INDEPENDENT OFFICES ACT

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I report back favorably without amendment the House bill 9867. The bill has passed the House. I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. FESS. What is the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. It governs automatic promotions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 9867) amending the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of 1935 was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and

ALBERT M. JOHNSON AND WALTER SCOTT

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, I ask leave to report back favorably without amendment House bill 3726, which relates to the title to some Government land occupied by a famous character nicknamed "Death Valley Scotty", in the State of Nevada. This gentleman, Mr. Scott, called "Death Valley Scotty", made valuable improvements on this land described in the bill, believing that he had title to the land. Mr. Scott placed $250,000 worth of improvements on this land. It developed that the title was defective. I expected the distinguished President pro tempore [Mr. PITTMAN] to make explanation of the bill, and I probably am doing an act not very gracious to him, as he is now presiding and therefore may not discuss or explain the measure. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to sell this land to Mr. Scott.

I have submitted the bill to both Senators from Nevada. and they favor it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 3726) to grant a patent to Albert M. Johnson and Walter Scott was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISS GRACE ABBOTT

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, about 2 days ago Miss Grace Abbott, one of the most remarkable women in intelligence and humanity of present America, resigned a position she has held with distinction since 1921 as chief of the Children's Bureau in the United States Department of Labor. She is today honored here and abroad for her efficient and indefatigable services in that position as a worthy successor of Miss Julia Lathrop.

Evidencing the prevailing high opinion in which Miss Abbott is everywhere held as she goes to the University of Chicago to continue her brilliant career, I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD as part of my remarks, and suitably referred, the press release in regard to Miss Abbott's retirement issued by Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins; one special article and two editorials, respectively, from the Washington Daily News and the Washington Star of June 15, 1934; also an editorial from the Washington Post of June 16, 1934.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

CHILDREN'S BUREAU,

CHILDREN'S BUREAU,

Washington, D.C., June 15, 1934.

The resignation of Miss Grace Abbott, Chief of the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, was announced at the Bureau today (Thursday).

Miss Abbott will go to the University of Chicago as professor of public welfare in the school of social service and will also become editor of the Social Service Review.

Although her resignation does not take effect until July 1, Miss Abbott will leave Washington on Friday for her home in Grand Island, Nebr., where her father, one of the State's pioneers, is

In Chicago Miss Abbott returns to the scene of her early career where, after receiving her master's degree in political science from the university and studying at the University of Chicago Law School, she became director of the Immigrants' Protective League and, later, executive secretary of the State immigration commis-

Miss Abbott has served under five Presidents, having come to Miss Abbott has served under five Presidents, having come to Washington during the Wilson administration in 1917 as director of the Child Labor Division of the Children's Bureau where she administered the first Federal child-labor law. After this law was declared unconstitutional, Miss Abbott held other public positions, including that of adviser on the War Labor Policies Board, secretary of the Child Welfare Conference with which the Children's Year campaign was concluded, and secretary of the Children's Commission of the First International Labor Conference

In August 1921 Miss Abbott was appointed Chief of the Children's Bureau, succeeding the late Julia Lathrop. During the 13 years of her administration the work of the Bureau and its services to parents, children's agencies and institutions, and to State child-welfare departments have been greatly expanded and strengthened.

One of the great satisfactions which came to Miss Abbott during her service in the Children's Bureau was the appointment of her friend, Miss Frances Perkins, as Secretary of Labor. It is with confidence that the work of the Children's Bureau and the welfare of the Nation's children will have the most sympathetic understanding and support that Miss Abbott now leaves to resume an academic career.

"It is a very great disappointment to me that Miss Abbott cannot longer be persuaded to remain as head of the Children's Bureau because she is carrying out a plan she has had under consideration for several years", Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins said tonight. "When she first told me of her intention to resign about 2 months ago, I was distressed and asked her to give the matter thoughtful reconsideration. Now that she has done that and come to her final conclusion, I can only bow to it with deep regret. Her advice and cooperation in treating not only the problems of the Children's Bureau but of the whole Department of Labor have been of inestimable value to me in my first year as Secretary.

"Our personal friendship has been enriched by this year of "Our personal friendship has been enriched by this year of association in work, and I shall often call upon her for advice and assistance in the work of the Department, which she has generously offered to give in the future. I hope Miss Abbott will maintain a direct advisory relationship to the Children's Bureau. "Miss Abbott is one of the most distinguished women in America, with a scope and authority in the field of public welfare and a concentration upon the problems of children which have made her leadership in this field of great value not only to the Government, but to private social agencies everywhere. The competence and integrity of her research and the effectiveness and humanity of her presentation of factual material to people who need it for personal guidance in the daily life of children and families have given her a unique position in American life, the results of which will be felt for many generations.

"She has put the Children's Bureau upon a firm foundation from which I believe its useful work can be continued. The Bureau is increasingly effective largely because Miss Abbott has insisted upon its development in the direction of contacts directly with the people affected by the problems studied. The reports, the advice, the progress emanating from the Children's Bureau under her leadership have raised the standard of life for the children of this Republic immeasurably, and there are thousands of people who will not be able to join in any public expression of gratitude who nevertheless owe enormous benefits in their own lives to the intelligence, character, force, and social-mindedness of this great woman. lives to the intelligence, character, force, and social-mindedness of this great woman.

"The work of the Bureau will be continued along the lines

"The work of the Bureau will be continued along the lines laid down by Miss Abbott and with the same independence."

[From the Washington Daily News of June 15, 1934] DIFFICULT TO SELECT SUCCESSOR TO MISS GRACE ABBOTT By Ruth Finney

With echoes of the controversy over use of brains in government still reverberating through the Capital, the administration searched today for men and women qualified to fill a dozen im-portant Government posts.

Probably its most difficult problem is selection of a successor of Grace Abbott, retiring Chief of the Children's Bureau.

This division of the Labor Department touches more lives than any other in the Government, it has been estimated. Its work is varied and complex. Any problem which involves children falls within its jurisdiction and there are few problems which do not.

VAST DIFFERENCE

In 1912, when the bureau was established, the country lacked even statistics about children. There were no records of births or of infant deaths. Twenty-two years later, during more than half of which Miss Abbott has been in charge of the Bureau, the concern of the Government in its children has extended to the health of their mothers and to the employment of their fathers at incomes sufficient to provide decent homes and nourishing food.

Miss Abbott's last annual report begins with a study of causes of maternal deaths. It ends with a recommendation that "a system of unemployment reserves for temporary unemployment and of adequate relief for long-time unemployment be developed" to ward off malnutrition in children.

BROAD STUDIES

The pages in between cover a territory as broad as life.

The bureau studied infant health, prevention of rickets, care of premature infants. It cooperated in arranging a special obstetrical course for practicing physicians. It distributed its six pamphlets on mothers, babies, and young children to millions of homes. homes.

It carried on its perpetual fight to end child labor and, before the advent of N.R.A., organized a company for passage of child labor laws in each State.

It studied the problem of children working at hazardous occu-pations and compiled statistics on accidents. It made a survey of problems confronting boys who leave school during depression years and of institutional treatment of delinquent boys.

"SOLD" CONGRESS

It went deeply into the problems of Federal juvenile offenders and helped conduct a model probation experiment in Chicago. It was the first Government agency to recognize the seriousness of the fact that homeless, jobless boys were wandering from one end of the country to the other in depression years, and its figures convinced Congress that action was necessary.

It was the first Government agency, during the Hoover administration, to compile adequate figures on relief and relief needs. It carried on this work despite attempts to abolish it or to cripple it through withholding appropriations.

The Children's Bureau has had only two chiefs. The first was Miss Julia Lathrop. Miss Abbott, the second, was one of the first "brain trusters" in Government.

AT HULL HOUSE

After her graduation from University of Nebraska she secured a master's degree in political science from the University of Chicago and did graduate law work at law school. Her practical training in social service was secured at Hull House and as secretary of the Immigrants' Protective League.

A woman will probably be selected to succeed her. The administration is looking for one with approximately the same qualifications.

qualifications.

[From the Washington Daily News of Friday, June 15, 1934] A GREAT PUBLIC SERVANT

Grace Abbott has resigned. Most of our readers know that she has been chief of the United States Children's Bureau since 1921. In our judgment, no more able man or woman has served the Government in that period than Miss Abbott. She has been the ideal public servant, combining efficiency, vision, and courage. Her achievement in saving the lives of tens of thousands of mothers and children has received not only national but also international recognition. Her service extended to leadership of various League of Nations commissions on the traffic in women and

But for her courage in successfully fighting against President Hoover at the White House Conference on Child Care for preservation of the independent Children's Bureau she probably would have been named the first woman Cabinet officer and Secretary of Labor in 1930. Later she was glad to serve under her friend and associate, Frances Perkins.

Secretary Perkins and President Roosevelt probably cannot find another Miss Abbott. But it is reported that only women of high qualifications are being considered; such as Katharine F. Lenroot, Assistant Chief of the Children's Bureau for many years; Josephine Roche, Colorado mine operator, pioneer in labor cooperation, and former director of the editorial division of the Children's Bureau; Dr. Martha Eliot, head of the Child Health Division of the Bureau and a member of the Yale University medical faculty; Dr. Neva Deardorff, of the New York Welfare Council.

In wishing Miss Abbott happiness and service in her new work as editor of the Social Service Review and member o the University of Chicago faculty, we join in Secretary Perkins' tribute "to the intelligence, character, force, and social-mindedness of this great woman."

[From the Washington Evening Star of June 15, 1934]. SERVING THE CHILD

It is said that it was the privilege of the nineteenth century to discover the child. Through earlier ages of human history the younger generation invariably had been taken for granted as a social group. No special attention ever had been conceded to boys and girls as such. They were born, they grew up, and that was all there was about it. Only when they attained maturity were they fully admitted to consideration as personalities of distinctive individual character. Their status was that of chattels; they were treated like other kinds of property.

But the sympathetic genius of Charles Dickens worked a reformatory havoc with the traditional attitude of grown-ups. Through the appeal of Little Nell, Tiny Tim, David Copperfield, and Oliver Twist he touched the hearts of millions who did not rest until children had been recognized to have particular rights, to be entitled to protection, guidance, and help as the heirs of the race.

A far-reaching change occurred throughout the world in the two decades between 1880 and 1900. Girls were permitted to develop minds of their own. Boys were allowed to practice an independence hitherto unimagined. Legislation and jurisprudence reflected the new spirit. Education and sociology assumed the new obligations implied by the altered psychology.

And an inspired leadership arose to meet the need. Literally scores of men and women accepted the challenge, giving their knowledge and their devotion freely in aid of children of every class. The service of children became a religion; a veritable of child welfare and child progress came into being. In America class. The service of children became a religion; a veritable cult of child welfare and child progress came into being. In America there were men like Charles Loring Brace, Homer Folks, Ben Lindsey, Owen Lovejoy, Harvey W. Wiley, Luther Halsey Gulick, Dan Beard, Ernest Thompson Seton, Bernard Flexner, Julian Mack, William H. Welch, John A. Ryan, and Hastings Hart; women like Jane Addams, Lillian D. Wald, Helen Keller, Martha Berry, Charlotte V. Gulick, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, Winifred Sackville Stoner, Florence Kelley, and Julia Lathrop.

But no name should be held in greater honor for effective and lasting work for children than that of Grace Abbott, Chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, whose resignation is announced today. Through the administrations of five Presidents she has earned the gratitude of all who share with her a sincere and constructive desire to serve humanity by helping the young, the innocent, and the personally helpless.

[From the Washington Post of Saturday, June 16, 1934] GRACE ABBOTT RESIGNS

With wisdom, courage, and devoted but tempered zeal, Grace Abbott for the past 13 years has served the Nation as Chief of the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor. Announcement of her resignation brings with it a feeling almost of unreality. During a period extending from the World War through the depression Miss Abbott has become so closely identified with the Children's Bureau that it is difficult to think of the one without the other.

Called to Washington in 1917 to administer the first Federal child-labor law, Miss Abbott succeeded the late Julia Lathrop as child-labor law, Miss Abbott succeeded the late Julia Lathrop as chief of the Children's Bureau in 1921 and almost immediately was given the administration of the Federal Maternity and Infancy Act, which was in effect 7 years. While strengthening the statistical work of the Bureau and increasing its informational and consultation services to States and local communities, Miss Abbott has filled her difficult and controversial position with uniform administrative efficiency and with a breadth of vision and resourceful energy typical of the best that women have to offer in public life. It has often been said of her that she has shown how to be chief of an important bureau without becoming a bureaucrat. With clear understanding of the functions assigned to the Bureau by Congress and a scientific viewpoint toward the close inter-relationship of the various phases of child welfare, Miss Abbott has not singled out any one group of children for undue attention; but, emphasizing the economic basis of child welfare, and the preventive rather than the palliative method of attacking problems of health, dependency, and delinquency, her constructive imagination and tireless effort have constantly sought the removal of the handicaps, troubles, and misfortunes that limit the average Perhaps the most eloquent tribute paid to Miss Abbott was the Perhaps the most eloquent tribute paid to Miss Abbott was the spontaneous movement in 1930 to have her appointed Secretary of Labor to succeed James J. Davis. The favorable public reaction, as evidenced by editorials in the press all over the country, probably helped to prepare the way for the appointment of the first woman Cabinet member. Be that as it may, Miss Abbott had the great satisfaction of seeing her friend Frances Perkins appointed Secretary of Labor. It is with an expression of complete confidence that the work of the Children's Bureau will have the most sympathetic understanding and support that she leaves to resume an academic career. an academic career.

RELIEF OF TOBACCO INDUSTRY

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, there is on the calendar a bill which has passed the House and which has been agreed to by all those interested in the tobacco market. There are some verbal amendments to be made. As it is a matter of very great importance to the tobacco growers, I ask that the bill be taken up and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Carolina if the bill has been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate?

Mr. SMITH. It was, and was unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. KING. Is it in principle anything like the so-called Bankhead cotton bill "?

Mr. SMITH. It is partly like the Bankhead cotton bill, but I think it is a very great improvement over that Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, it is along the same line in principle. I am very anxious that it should pass.

Mr. SMITH. This is a measure which has been agreed upon by all those who have been interested in tobacco legislation. There are some very slight amendments to be made. The bill will have to go to conference perhaps. I believe it will not take any time to pass it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, may I say that my State is one of the great tobacco-producing States, and, so far as I know, there is not a dissenting voice in the State to the passage of the bill. On the other hand, I have had hundreds of telegrams and petitions urging upon me, if I could, to see that the bill passed before the adjournment of Congress. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will be able to get the bill disposed of tonight.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Carolina if the bill has any relation to the proposed reduction in Federal taxation on tobacco?

Mr. SMITH. No; this is a different matter entirely. I hope the bill may be passed. If it leads to any discussion I shall withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator state to what bill he refers?

Mr. SMITH. It is Calendar No. 1492, the bill (H.R. 9690) to place the tobacco-growing industry on a sound financial and economic basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in the production and marketing of tobacco entering into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am going to object to any more unanimous consent requests. There is a motion to concur before the Senate, and I am going to insist that action be taken upon it. I appreciate that the tobacco bill is very important, but nevertheless, the other matter is also very important.

Mr. SMITH. I believe the consideration of the bill will take practically no time.

Mr. LOGAN. No; it will not take any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill the title of which he has stated. Is there objection?

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Mr. SMITH. Very well; we will be here until tomorrow morning or Monday.

Mr. KING. Make it Tuesday! [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] to concur in the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3580) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. HASTINGS. The President-

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. There is no order in the Senate. It is not sufficient that the Sergeant at Arms sit on the rostrum and look at those who are disturbing the proceedings. He should go to them and direct them to keep quiet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken. Senators will take their seats and obey the rule of the Senate. Those in the rear of the chamber who are guilty of most of the conversation and disturbance, as the Chair has previously stated, are guests of the Senate and should preserve order.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I have explained that in the recent bankruptcy legislation there were three particular classes of persons involved. That which the Congress took up first in both House and Senate, as I recall, pertained to the individual debtor, the Congress believing that the individual debtor was the first who ought to be relieved in the way of legislation. But as I have pointed out, there was no relief for the individual debtor unless he secured a substantial number of his creditors to agree to his proposal—as I recall, 75 percent, although it may have been only two-thirds.

After that legislation was enacted there was a great demand from all over the country that the railroads of the country, which were facing receivership, might be put into a position where their creditors could reorganize under some legislation that might be enacted by the Congress in the form of an amendment to the Bankruptcy Act.

Following that which we did with respect to the individual debtor, we did largely the same thing with respect to the railroads, compelling the creditors in any class to agree to the proposal that was made by, as I recollect, 75 percent of the creditors of that particular class. In other words, there was no effort on the part of Congress to take away from the creditors any rights they had, unless they appeared as persons who were opposing a great majority of the creditors of the particular class in the organization.

That measure was presented to the Senate, but not very thoroughly considered because we were in the late days of the session. I had charge of that particular bill and stated to Members of the Senate that I had given it careful consideration. I explained in detail the purposes of the bill and it was passed, as I recollect, without any record vote and with no particular objection to it.

In the same bill there was a corporate reorganization section which was not approved by the Judiciary Committee, because it was believed there had not been sufficient time for the members of the committee to express an intelligent opinion with respect to it, and it did not pass in that particular Congress.

Since the present administration came into power there has been a great demand upon the President and upon individual Senators to enact a measure with respect to corporate reorganization. I do not know of any legislation that had received in the Senate such universal demand as that which pertained to corporate reorganization.

The Senate gave it careful consideration. The distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys] was made chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary considering the particular measure. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] and I were members of the subcommittee. Two years previously I had given careful consideration to it, and had reached a definite conclusion about it so far as I was concerned except with reference to certain details which were occasionally mentioned.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will not the Senator let us get a vote upon this question? Let us take a vote on it. The Senator knows perfectly well that unless he wants to filibuster against this bill it should be disposed of in order that we may take up other matters. Will he not let us have a vote on it?

The bill has passed the Senate, and it has passed the House. Let us take a vote on the House amendment, and either vote it down or agree to it. If the majority of the Senate want to vote against it, let them vote against it; but let us get a vote on it. There is other important legislation which is to come before the Senate, and I do not understand why the Senator wants to take up the time of the Senate at this particular time. It seems to me it is entirely out of place.

Mr. HASTINGS. I will state to the Senator why. I had no notion of talking about this bill; but the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long] has undertaken to impress upon the Senate that we gave relief to the railroads, we gave relief to the corporations, we gave relief to the municipalities, and we are not willing to give relief to the farmers. I do not propose to let that statement stand as it is without some explanation to the effect that there is no similarity between the proposals.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Except for the ability and talent of the Senator from Delaware, I should not think it possible for any distinction to be shown. I am not going to object to time being taken because if any distinction can be shown between writing down the railroad debts, which the Senator voted for, I think, and writing down the corporation debts, and writing down farm debts, I do not know what it is. I have been listening to the Senator very carefully and I have yet to see where there is any difference in principle. There may be a few more creditors in one case than in the other; but, all the same, it is subject to the approval of the court, and this is the fairest one of them all.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the Senator will be patient, he is intelligent enough to understand me; and if he understands me he will see the difference before I conclude.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, does the Senator want to have Congress adjourn tonight?

Mr. HASTINGS. I may say in that connection that I have never participated in any filibuster in the Senate, and I am not in favor of filibusters; but some 3 or 4 days ago the leader on this side and the leader on the other side impressed upon us the importance of having the Senate adjourn tonight, and we were given to understand that the appropriation bill, the housing bill, and the bill which pertains to labor were the three matters that were to be brought before the Senate. My understanding was that those were the principal things that we had to look into, and those were the things that we would be invited to discuss before the Senate, and that when we had finished those measures nothing else would be taken up except things which would take but little time and to which there was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER. So that I may understand what the Senator wants to do, as a matter of fact what he wants to do, is to filibuster against this bill and also to filibuster against the railway labor bill. Is not that the fact of the matter?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am not filibustering against this bill at all; but I serve notice on the Senator now that I do not propose that Congress shall adjourn tonight and at the same time pass the railroad bill of which he speaks.

I say I am justified in the position I take because of what I clearly understood was the agreement on this side and the agreement on the other side.

I did not discuss the appropriation bill as I should have liked to do. I did not discuss the housing bill as I should have liked to do. I did not discuss the joint resolution that was passed pertaining to labor. I want to say to the Senator that on this side we had a conference with respect to that bill, and many Senators who wanted the Wagner bill and many Senators who were opposed to the Wagner bill undertook to agree on something that would be satisfactory so that we might pass it tonight, and not have Congress go over until next week, and possibly into the week following that.

With that clear understanding, I was informed late today that this bill to which I was opposed, to which I was opposed in the committee, and to which I filed a minority report, was to be taken up and forced upon the Senate tonight. Under the circumstances I have outlined, if the Senator wants to accuse me of filibustering, I say that if it be that I think I am thoroughly justified in taking that position.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, so that I may understand-

Mr. HASTINGS. Just a moment until I finish. The purpose for the moment is not that, because I have a speech here that will last long enough, and I do not have to filibuster on this measure. I am here undertaking solely to answer the speech made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long] with respect to this bill, as I pointed out before, in which he said that there is no distinction between it and the railroad bill and the municipal bill and the corporation

Mr. WHEELER. What I want to find out—I think the Senator has told us to our satisfaction—is that what he really has in mind, what he wants to filibuster against, is the railway labor bill, because of the fact that he filed a minority report.

Mr. HASTINGS. No, no; that is not the only reason.

Mr. WHEELER. The fact that the leader on the other side and the leader upon this side may have said at some time that that was not in the list of bills to be taken up is no reason why a majority of the Senate of the United States which wants that bill considered should not be privileged to have it considered. I say to the Senator that when he takes the position that he is going to filibuster on the last night of the session, just because he feels that he can do so, against the railroad labor bill which has passed the House, and which is recommended to the Senator is a member, I feel that he is doing a great injustice not only to himself but to the Members of both Houses of Congress.

Mr. HASTINGS. I desire to say, in reply, that when Senators are in charge of a bill and want to pass it, they always think they are being imposed upon, and that Senators are talking longer than they ought to talk.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. We all realize that this talk in the Senate convinces nobody. I know it generally, and I know it with respect to this bill. I shall not even be able to convince the Senator from Louisiana that I am right with respect to the matter now pending; but we have a right, and it becomes our duty if we are conscientious about it, to make a record with respect to it.

I think the bill that is now before the Senate, that has been brought back from the House, is a bill that is dangerous for America, and has no analogy to the bankruptcy bills that we passed in the past year or two, or in this year; and before I sit down I propose to prove that that is true, even to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President-

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. DILL. The Senator a moment ago referred to the agreement by which the railroad labor bill was not to be taken up. I do not know about any agreement between the majority leader and the minority leader.

I do know that ever since the 21st of May I have been trying to have that bill taken up, and I have been assured again and again that there would be an opportunity to take it up; and I hope to make a motion to take it up before adjournment, whether it be tonight or next week.

BENEFITS FOR WIDOWS AND CHILDREN

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has been very gracious, and I dislike to impose upon him; but there is a bill here that is really of very tremendous importance, and I should like to have it passed. I am sure there will be no debate. If there is any debate, I shall withdraw it.

The bill passed the House, and I do not think there was a dissenting vote over there. It is with reference to the pensions of widows and children of disabled soldiers with service connection where there is more than 30-percent disability, where the soldiers die of causes that are not connected with the service. It is a bill which has the approval of the President of the United States and of the Veterans' Administration; and I am sure that if the Senator will let me ask unanimous consent for its consideration, and it can be granted, the bill can be passed without any further debate.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I hope there will be no objection to the request. I shall be only a few moments more on the pending matter.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator object to my bringing up this bill?

Mr. HASTINGS. Not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, in order that we may proceed to the consideration of House bill 9936.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 9936) to compensate widows and children of persons who died while receiving monetary benefits for disabilities directly incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service in the World War was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STOCK EXCHANGE PRACTICES-REPORT

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield to me to submit a report?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Committee on Banking and Currency, authorized by Senate Resolutions 84, 239, and 371 of the Seventy-second Congress, and continued in effect by Senate Resolutions 56 and 97 of the Seventy-third Congress, to investigate security dealings, banking practices, and effects of same, submits the accompanying report.

The committee submits a comprehensive report covering the entire investigation. It thoroughly analyzes (1) securities exchange practices, (2) investment banking practices, (3) commercial banking practices, (4) investment trusts and holding companies, and (5) income-tax avoidances; and concludes with (6) a summary of the legislation thus far enacted as a result of the investigation and the recommendations of the Committee as appear appropriate at this time.

The printing of the report and of the hearings including the index to the hearings will be completed in a few weeks.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. 3528) to grant permission to the Willard Family Association to erect a tablet at Fort Devens, Mass.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2702) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8910) to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H.J.Res. 371) authorizing the creation of a Federal Memorial Commission to consider and formulate plans for the construction, on the apex block, Constitution and Pennsylvania Avenues, in the city of Washington, D.C., of a permanent memorial to the memory of Thomas Jefferson, third President of the United States and author of the Declaration of Independence, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1639) to establish a Federal Credit Union System, to establish a further market for securities of the United States and to make more available to people of small means credit for provident purposes through a national system of cooperative credit, thereby helping to stabilize the credit structure of the United States, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1103. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with certain public works at the naval air station, Pensacola, Fla.;

S.1510. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to adjust water-right charges, to grant other relief on the Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes", approved May 25, 1926, with respect to certain lands in the Langell Valley Irrigation District;

S. 3178. An act authorizing the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to print and distribute additional sets of writings of George Washington;

S. 3541. An act to authorize production credit associations to make loans to oyster planters;

S. 3545. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Clair River, at or near Port Huron, Mich.;

S. 3645. An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to establish a credit system for Indians; to provide for higher education for Indians; to extend toward Indians the right to form business and other organizations; and for other purposes;

S. 3742. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Board of Public Works of the State of Vermont to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Lake Champlain at or near West Swanton, Vt.;

H.R. 9178. An act to regulate the business of life insurance in the District of Columbia;

H.R. 9410. An act providing that permanent appropriations be subject to annual consideration and appropriation by Congress, and for other purposes;

H.R. 9946. An act providing for the ratification of Joint Resolution No. 59 of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, approved by the Governor May 5, 1930, imposing an import duty on coffee imported into Puerto Rico;

S.J.Res. 108. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Eloy Alfaro and Jaime Eduardo Alfaro, citizens of Ecuador; and

S.J.Res. 117. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to present the Distinguished Flying Cross to Emory B. Bronte,

MEMORIAL TO THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield to me?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to be charged with filibustering by yielding to everybody.

Mr. WHEELER. It is not necessary to charge the Senator with that. He has already admitted it.

Mr. WAGNER. If the measure for which I desire consideration shall take any time, I will not press it.

Mr. President, there is on the desk House Joint Resolution 371, authorizing the creation of a Federal memorial commission to consider and formulate plans for the construction, on the apex block, Constitution and Pennsylvania Avenues, in the city of Washington, D.C., of a permanent memorial to the memory of Thomas Jefferson, third President of the United States and author of the Declaration of Independence.

I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the unfinished business was temporarily laid aside, and the Senate proceeded to consider House Joint Resolution 371, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier] to concur in the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3580) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I hope Senators will permit me to conclude. I shall be only a few minutes more.

I have discussed the railroad bill. Following that, what was known as the corporate reorganization section was taken up, and that has just become a law.

Under that particular measure, with which I am a little more familiar, because it is a little more recent, 66% percent of the creditors of any class can compel the other third, or 33% percent, to agree to whatever they propose with respect to the reorganization of the corporation.

It will be observed that in none of those bills passed by the Congress heretofore, those which refer to the individual debtor, the railroads, or the corporations, could anything be done to the advantage of the bankrupt, or the debtor, without the consent of a considerable percentage, more than a majority, of the creditors of the particular debtor.

This proposal is entirely different from those others. There is no effort here and no demand made here to get the consent of creditors at all. It is wholly a different proposition. In this instance, instead of getting the consent of the creditors, the Congress has by a single act provided for an appraisal of the property, and, the property having been appraised and the value having been fixed, it has decided how the debtor might pay off the various creditors

I submit that is an entirely different proposition from anything that has been done by the Congress before. As I have pointed out, we have done nothing heretofore except to force upon a minority the judgment of a majority with respect to the best way to handle the property of a particular debtor.

Here no such thing is asked at all. An appraiser is merely appointed; no creditor is asked whether he agrees with it at all; no attention is paid to his judgment about it; no attention is paid to anything except the fixing of the value of the property by some court proceeding, and the value of the property having been fixed, then they proceed to tell how the debtor may pay off.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I want the Senator to correct me if I am in error. My question is suggested by the statement of the Senator from Louisiana. It is my recollection that in the bankruptcy legislation which was passed under the last administration there was bankruptcy legislation which was applied to the farmer, under which, if a proper agreement could be reached with the machinery set-up, the time of maturity of the debt could be extended, the interest rate could be reduced, and the principal could be shaved down. Am I in error about that?

Mr. HASTINGS. Not at all; and I am sorry I do not recall the details of that legislation sufficiently to explain it to the Senator. My recollection is that that legislation was proposed to the committee by the farm leaders, and, through the Senator from Arkansas, to me. They called upon me and the other members of the committee, and we gave the matter careful consideration and provided for some separate and distinct method of dealing with the farmers in the matter of bankruptcy.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not remember the exact wording of the bankruptcy act proposed for the benefit of the farmers; but I will say that I do not know of a single farmer, not one, who has taken advantage of that act with any satisfaction.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, in reply to that I will say that we put an amendment onto the last bankruptcy measure which came before us increasing the amount that was allowed to the commissioners, or whatever they were called, from $10 to $25. That was done also at the request of some person in the South, and he told me of great numbers of farmers who were taking advantage of that provision in the South. I cannot remember the number or the details sufficiently to be at all accurate about it. He explained to me that the $10 was not sufficient to cover the expenses of his office in relation to the matter, and there had been something discovered in the law which prevented the Department of Justice from adding anything to the fee. Congress changed the fee from $10 to $25 so as to take care of that situation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me ! now to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President. I am about to conclude if the Senator will permit me.

I think I have covered the subject. All I have sought to do has been to explain the difference between the proposal before us and that which has been adopted by the Congress heretofore, and if I have made myself clear with respect to that, I am entirely content.

Mr. SMITH obtained the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President-

Mr. LONG. We are ready for a vote. Will not the Senator withhold his matter until we can vote on the motion before us?

Mr. HASTINGS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Johnson Adams Couzens Reynolds Ashurst Cutting Davis Kean King La Follette Robinson, Ark. Robinson, Ind. Austin Bachman Dickinson Russell Bailey Bankhead Lewis Schall Dieterich Sheppard Shipstead Smith Logan Lonergan Dill Duffy Barkley Erickson Long Steiwer Stephens Thomas, Okla. Thomas, Utah McCarran McGill Fess Fletcher Bone Frazier George McKellar Borah McNary Metcalf Brown Bulkley Gibson Thompson Townsend Tydings Murphy Bulow Goldsborough Byrd Neely Norbeck Gore Hale Vandenberg Byrnes Wagner Capper Norris Caraway Carey Harrison Hastings Nye O'Mahoney Walcott Walsh Clark Hatch Overton Wheeler Hatfield Patterson Pittman Connally White Coolidge Havden Hebert Pope Costigan

Mr. President, I merely wish to reannounce Mr. LEWIS. the absences of the Senators whom I have previously announced as being absent from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I shall have to object until a vote is taken on the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. I understand there are three or four speeches to be made.

Mr. COUZENS. I shall object until a vote is taken. This bill has been before the Senate for a considerable time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am not going to delay the vote.

I am disturbed about this bill. I am sure that my record in the Senate has abundantly manifested my position with regard to the farmers of this country. What I have to say is not addressed to the eastern Senators who are opposing this bill; it is addressed to the Senators who are supporting it.

There are two phases of it, Mr. President, which disturb me. The first is as to the effect that the bill will have upon credits to farmers hereafter. If it applied only to existing mortgages, I should be glad to support it; but here is a program presented, not limited to existing mortgages, but a permanent program for the composition of mortgages.

When a farmer goes to his advancing merchant, or goes to his banker, or applies to an insurance company for a loan under this bill, I want to know, and I am inquiring with earnest anxiety about it, what effect it is going to have upon those credit facilities for the farmers of this country.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Administration, and the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration said he did not want to interfere in the passage of the bill; that he did not object to it; that he thought it would be a help to the farmers in paying up their indebtedness.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am not talking about the agencies of the Government, though I do perceive the possibility of difficulties in the matter of loans now being made by the Federal land banks of this country upon farm property. It has been suggested that I ask the Senator from North Dakota what representative he referred to. What representative of the farm agency did he refer to? Who was it?

Mr. FRAZIER. Representative LEMKE.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thought the Senator said a representative of the Farm Credit Agency.

Mr. FRAZIER. No; a Representative in Congress.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thought I understood the Senator to say that a Member of the House talked to a representative of the Farm Credit Agency.

Mr. FRAZIER. A representative of the Farm Credit Administration-Governor Myers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Governor Myers?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. My attitude is not in opposition to this bill, and if I can be satisfied about it I shall be happy to support it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator has asked a question which is very easy to answer. They are guaranteed at all times. There is never a reduction in the value or in the debt below what the place will possibly bring and even beyond that. In other words, they can never reduce the debts below the value of the property, and that is all they can get anywhere.

The difference which my friend does not discern is that these mortgages, most of them, were made when the dollar was valued at about 60 cents. Today mortgages are being made when the dollar is valued at about $1.36, so that today the mortgages are made on the dollar at its aggravated value.

The trouble is with those mortgages which were made when the dollar was worth less than one-half what it is worth today. At no time can the court depreciate the value and the amount the creditor is going to have at less than its value. They cannot lose anything.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I stated to the Senate, and I am quite glad to reaffirm the statement, that if this bill applied to existing mortgages, such as described by the Senator from Louisiana, I should be glad to support it.

There is no doubt about the need for relief of the farmers who have mortgages on their properties based upon values that prevailed at the time of the execution of the mortgages. in view of the reduced debt-paying power of the farmer. If there is any possibility, under the rules of the Senateand I desire to submit that question to the Senator from Louisiana and to the Senator from North Dakota—if there is any method under the rules of the Senate by which this composition idea can be limited to existing mortgages, I should be glad to have it presented, and I should be glad to support it, and support this bill. But are those of us. Mr. President, who are the real friends, as I conceive it, of the farmers, doing them an advantage?

I submit to the friends of the farmer, are we doing them an advantage by the passage of a bill which will deter all creditors in the future from making loans to farmers secured by mortgages on their properties?

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. Did the Senator vote for the municipal bankruptcy bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did.

Mr. MURPHY. Did the Senator think we were doing an injustice to municipalities in permitting them to compose their debts?

Mr. FRAZIER. A Member of the House told me that he had an interview with the Governor of the Farm Credit ferent proposition. The municipality bankruptcy bill was based upon an agreement by a certain percentage of the creditors of the municipalities.

Mr. LONG. So is this. Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. LONG. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If a majority percentage do not agree to it, then the farmer may appeal to the court and have ipso facto upon an appeal, a stay for a fixed period.

Mr. LONG. That is right.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am in favor of that on existing mortgages. That is all right. I am for it.

Mr. LONG. Then there is no harm in the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, yes; I see great difficulty about it. I do not want to support a measure that will put the farmers of the country in position where they cannot hereafter secure credit as they have done in the past.

Mr. MURPHY. The Senator fears that the passage of the farmers' bankruptcy bill would dry up the source of credit for the farmers. If that be true, why would not the passage of the municipal bankruptcy bill dry up the source of credit for municipalities?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Because the municipality bankruptcy bill was based solely upon an agreement among the creditors. This bill ignores the creditors, as I have just stated. If the creditors do not agree then upon application to the court there is a stay for the time fixed in the bill.

I know the Senator from Iowa is a friend of the farmer. I am anxious, if we can, if there is any parliamentary method by which we can, to make the law apply to existing indebtedness. I should be happy if that could be done. But who is going to loan to the farmers of Iowa or Alabama after this law is enacted when it is known that the farmer at any time after the loan is made may go to the court and stay the foreclosure of the mortgage upon payment of 1 or 1½ percent for 6 years?

Mr. MURPHY. Many States now are preventing creditors from foreclosing on farms. The argument against that procedure was that it would discourage credit for the farmers. If the condition continues, will not Government financing have to be extended to the farmer for all his necessities? Private financing is failing—has failed. Private financing today is imposing terrific burdens upon the farmer, insisting frequently upon renewal of loans at the rate of 53/4 percent. The Farm Credit Administration is putting out its own securities at 3 and a fraction percent, and loaning to the farmer at 4 and a fraction percent.

The high interest rate which it is impossible for the farmer to pay is destroying him. The bill would permit a composition of the farmers' debts. Its passage would operate to prevent transfer of the ownership of our farms from the individuals now owning them to the corporations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course it would be conceded that all credits to farmers hereafter must be made by the Government if the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa be sound; but I cannot concede that.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me, I think he has been submitting some observations worth while, and which in the main not only impress me as sound but no doubt impress other Senators in the same way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, there is so much confusion in the Chamber I cannot hear the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wishes to announce to the occupants of the galleries that they are here as guests of the Senate, and while they may be talking only in undertones, the combined voices cause much confusion. I hope those in the galleries will refrain from all conversation. I also hope that those on the floor of the Senate will refrain from conversation so that Senators engaged in colloquy may hear each other.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I was remarking that the observations the Senator is making on the hesitation of any Senator to vote for the proposal are impressive to me. It does seem to me that we might destroy the credit which he insists the farmers have, because everyone realizes that by the passage of the bill we may be making it impossible for the farmer in the future to borrow money. On May 4 we had the matter before us. There were 11 votes for it and 37 votes against it.

(At this point Mr. Bankhead yielded to receive a message from the House of Representatives.)

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—DIRECT LOANS FOR INDUSTRIAL PURPOSES

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3487) relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BANKHEAD. For what purpose?

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator will yield to me, I desire to call up a conference report which came over from the House, on the bill providing for the making of direct loans to the smaller industries of the country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Virginia for that purpose.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (S. 3487) relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3487) relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes.

(For conference report, see House proceedings, p. 12226.) Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia what is in the bill that is different from what was in it when it left the Senate.

Mr. GLASS. It is my purpose to explain it, and I think I can explain it more explicitly than the reading of the conference report would disclose it.

Mr. President, this is a bill passed by the Senate by an almost unanimous vote, authorizing the 12 Federal Reserve banks to make loans in exigent circumstances direct to going commercial and industrial enterprises.

As Senators will recall, it was proposed at one time to set up 12 intermediate-credit banks for this purpose; but to some of us that was so obviously an extravagant thing to do that we prevailed upon those in authority to agree to a substitute bill which authorized these loans to be made by the Federal Reserve banks instead of 12 intermediate-credit banks.

The authorization extends to the surplus funds of the Federal Reserve banks plus a like amount contributed from the Federal Treasury, to be returned to the Treasury under a scheme of amortization of a minimum of 2 percent, and such additional amounts as may be earned by the Federal Reserve banks upon the loans or discounts made by the respective banks to going commercial and industrial concerns.

That was the chief provision of the bill and the primary purpose of it, as passed by the Senate. The House struck out all after the enacting clause and substituted its own amendments, consisting largely of two banking bills that had previously been passed by unanimous vote of the Senate.

The Senate conferees thought that the attachment of these two banking bills was superfluous, for the reason that when they passed the Senate this bill authorizing direct loans by Federal Reserve banks had not been proposed or even drafted; but, inasmuch as these provisions are harmless, though not especially beneficial, in order to reach an agreement the Senate conferees accepted these amendments.

There is some new matter, notably authorizing loans by | SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CONDUCT INVESTIGATIONS OF PHILIPPINE the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the payment of school teachers in certain cities of the country.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. When the bill passed the Senate, there was a certain amount allocated out of Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds to be loaned to private industry, with a limit of $1,000,000 to any one industry.

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. How did that come back from confer-

Mr. GLASS. It comes back at $500,000. It came from the House at $100,000. It went from the Senate at $1,000,-000. It came into conference with the House amendment authorizing loans not in excess of $100,000. The conferees agreed on loans of not in excess of half a million dollars to various industries.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask the Senator to state the terms under which the $75,000,000, I understand, is to be loaned for the payment of school teachers?

Mr. GLASS. The report provides that an aggregate amount of $75,000,000 may be loaned out of funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, upon full and adequate security, to public-school districts or other similar publicschool authorities organized pursuant to State law for the payment of teachers' salaries due prior to June 1, 1934.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I be pardoned if I interrupt the Senator from Virginia for one question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator. Mr. LEWIS. Conscious of the fact that I am one of those whose persistency no doubt has persecuted the able Senator and the other conferees, advocating as I have been this relief of school teachers, I wish to ask the able Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the subcommittee, if the present provision in the bill as now accepted by the conferees differs in the manner of its enforcement or the manner in which it is to be administered from the provision as it came from the House.

Mr. GLASS. There is no difference whatsoever. We accepted the House amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. For which I thank the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. Which I do not think we should have done. however.

Mr. LEWIS. As to that part of it, I know there has been considerable difference. I appreciate the generosity of the Senator from Virginia, and to him much credit must go for this generous allowance to the school teachers in their necessity.

Mr. GLASS. I think I have enumerated the main points of difference. I may say that the Senate conferees are confident that in the agreement made in general we reflected the sense of the Senate, and certainly the attitude of the Senate conferees, on this bill. If the House conferees are pleased, then all of us are pleased.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, an amendment was agreed to in the Senate, which was offered by me. May I ask what was done with that amendment?

Mr. GLASS. It was not agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. It was the amendment prohibiting the use of influence in securing loans. That was not agreed to?

Mr. GLASS. It was not agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask whether the bill still provides for loans to industry by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the same amount as was provided in the Senate?

Mr. GLASS. No; in an additional amount of $50,000,000. The Senate provided $250,000,000, and the House increased that to $300,000,000.

I move that the conference report be agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I shall register my objection by voting against the adoption of the conference report. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

CONDITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to lie on the table:

> THE WHITE HOUSE. Washington, June 16, 1934.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I am transmitting herewith a copy of a concurrent resolution adopted by the Philippine Legislature on May 2, 1934. You will observe that this resolution requests me to appoint a committee, including an economic expert, to conduct hearings and investigations in the Philippine Islands, in accordance with my message to Congress of March 2, 1934.

It does not seem to be appropriate that I should appoint such a committee at this time, since the Constitution which may be adopted under the provisions of the independence act has not yet been ratified. Since, however, the Congress has been giving close attention to the relations between this Government and the Philippine Islands, it has occurred to me that the Senate and the House of Representatives might consider it useful and opportune at this moment to appoint a committee consisting of probably three of the members of each branch of the legislature for the purposes of investigating the present conditions in the Philippines and reporting to the Congress thereon. It is therefore to the end that any action which may be deemed appropriate in the premises may be taken by the Congress that I am transmitting to you a copy of the resolution aforementioned.

I am communicating in the same sense to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. United States Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the accompanying resolution of the Philippine Legislature will be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

The Chair has consulted the leader of the majority and the leader of the minority, and they are of the opinion that the Chair can, without additional action of the Senate, appoint a committee.

Pursuant to the suggestion of the President of the United States, the Chair appoints the following Senators to represent the Senate on the special committee to conduct hearings and investigations in the Philippine Islands pursuant to the concurrent resolution adopted by the Philippine Legislature on May 2, 1934: The Senator from Maryland, Mr. Typings; the Senator from Arizona, Mr. Hayden; the Senator from Tennessee, Mr. McKellar; and the Senator from Vermont, Mr. Gibson.

The concurrent resolution adopted by the Philippine Legislature is as follows:

(Concurrent Resolution 53, adopted by Philippine Legislature on May 2, 1934)

Concurrent resolution inviting the committee of the Government of the United States to conduct hearings and investigations in the Philippine Islands for the purpose of ascertaining such imperfections and inequalities as may exist in the Tydings-McDuffie law

Whereas, in his message to Congress of March 2, 1934, recommending the approval of a Philippine independence legislation, the President of the United States said: "I do not believe that other provisions of the original law need be changed at this time. Where imperfections or inequalities exist, I am confident that they can be corrected after proper hearing and in fairness to both peoples ";

Whereas it is the desire of the Philippine Legislature that an authorized committee of the Government of the United States conduct hearings and investigations in due time in the Philippine Islands for the purpose of ascertaining such imperfections and inequalities as may exist in the Tydings-McDuffle Act: Now, and inequalities as may exist in the Tydings-McDume Act: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives of the Philippines concurring), That the President of the United States be requested, and he is hereby requested, to appoint a committee, including an economic expert, to conduct hearings and investigations in the Philippine Islands, in accordance with his message to Congress of March 2, 1934, the expenses of said committee and economic expert to be borne by the Philippine Government.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator asked me to yield for the consideration of a matter which he said would require no

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I shall have to object, as the Senator from Michigan did. We never will get through with the pending bill.

Mr. GIBSON. This will take but a minute.

Mr. LONG. This other ought to take but a minute also. We have only a little while. I understand the Senator from Alabama has about finished with his remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Louisiana that a message from the House is a privileged matter.

Mr. LONG. We have under consideration a message from the House of Representatives. That is what we have before

The VICE PRESIDENT. A message from the House of Representatives can be laid before the Senate at any time. Mr. LONG. Very well. I withdraw the objection.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2702) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, and for other purposes, which was, on page 4, after line 14, to insert: "This act shall become effective upon the transfer of civil-service retirement functions from the Veterans' Administration to the Civil Service Commission, as provided in Executive order of April 7, 1934, as amended by the Executive order of June 5, 1934."

Mr. GIBSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] to concur in the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3580) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, as I stated in the beginning, I am frankly disturbed about this situation which has been so suddenly projected upon the Senate. It appears to me that there must be a decision by us as to whether or not we will protect existing mortgagees, with whom I am sure all of us are in sympathy, at the risk of drying up credits hereafter under this bill to other farmers who need credit facilities to be secured by mortgages upon their farms.

Frankly, I do not know how to make a decision on the subject. It seems clear to my mind that if this bill shall be enacted, while it will afford relief which all of us desire to extend to existing mortgagees, at the same time we will be creating a situation under which the farmers will not be able hereafter, until the expiration of the law, to secure credits of the character which require mortgage security upon their farms.

Unfortunately, the sponsors of the measure have presented to us the alternative of deciding whether it is better to give relief to those who are now in distress or, upon the other hand, to leave them to work out the situation as best they can, and to dry up, as I have expressed it, the sources of mortgage credit to farmers.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I have tried to explain to the Senator that this is only a temporary measure, and will expire in about 4 years. I have not been able to get him to see that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have seen it.

Mr. LONG. It is under section 75 of the act we passed in the preceding Congress, a year or so of the time of which has already run, and this matter would not affect the situation the Sentor talks about at all, particularly the credits | simplify the administration of air-mail routes and contracts.

which are extended by the Farm Credit Administration. which extend beyond the time. The Senator is wholly at sea on this matter. Furthermore, we did not even have that kind of a safeguard in the municipal bankruptcy bill; we did not have that kind of a safeguard in the corporation bankruptcy bill; we did not have that kind of a safeguard in the railroad-bankruptcy bill, but it is confined to a temporary period under this proposed legislation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I well understood what the Senator from Louisiana was seeking to accomplish. I know that his heart is in the right place. I would be delighted if I could find some solution of the question. I would like to see the bill enacted, but what is to happen in the next 4 years in the matter of credit for the farmers? What is to happen to loans to insurance companies, to merchants, and to bankers?

As I see it, we must decide whether it is more important to pass this bill, which would afford this opportunity for a stay for 5 or 6 years upon existing mortgages, or, on the other hand, to go back and tell our people at home that under this bill it is difficult for a farmer to secure a credit.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to say that it is difficult for the farmers to secure credit now. There are literally thousands upon thousands of farmers who cannot be refinanced under the existing conditions. They are losing their homes, and they are bound to lose their homes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator must take into consideration those who can secure credit if they are not handicapped in the manner provided in this bill, so that after securing credit they can go into court and secure a moratorium for 4 or 5 years. I do not object to the moratorium, and I do not object to the composition item.

Mr. President, I would like to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to know whether there is any procedure under which we could refer this report back to the conferees with a direction to limit the bill to existing mortgages. If there is any such procedure, I shall be glad to make the motion and will be happy to support the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has not been in conference. A motion is in order either to agree to the amendment or to send the bill to conference.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I will make the motion that the bill be referred to a conference committee with instructions that it be confined to debts presently existing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will shake hands with the Senator on that.

Mr. LONG. I make the motion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana move to refer the bill to a conference committee?

Mr. LONG. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, ask for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Chair appointed Mr. McCarran, Mr. Long, and Mr. Robinson of Indiana conferees on the part of the Senate.

SIMPLIFICATION OF ADMINISTRATION OF AIR-MAIL ROUTES AND CONTRACTS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 366, to simplify the administration of air-mail routes and con-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee moves that House Joint Resolution 366 now be made the pending business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 366) to Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this joint resolution proposing an amendment to the law, requires the aircraft commission established by the recent Air Mail Act to report its recommendations about routes. That is not material.

The second section is very material. It would permit the Government to consolidate two contracts into one route, so that where there was a route on which it had received very low bids, a route from Newark, N.J., or New York, to Los Angeles, which was divided in the advertising into two routes and two contracts, one from Newark to Fort Worth, on which it received a low bid of 13 cents, and the remainder of the route for 39 cents, when they were consolidated as would be permitted under this act, into one route, there would be a very low rate across the continent. For that reason it seems to me that the joint resolution should be passed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, this is only the beginning, as Unele Henry, of Show Boat fame, says. This amendment to the law is necessary. This joint resolution proposing the amendment ought to pass, but it is only one of a great many amendments which will be found necessary to the ill-considered air mail law recently enacted.

The conference report upon the act to revise air-mail laws and to establish a commission to make a report to Congress recommending the aviation policy came to the Senate on the 5th of June. It was opposed, but the Senate adopted the conference report. That was on June 5. On the very next day, June 6, it was found necessary to introduce amendments affecting one of the most essential policies contained in that report. The bill became a law by the signature of the President on the 13th day of June. We therefore see that this amendment was offered before even the bill had been signed by the President.

I now call attention to this matter, because it emphasizes a fact which was heretofore called to the attention of the Senate, and, notwithstanding full knowledge of the situation, the Senate passed the air mail bill.

In section 3, subsection (d), of the bill the following language appears:

The Postmaster General may designate certain routes as primary and secondary routes and shall include at least four transcontinental routes—

I am undertaking to call attention to the section of the act which is supposed to be amended by the amendment now pending, because I feel sure that some Members of the Senate would like to know what they are about to vote upon.

The Postmaster General may designate certain routes as primary and secondary routes and shall include at least four transcontinental routes and the eastern and western coastal routes among primary routes. The character of the designation of such routes shall be published in the advertisements for bids, which bids may be asked for in whole or in part of such routes.

Another section of the Air Mail Act made a limitation upon the number of routes as well as the number of contracts which any one operator could have. This is the limitation in section 15 of that bill:

After October 1, 1934, no air-mail contractor shall hold more than three contracts for carrying air mail, and in case of the contractor of any primary route, no contract for any other primary route shall be awarded to or extended for such contractor. It shall be unlawful for air-mail contractors, competing in parallel routes, to merge or to enter into any agreement, express or implied, which may result in common control or ownership.

What did that affect as it was passed by the Senate? There had been created under the McNary-Watres Act and by virtue of the wise, far-reaching policy of Postmaster General Brown three transcontinental routes, each of which was independent of the other, and all of which were competitive, as evenly as possible, at all points of contact. That admirable structure was intended to be destroyed by the legislation which was passed here, after full notice that that was one of the objectives of that legislation. Nevertheless, the Senate put it through. The roller flattened us out as completely as anything could be flattened. We made a vigorous resistance, and explained the situation fully.

Within 24 hours the administration discovered what that meant to it, because it had let certain contracts for a temporary period to contractors who were qualified to transport the mail in a great transcontinental flight, and by virtue of this act passed, it found itself embarrassed by the situation which has been described by the Senator from Tennessee. They had cut the transcontinental route from Newark via Fort Worth to Los Angeles into two routes, and made two primary routes, and now comes the United States Congress and forbids a contractor flying the mail over two primary routes.

With that obsession to restrict, with that obsession to cut down the mileage of these routes so as to make more routes for distribution among those who kept the Democratic donkey alive, as the witnesses testified before our special committee, they rushed in and enacted this bill. They then found the administration had gotten into a very embarrassing situation and that they must come to Congress within 24 hours and have an amendment which would reverse entirely the policy to which Congress has subscribed, and go back to the policy of Postmaster General Brown of having one organization, one contractor, manage and operate one of the great transcontinental routes.

What I have said about the southern transcontinental route applies to all of them. It applies to the midtranscontinental route and to the northern transcontinental route. This injurious measure, this poisonous piece of legislation, is just as damaging to the other two as it is to the southern route for which American Airways has a contract.

If we were entirely frank in offering the amendment we would admit that it affects them all. We would also admit that what we did in the passage of the bill in respect to one of the most essential features of the bill was absolutely fallacious, that it was contrary to the public welfare, that it was against economy, that it was against the interests of those who send mail from ocean to ocean, that it was against the interests of the people who have become passengers and would desire to continue to travel by air from coast to coast.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BULKLEY. Will the Senator permit me to submit a unanimous-consent request? I ask unanimous consent that the business now before the Senate be laid aside to permit us to complete consideration of the measure which I previously had before the Senate, to amend the Banking Act of 1933 and the Federal Reserve Act?

Mr. DILL. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard. The Senator from Vermont will proceed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to have that matter intervene, but I certainly want to be on record at this time with respect to the proposed amendment of the law, because the amendment speaks with more persuasion than I was able to use when we were considering the subject in advance of the enactment of the law, though we had the power to reason and we had the evidence upon which to base reason. Certainly there is no sane person who could not have seen that what we were about to do was a damaging thing to do and that no purpose could be served except vindictiveness.

What I am saying applies in principle to every other one of the 18 important changes created by the conference report and the bill as it was passed. There were 19 sections preceding the creation of the Commission to investigate aeronautics and report to Congress in order that we might enact some rational legislation relating to the entire subject of aeronautics. But could we await the report of the Commission that should investigate the matter?

Oh, no; not at all. We had to save the face of the administration. We must pass 19 of those sections which altered completely the face of the air-mail map of the United States, which reversed the policy of the Government with respect to encouraging the development of safety and speed and efficiency in this growing industry, and which would wreck, if possible, all the material efficiency and splendid development that has occurred during the past 4 years. We did it. We did it more than effectively, and we began to rue it within 24 hours.

I prophesy that unless the Congress is willing to open the door to that Commission in respect to all the other 18 fundamental changes made in the bill, the Commission will be a total failure, a total loss so far as the public welfare is concerned.

The amendment of the act now before the Senate should be extended beyond the limits of section 3 and should include every other section of the act in order that the Commission might have just an even chance to come here to Congress with recommendations which would be constructive and which would be feasible.

Let me read what we are about to adopt. I know we will adopt it. I want it adopted. What I want to say is that we ought to adopt the same thing with respect to every other phase of the act. I read the first part:

That subsection (d) of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to revised air-mail laws, and to establish a commission to make a report to the Congress recommending an aviation policy", approved June 12, 1934, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "The Commission created under section 20 of this act shall review the designations made by the Postmaster General under this subsection, and include in its report to Congress its conclusions upon such review.

Mr. President, I suggest to the Senate that it is a good thing to do that, but there is implied in the joint resolution an interpretation of the act which excludes a review of any other one of the important changes effected. To that extent the amendment is faulty. The amendment ought to be adopted, but there should be an additional power extended to the Commission to cover the entire act.

Mr. President, I am hurrying and straining my voice in an effort to be heard, not because I think it is interesting at all to anybody else, but because I want to be on the record with all we have said and done heretofore with respect to the legislation.

Section 2 of the proposed legislation, the joint resolution before us, is as follows:

The first sentence of section 15 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows: "After March 1, 1935, no person holding a contract or contracts for carrying air mail on a primary route shall be awarded or hold any contract for carrying air mail on any other primary route, nor on more than two additional routes other than primary routes."

The meaning of that is that one contractor may have 1 primary route and 2 secondary routes, but he may not have a system like that which runs across the center of this continent, with north and south feeders operated by the same company that operates the transcontinental line. All that he may have is the primary route across the continent and two other routes.

I ask the Senate, What sense is there in undertaking to make restrictive provisions of this character, which can have no other object save that of feeding the cupidity of someone, no other object than to cripple the service and to narrow it in such a way that there is no possibility of development through any great transcontinental operator?

Of course, the second section also proves beyond any question how ill-considered that bill was. The second section is an admission that the original bill was defective; that it was crudely drawn. I will not charge that the authors were not acquainted with their subject, because I know that at least one of them was acquainted with his subject; but I call attention to the difference between the phrase as it was originally written and as it is now asked to be written. I read it as it is in the bill. This is section 15.

ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL CREDIT UNION SYSTEM

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President-

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator permit me to submit a privileged request which will take only a moment?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendment of the House to Senate bill no. 1639.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1639) to establish a Federal Credit Union System, to establish a further market for securities of the United States, and to make more available to people of small means credit for provident purposes through a national system of cooperative credit, thereby helping to stabilize the credit structure of the United States, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert a substitute therefor.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 131) providing for membership of the United States in the International Labor Organization.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9829) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act with respect to the processing tax on hogs.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 9769. An act to amend the act of June 19, 1930 (46 Stat. 788), entitled "An act providing for the sale of the remainder of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Oklahoma, and for other purposes"; and

H.J.Res. 452. Joint resolution to provide an additional appropriation for expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1935.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 3231. An act to provide a retirement system for railroad employees, to provide unemployment relief, and for other purposes:

H.R. 3357. An act to amend section 99 of the Judicial Code (U.S.C., title 28, sec. 180), as amended; and

S.J.Res. 59. Joint resolution to provide for the expenses of delegates of the United States to the Ninth Pan American Sanitary Conference.

AMENDMENT OF BANKING ACT OF 1933 AND FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BULKLEY. I renew my request for unanimous consent to lay aside the pending business temporarily for the purpose of concluding the consideration of Senate bill 3748.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the pending business for the purpose of taking up Senate bill 3748. Is there objection?

Mr. DILL. I object.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

SIMPLIFICATION OF ADMINISTRATION OF AIR-MAIL ROUTES AND CONTRACTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 366) to simplify the administration of airmail routes and contracts.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, section 15, as it was adopted by the Senate in its unswerving course toward its objective, reads as follows:

SEC. 15. After October 1, 1934, no air-mail contractor shall hold more than three contracts for carrying air mail, and in case of the contractor of any primary route, no contract for any other primary route shall be awarded to or extended for such contractor.

Now, listen to the proposition before the Senate. I read

After March 1, 1935, no person holding a contract or contracts After March 1, 1935, no person holding a contract or contracts for carrying air mail on a primary route shall be awarded or hold any contract or contracts for carrying air mail on any other primary route, nor on more than two additional routes other than primary routes.

In the one case—that is, in the bill itself—they were dealing with contracts. In the amendment which is now pending before the Senate they are dealing with routes-two vastly different things. They were not contented to limit the mileage. They were not contented to be able to determine the service. They must go still further and, by this amendment, determine both the mileage and the service by making this provision relate to routes instead of to contracts.

As I have urged with respect to this subject before, this will surely plague them as much as did the other provision, for they are going to encounter the proposition that those who have been awarded routes already, under temporary contracts which they have provided for in this bill, may have them extended 9 months first, and then again extended perpetually. The law makes it compulsory, that they shall be extended indefinitely. They will find themselves confronted with the proposition that this contractor or that contractor who has been granted more than one primary route and two subsidiary or ordinary routes will not surrender his rights, will not surrender his vested property on this date of March 1, 1935, because the Constitution guarantees to him that he has a right to that unless the Government is willing to pay him for its surrender.

That is the type of legislation we are now amending. That is the type of this particular section of the amendment itself.

I conclude, Mr. President, by saying that there is no role that I abhor more than that of a prophet of evil. I am rather inclined to be optimistic. I am inclined to believe that these great air-mail companies which have been destroyed by the ruthless cancelation of these contracts, and by the consolidation of that damage by this law that we passed, nevertheless will have genius enough—the same genius which enabled them to build up the splendid institution that they did-by reorganization, and by other means to continue to serve the public, even though it costs the public, and it costs them the sacrifice of the finest qualified men and personnel in every one of those companies.

I call attention to the fact that that legislation has already, in the brief period of time since it was enacted, forced the disintegration of the great companies that flew the air mail. It has already forced the separation of manufacturers and of operators in the air. That is so theoretically; but so far as the practical business of disentangling these organizations goes, the calling in of a great number of different certificates of shares of stock, the exchange of different types of major securities involved in the unscrambling of these corporations, of course it has not been effected. It cannot be effected in the time allowed by the law; and when they come to the committee today and ask for just a reasonable extension of time in which to do that, does the committee allow them an amendment for that purpose? Some of them, I understand, were perfectly willing to grant that extension of time, and others, whose purpose has been demonstrated from the beginning to the instant time, refused to grant a request for an amendment which came from that side of the contract.

"Oh, yes; it is fine; we will bring in an amendment that saves the face of the administration." But let one of the citizens of the United States ask for an amendment which will save the property and the rights of the citizens, and what about that? Not at all. Let me read a letter I have received.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. For what purpose?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield for a question only.

Mr. LONG. I only wish to ask a question. What is the proposition the Senator is discussing? I have been out of the Chamber, and I want to keep in touch with the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am quite sure that if the Senator from Louisiana had been present he would not have heard me. I cannot raise my voice loud enough to attract the attention of the Senator from Louisiana.

I now read from this letter of O. Max Gardiner, attorney for the Aeronautic Chamber of Commerce of America, dated June 14, 1934:

Hon. Kenneth McKellar,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.
My Dear Senator McKellar: Herewith enclosed find the suggested amendments to the air-mail laws, which amendments gested amendments to the air-mail laws, which amendments are respectfully recommended to be embodied in the pending Senate joint resolution.

May I say in this connection that a meeting was held in Washington yesterday by the directors of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America and, by unanimous vote of the representatives of the entire industry, the proposed amendment was adopted. adopted.

The obvious purpose of these amendments is to grant an extension of 6 months to the companies affected in order to give them additional time in which to perfect the reorganizations required by law and dispose of their stocks and holdings without undue sacrifice to the stockholders.

PERMISSION TO INDIANS TO DISPOSE OF LAND

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, there has just been messaged to the Senate a bill affecting about 40 .-000 Indians in Oklahoma. It will occasion no debate. At the present time these Indians own some coal land. The Secretary of the Interior leases the land for the Indians. Under the present law he can only lease in tracts of a thousand acres. This measure would amend existing law so as to enable him to lease the land in small tracts. The Indians are very much in need of the income, and they claim they can lease the lands in small tracts but not in thousand-acre tracts. So I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. The Senate has a similar bill on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside the pending business for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of House bill 9769. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 9769) to amend the act of June 19. 1930 (46 Stat. 788), entitled "An act providing for the sale of the remainder of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Oklahoma, and for other purposes", which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 3863 will be indefinitely postponed.

EXPENDITURES BY THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I ask unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside the pending business, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 452, which relates to House expenditures.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 452) to provide an additional appropriation for expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may say, in a word, that the Senate never argues with the House about House expenditures, nor does the House argue with the Senate on Senate expenditures. This joint resolution is to take care of the expenditures which were overlooked, apparently, by the House conferees, when we had under consideration the deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESERVATION OF DOMESTIC SOURCES OF TIN

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report favorably, without amendment, the bill (H.R. 9275) to provide for the protection and preservation of domestic sources of tin. I ask unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside the pending business and to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 9275) to provide for the protection and preservation of domestic sources of tin, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIVISION OF WATERS OF YELLOWSTONE RIVER

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont

Mr. AUSTIN. I vield.

Mr. NYE. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, I report favorably, without amendment, the bill (H.R. 8954) to amend an act approved June 14, 1932 (47 Stat. 306), entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River."

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield for that purpose?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8954.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO THE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield. Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably Senate Resolution 219. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents is hereby authorized to employ, for the duration of the Seventy-fourth Congress, an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,400 per annum.

INVESTIGATION OF FEDERAL LAND BANK, ST. LOUIS

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably Senate Resolution 272.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I move to amend the resolution by including the land bank at Spokane, Wash.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am informed that it will take the Senator from Vermont but a short time to complete what he has to say on a measure which is of great importance and which is strongly recommended by the Department. I hope that we can go ahead with it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont has has given consent to the Senator from South Carolina for the consideration of a resolution. That resolution is before The Senator from Montana has offered an the Senate. amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. If there is to be offered to the resolution an amendment which provides for an investigation of anything other than the St. Louis bank, which investigation is provided for by the resolution, then, under the rules of the Senate, it must be referred to the Banking and Currency Committee, and it can then go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. If such a resolution is introduced. I shall be glad to have the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate meet and consider it.

Mr. WHEELER. There is no reason why a resolution cannot be amended on the floor of the Senate. There is no rule which prevents the inclusion of another Federal land bank in the resolution without having the resolution go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. My understanding is that under the rules no investigation can be provided for unless the resolution is passed upon by the legislative committee, and when so acted upon it must be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. This is not another investigation. It is simply adding to the investigation which has been authorized. The subject to be investigated is a land bank. I am simply asking that when the land bank at the particular place called for in the resolution is investigated, the committee at the same time shall investigate the land bank at Spokane. Under the rules of the Senate there is nothing to prevent such a step being taken. There is nothing which requires such a resolution to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have no objection to it as the Chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that if the proposed amendment incurs additional expense, certainly it would be violative of the spirit of the rule.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not asking for any additional

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule can be waived, of course. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, how can the committee go to Spokane, Wash., and St. Louis as cheaply as they can go to St. Louis alone?

Mr. WHEELER. The resolution does not ask for more

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I shall have to object. Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina withdraw the resolution?

Mr. BYRNES. I offered the resolution believing that it would not be the subject of debate. If the Senator from Vermont refuses to yield further, I withdraw the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina withdraws the resolution.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably Senate Resolution 257, continuing the employment of an assistant clerk to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 257), submitted by Mr. Connally on the calendar day of May 28, 1934, and it was considered and agreed to, as follows:

the foor.

Mr. McKellar. I know that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rules of the Senate, no one can take him off the floor without his consent. He

Resolved, That Resolution No. 111, agreed to January 19, 1934, authorizing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to employ an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, is hereby continued in full force and effect until the end of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

SIMPLIFICATION OF ADMINISTRATION OF AIR-MAIL ROUTES AND CONTRACTS

The Senate resumed consideration of the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 366) to simplify the administration of air-mail routes and contracts.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am trying to finish the reading of a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar]. I have read that part of the letter which pointed out some of the reasons why it is necessary to extend by 6 months the time in which to effect the reorganization commanded by the law. I continue reading as follows:

It is not necessary to say that the market for aviation securities is greatly depressed at this time and a precipitate liquidation over a short period would entail further loss.

Under the provisions of subsections (a) and (b) of section 7 of the original act, the companies are compelled to dispose of their the original act, the companies are compelled to dispose of their securities and stocks on or before a fixed date, to wit, December 31, 1934. The proposed amendment does not affect the bill in any respect except to grant 6 months' additional time, to wit, until June 30, 1935, and thereby afford these companies opportunity to avoid the hardships and losses likely to occur if they are arbitrarily compelled to find the market for their securities on or before December 31, 1934.

Respectfully submitted.

O. MAX GARDNER, Attorney for the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America.

Mr. President, I am about to conclude what I have to say respecting the proposed amendment by offering an amendment thereto, which I send to the desk to be read; and I do hope that for one moment the Senate will pause long enough to consider that rational proposition, and to adopt it without a protest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

That subsection (a) of section 7 of the act entitled "An act to revise air-mail laws and to establish a commission to make a report to the Congress recommending an aviation policy", approved June 13, 1934, is hereby amended by striking out the words "December 31, 1934", and inserting in lieu thereof the words "June 30, 1935."

That subsection (b) of section 7 of said act be amended by striking out the words "December 31, 1934", and inserting in lieu thereof the words "June 30, 1935."

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope that amendment will be voted down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN 1.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3748, to amend certain sections of the Banking Act of 1933 and the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this is a debatable motion. Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Did the bill which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] is championing lose its status because of the consideration of a privileged conference report?

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the bill which the Senate has had under consideration for 3 or 4 hours. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] moved to displace the unfinished business by substituting his bill, and it was done. The Senate has now passed the measure presented by the Senator from Tennessee. The Chair has now recognized the Senator from Ohio to make the measure which he is sponsoring again the pending business.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a point of order. We had under consideration the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] to strike section 18 from the bill at the point where we displaced the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate has not yet decided to consider the bill.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this is a debatable motion, as I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. DILL. I ask recognition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I have been waiting for weeks to take up the railroad labor bill. It was reported to the Senate on the 21st of May. It has been on the calendar, and I have tried to cooperate with those in charge of legislation here in the hope that the bill might be reached for action before adjournment.

It is evident that unless this bill is taken up and made the unfinished business there is not any chance for it to be passed. The Senator from Ohio has had his bill here for several hours. No one knows how many more hours it will take. It seems to me that in circumstances of this kind we ought to take up some other kind of legislation, and at least make an effort to pass it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator from Washington realizes that so far as I am personally concerned, I am very greatly interested in the bill which he is discussing. I helped to frame it in the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I am very anxious to have it considered. However, the bill of the Senator from Ohio has passed the House, and can be acted on very shortly by the Senate. The Chairman of the House Committee on Banking and Currency has advised me that they are waiting for an opportunity to pass in the House without amendment, when we can get it over there, the bill that the Senator from Ohio is now sponsoring. There is no reason why there should be any delay in passing that bill. It can be sent over to the House and acted on, and then we can take up the bill which the Senator from Washington referred to and dispose of it before we adjourn.

Mr. DILL. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that the railroad labor bill has passed the House also.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill under discussion has not passed either House, but the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House has assured me that if we get the bill over there it will be passed by the House without referring it to the committee or amending it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. LONG. There is a motion over there for a conference. Until the House has disposed of that matter I am sure it would not be in a position to take up any new business.

Mr. DILL. The bill of the Senator from Ohio, as I understand, is not even on the House Calendar now.

Mr. BULKLEY. An identical bill is on the House Calendar. The House undoubtedly can pass it at any time it wants to.

Mr. DILL. Why does not the House pass it?

Mr. BULKLEY. They want to get our bill, and they say they are willing to take it without amendment.

Permit me to explain the situation to the Senator. are within a few moments of completing this bill. The several hours that it has been the pending business have not been occupied with the consideration of the bill. The time has been occupied, as the Senator knows, with the discussion of other matters, notably the Frazier-Lemke bill.

Mr. DILL. The bill has been discussed since early in the afternoon.

Mr. BULKLEY. It was not discussed for more than an hour. It was displaced by the discussion on the Frazier-Lemke bill. We are nearly through with the banking bill. It will take only a few minutes.

Mr. DILL. I wish that were true. I have been waiting all afternoon for the bill to be disposed of with the understanding that I should then have an opportunity to take up the railroad labor bill.

Mr. BULKLEY. I hope the Senator may do that.

Mr. DILL. Instead of that, a motion was made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar]—and I am not blaming him—to take up his air mail bill. That was taken up and discussed for nearly an hour and was finally disposed of. When am I to get an opportunity to take up my railroad labor bill?

Mr. BULKLEY. In just a few minutes, I hope.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill in charge of the Senator from Ohio is not an involved bill. It is recommended by the Federal Reserve Board and by the Comptroller of the Currency. We have not discussed the bill more than 30 minutes altogether. There have been many other things intervening in the way of conference reports and messages from the House, and that is where the time has gone. It has not been spent on the bill of the Senator from Ohio. I think we can dispose of it in 15 minutes.

Mr. DILL. If I might have some understanding that when we dispose of the bill of the Senator from Ohio I shall have an opportunity to move to take up the railroad labor bill,

I would not be quite so concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator may be assured of our assistance in that regard.

Mr. DILL. The Senator's assistance is all right, but if we take up another measure we will have the same argument again. We have here a proposal to take up a bill that has not passed either House. I am proposing to take up a bill that has passed the House and is here for action, a bill which has been considered and worked out by both Houses, a bill which has the endorsement of Coordinator Eastman, is backed by the President and is asked for by the President, and yet the session apparently is to be adjourned without it even being brought up for consideration.

The bill has passed the House and can be passed here quickly, and that would be the end of it. We are asking an opportunity to take it up. We are asked to take up another bill which has not passed either House, which involves a lot of definitions that no one understands with the exception of a few Senators who handled the bill in committee. There are a number of amendments involved. In view of that fact, I think we ought to have an opportunity to take up the railroad labor bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, in addition to those whom the Senator mentioned, his bill is also endorsed by the railroad brotherhoods.

Mr. DILL. It is not only endorsed but it is demanded by the railroad organizations and insisted upon by them. We have had banking legislation here, one bill after another, as well as Reconstruction Finance Corporation bills. We have adopted two conference reports tonight. There has been no legislation for the railroad laboring men of the country. I am told by representatives of the railroad labor organizations that if there is not such legislation as this a strike vote will be called among the railroad employees of the country.

I think with the amount of legislation that has been enacted for the banks and for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, it is about time that Congress began to think a little bit in terms of help for railroad labor.

I have been silent, trying to work in harmony with those in charge of the legislative program, but when I see such a situation as exists here tonight, I know it is going to be impossible to dispose of the bill to which I am referring unless I get an opportunity to have it called up very quickly.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley] has made a motion to take a piece of proposed legislation. If the motion is adopted, then I propose to submit a substitute motion to take up the railroad labor bill unless I can have an understanding that I may be recognized to take up that bill immediately following disposition of the bill in charge of the Senator from Ohio. I do not propose to sleep on my rights and not take advantage of the situation.

The railroad labor men of the country, more than a million in number, are entitled to some kind of system under which they can adjust their differences.

We have had conference reports adopted today. We had a measure acted on today which was substituted for the Wagner labor bill so that we can handle labor disputes. I am asking to take up proposed legislation which will take charge of the situation so far as the railroad laboring men are concerned. There is no legislation on the statute books today to prevent a great railroad strike or to bring about settlement of their disputes.

The bill has in it provisions which the railroad employees of the country and their organizations are backing. They have agreed to submit to compulsory arbitration of their disputes. That is a new thing in the labor world. That is something which has not been secured in any prior labor legislation that has been proposed.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest to the Senator from Washington that he might procure unanimous consent to take up the railroad labor bill immediately following the disposal of the Bulkley bill.

Mr. DILL. No; I do not believe I could secure unanimous consent. Certain Senators are very much opposed to enacting the legislation, as they have a right to be; but I do insist that I have a right to have it taken up and considered. The Senator from Ohio is sure that his bill will take such little time. If he would let me take up the railroad labor bill and make it the unfinished business, I should be willing to ask unanimous consent to lay it aside for the consideration of his measure. But I do insist, with the crisis in the country today, that the bill to which I am referring, which is designed to meet the troubles that may arise in the railroad world, should be considered and that the Congress should not adjourn before at least making an effort to enact it into law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator believe that upon the conclusion of consideration of the measure which is being championed by the Senator from Ohio, and which measure should not take half an hour to dispose of, he could submit a motion for consideration of the bill to which he refers and secure the consent of the Senate to consider it?

Mr. DILL. I have been in the Senate long enough to know that in order to do that I must have recognition, and if somebody else gets recognition then I cannot submit a substitute motion, but must go through the same procedure again and move to override any other motion which may be made. All I can do is to give notice that if the motion of the Senator from Ohio is adopted I shall feel called upon to make a motion to displace his bill and take up my bill. I know of no other way to get the bill considered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it seems we do not understand the status of our legislation. We have a bill which has already passed both Houses and we are waiting for the House to appoint conferees. It would be the height of folly to take up the bill of the Senator from Ohio, the bill which he is sponsoring, a bill which has not even been passed by one House, and proceed to its consideration. Perhaps there is some kind of a rule by which that can be done, but in point of time I know of no reason why a bill which has already passed the Senate and passed the House should not be acted upon before we proceed to the consideration of a bill which has not passed either body.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. LONG. I yield for a question, but I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not going to let the Senator lose the floor.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no trouble about it. The matter of sending the Frazier bill to conference is in the House. We cannot displace that, of course, it being in the other body, but it could not be taken up here until that privileged motion in the House is disposed of.

Mr. LONG. I hope that is so. If that is true, then just as soon as I get news that they have taken up the Frazier bill in the House, I shall not desire to stay here any longer. Under the rule about which my friend from Kentucky tells me, the motion will have to come up first over there, and therefore I shall not delay the bill here. As soon as I hear that the motion has been acted on in the House, I am going to quit, even though I have not concluded my remarks.

Mr. President, I am inexperienced in the rules of parliamentary procedure and have had very little experience in the matter. I am only trying to go by the rule of thumb. In other words, I know that the shortest distance between two points is a straight line. As soon as they crowd the bill of the Senator from North Dakota out of the way over yonder, I will know that this other bill is ready to go in there; but until they get that other wadding out of the gun I know of no other wadding that has any business going in that gun barrel.

In other words, I do not know anything about what is a preference motion and what is a privileged motion, but I know that we have not any business pulling wadding out of a gun barrel until the shot has gone out of there. That is the language that I understand.

The bill of the Senator from North Dakota is over there, and it moves rather slowly unless it has something behind it. We shall have to get something behind this bill to relieve the farmers to make it move at all, because it took 6 hours for that bill to get from the other end of the Capitol over here this afternoon. It took 6 hours to get a bill over here to let the farmers have the same kind of relief that has already been given to the municipalities and to the railroads and to the corporations. It took 6 hours to get that kind of a bill over here, but this bill to help the banks can get over there quicker than lightning.

It does not take any time at all to get a bill through here and through there if it has a bank in it, top side or bottom; but if it has the farmers in it, it takes time. So now I want to get pressure behind the Frazier bill, and the only way I see to do it is to keep this bill right here behind the Frazier bill.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question. I do not want to lose the floor. I am getting smart on this business. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the occupants of the galleries understand that they are the guests of the Senate, and that the rules of the Senate require that our guests shall not express themselves in audible tones.

Mr. DILL. Does not the Senator think, then, that the best thing to do is to vote down the motion of the Senator from Ohio, in order that we may make a motion to take up the railroad labor bill?

Mr. LONG. We shall be some time in getting to that motion. We are not going to vote for some little time yet. Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield to my friend for a question.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that if we should proceed here in order, and dispose of some of these matters, we would get to the bill to which he refers, and get to all of these matters with some likelihood of disposing of them.

Obviously, the tactics that are now being adopted lead nowhere except to prolonging the session of the Senate, because I think most Senators know that the Senate cannot be sandbagged into action and compelled to act without any regard to its own wishes about how it shall proceed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to say to my friend from Georgia that I would not have a bit of trouble in the world in settling this matter with him; and the only trouble I have over in the other House is that they have not got the Senator from Georgia over there handling the bill. If we had the Senator from Georgia over there, we would have no trouble about the matter. That is our trouble in this situation now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to help the Senator if I can.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if the House shall adopt the motion to send that bill to conference, it must then go to conference, and be agreed to in conference, and be brought back to both Houses.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator think the adoption of the conference report on that bill would be facilitated by disposing of all these pending matters, and getting them out of the way, so that when the Senator's bill comes here it will have a clear track?

Mr. LONG. I am advised by the wise men of the Senate that that is not the way to do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I may not be as wise as some of the Senator's advisers, but I am afraid he struck a fool that time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. LONG. I do not want to lose the floor; that is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. LONG. I will yield to my friend from Arkansas with the understanding that I do not lose the floor, if I may have that understanding.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I merely wish to say that I do not think there is any relationship between the question of what the Senate shall take up and the question of when the body at the other end of the Capitol shall send a bill over there to conference. I do not believe that the two subjects can be related in any way, either in parliamentary practice or in actual results.

It is my thought, and I think that I ought to say it, that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley] should be given an opportunity to dispose of his bill. I realize that, as is always the case at the end of a session, there is a contest here for precedence; but during the time that the Senator had the bill before the Senate, as a matter of fact, there were irrelevant discussions, and then there were discussions of many other subjects, and very little time was devoted to the bill. I think some time was given to the consideration of amendments that might very well have been disregarded; but I say to the Senator from Louisiana that I do not think delaying action either on this bill or on any other bill will affect the action in the House on the conference report, and I do not think any wise man-I do not care whether he is in the Senate or somewhere else-would make that suggestion, nor do I believe that any wise men will accept it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LONG. I desire to continue my remarks. I do not want to yield to the Senator from Montana now. I want to get through.

Here are the facts about this matter: We have been promising the farmers help ever since I have been here. I came here when these eastern Republicans and Democrats—there is no difference between them except which one has the jobs—wanted us to vote to free the railroads in the bankruptcy proceedings. I got down here and worked as hard as I knew how to try to put that bill through, to free the railroads of the debts that they said they had to be freed from to keep the trains running on the railroad tracks. That was all right, to shave down the interest and to shave down the principal, and give them something that they had to have.

Then we came along here and voted to have the corporations freed and given bankruptcy to get them out of debt, and I was in favor of that relief.

Then we came along here and wanted to relieve the municipalities of all the debts that they had, and we finally put that over, too.

Then we came in here with the farm bill,

Nobody else knows what is in the bank bill. You can bet your boots that it is something for the banks, however. No bank bill ever went through here that did not have something in it for the banks. Here is a bill that has not passed either one of the Houses. This bank bill has not even passed the United States Senate: and they tell us that if the United States Senate will just get out of the way and act on it quickly enough, the bill will go over there just as fast as a martin ever went to his gourd, and will be concurred in without amendment. They already have the cake cooked up. We know what is inside the house before we unlock the door. All we have to do is to pass the bill. They have it all fixed up over there in the House, already cutand-dried and sandpapered and oiled. It will go through just as they put it through the Senate, and there will not be any amendment, and it will come right back over here.

All right. I want my farmers taken care of. I want my farmers to have just as speedy consideration as the banks get here. I want these men at the forks of the creek and down on the bayou to be given some consideration.

When it takes 6 hours to get a bill from one end of the Capitol over here that is relieving the farmer and half a minute to get a bill from here over yonder, and approved at the same time, that affects the bankers, I want to find out what the difference is, because my folks back home are waiting for me to explain to them why it is that we can give bankruptcy to a railroad and cannot give it to a farmer; why it is that we can give bankruptcy to a corporation and cannot give it to a farmer; why it is that we can give bankruptcy to a city and cannot give it to a farmer; why it is that we can put a bill from one end of the Capitol to the other, if it concerns bankers, before we can fire a shotgun, and it takes 6 hours to get a bill from one end of the Capitol to the other if it is going to do anything for the farmer.

I have nothing to do with the rules over in the House, and do not want to have anything to do with them; but if they are to do anything, it is time they did something for the farmers. Twenty million people demand action! Twenty million people demand action!

Forty million, the Senator from Virginia tells me. I do not know; I left the farm 20 or 30 years ago, and I figured lots of other people had as much sense as I had. [Laughter.] That again goes to show that I am above the average man raised on the farm. I had sense enough to get away from it 20 years ago, and never to go back.

Forty million people are entitled to just as much consideration as are a handful of bankers. These people I am talking about are being dispossessed of their homes at the rate of 3,000 farm families a day, and the bankers are not losing anything whatsoever. They can get along without this bill, whether we pass it or not. I do not care particularly whether the bank bill gets through or not. I was one of the men in the side-pocket agreement we had here that we were to take up two or three bills, but they came along with two or three more, and two or three more, and two or three more. I did not complain about it, but the chances are that if we had not had those bills in the way, we would have had this other bill out of the way.

We hear a lot of talk on the other side of the Chamber from the Senator from Rhode Island—I do not indict the Senator from Delaware exactly—to the effect that he stepped out of the Chamber when the farm bill came up, and did not hear when it was passed. Now he wants the whole thing done over because he went outside the Chamber when we voted on the bill. Well, if the Senator had been as much interested in this bill as I was, he would have been here when the bill was called up. I was watching for that bill to come up, and there was not one man in the Senate who objected to the passage of the bill granting bankruptcy to the farmers.

But we know something about this business. Ah, Mr. President, I began to see the telegrams coming in here last night, and I knew there was going to be something dead up the creek by morning. When I began to see the telegrams come in that the farm bill was to be disastrous to invest-

As to this bank bill, I do not know what is in it anyway. I ments of the country, that it was a radical thing, would be body else knows what is in the bank bill. You can bet pur boots that it is something for the banks, however. No going to be something rotten in Denmark before we ever that bill ever went through here that did not have some-

Some people think they have to eat a whole beef in order to tell that it is tainted. You do not have to eat all there is in the beef to tell that it is tainted. I say that to my friend the Senator from South Carolina. There are a lot of people who think you have to eat the hide and hoof to know there is anything wrong. But when I saw that bill take 6 hours, and they told me it would be over here every 10 minutes, I knew there was going to be trouble.

Lo and behold, the minute that bill came here and we moved to concur in the House amendments, notwithstanding the fact that those amendments of the House were more favorable to the creditor than the bill passed by the Senate itself—oh, right cocked and primed rose the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Delaware, spick and span with a stump speech as though they had polished it up to deliver to a country-school audience 14 years ago. I saw smack off the bat they were ready to make a high-low speech against this bill going through. They were all deceived. Everything was in the bag. Something was wrong about the bill.

The Senator from Rhode Island spoke about how he had been misled. This young country boy from Providence, R.I., came down here, and the farmers put something over on him! And this bright young man who had never had a chance to know anything about city life, from Wilmington, Del., had been misled by the farmers, and did not have a chance to see what was in this bill when it passed through here.

Well, we took the bill up, finally got the little amendments agreed to, and then it suddenly developed they had not found just what there was in the bill they could kick about, except that one of them said he did not hear when they passed it, and the other did not know why they passed it.

Then they finally found one little thing, that it did not limit itself to the past debts, and they grabbed onto that just like a jay bird looking for a grubworm, and they went out with that.

Nothing would do but something had to be done about that. If we would just make it apply to nothing except the debts of the time being, everything would be just hunky-dory.

Now we send over there, and they tell us to send this bankers bill over there, and they will get the bankers bill out.

I said, I have been in that business, not exactly directly, but I want to tell you, when you are dealing with these politicians, get yours first. Remember that, Mr. President, when you go back to Texas. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. NEELY. The entire voting record of the Senator from Louisiana in this body proves that he is a genuine friend to labor. But the policy that he is now pursuing is not friendly to the railroad men. Will not the Senator give us an opportunity to vote down the pending motion that was made by the Senator from Ohio, and immediately after that is done it will be possible to vote to take up the railroad men's bill, and the Senate would probably pass it before midnight.

A continuation of the futile debate that has been in progress for nearly an hour will mean that there will be no vote on anything, and that the railroad men's bill and the bill for the relief of the farmers will not be passed before the Congress adjourns sine die at midnight.

Mr. LONG. How is Congress going to adjourn in an hour and 15 minutes?

Mr. NEELY. After the Senator has been a Member of the Congress as long as I have, he will know that it is always possible to adjourn in circumstances such as now exist.

the creek by morning. When I began to see the telegrams | Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I think I have a way of keepcome in that the farm bill was to be disastrous to investing them from adjourning at midnight. [Laughter.]

I will say this, however: I have no objection to the railroad | labor bill being considered eo instanti; none at all.

Mr. NEELY. Let me thank the Senator for the assurance which he has so kindly given us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has yielded to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question. Mr. NEELY. If the Senator from Louisiana will refrain from speaking long enough to permit us to vote on the pending question, it may become possible to obtain a vote on the railroad men's bill within an hour.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as I understand the parliamentary situation, we first would have to vote down the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. NEELY. If the motion of the Senator from Ohio should prevail, the Senator from Louisiana, or any other Senator could move to substitute the railroad men's bill for the bill the Senator from Ohio has asked the Senate to

Mr. LONG. I should be glad to take that course, just in one moment, after I have explained my position in the

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from West Virginia will understand that if the Senator from Louisiana yields the floor, any other Senator may get the floor on the motion of the Senator from Ohio and occupy it for such time as he sees fit to.

Mr. LONG. I understand that, Mr. President.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. HASTINGS. I wanted to inquire of the Senator from West Virginia, if the Senator from Louisiana will permit, whether he contemplates offering an amendment to the bill offered by the Senator from Ohio, which is now on the desk.

Mr. NEELY. The so-called "insurance bill"?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator from West Virginia certainly does intend to offer the amendment about which the Senator from Delaware inquires if the motion of the Senator from Ohio prevails.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, does the Senator from Delaware desire to ask me a question?

Mr. HASTINGS. I just wanted to make this observation, that if the Senator from West Virginia proposes to insist upon his amendment to the banking bill, the Senate is not apt to adjourn at 12 o'clock, because that is a very controversial question; I have very decided views upon it, and I expect to address the Senate upon that question if it shall be brought up.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am willing to have a vote taken, and to see what will happen to the railroad bill. In other words, I should like to see the railroad labor bill passed. In a few moments I will take my seat in order that we may vote on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley], following which I shall expect the Senator from Washington [Mr. Dill] to make his motion, and I will vote for that. If it should happen, however, that the Senator from Washington should be voted down, and we should come into a discussion of the banking bill, the first thing to come up is section 18, upon which I shall desire to make some remarks.

Mr. President, I desire to say to the Members of the Senate that I wish to expedite the work here tonight. No one is more anxious to adjourn than I. I shall be happy to adjourn. However, here are two Houses of Congress which have almost unanimously put themselves on record to the effect that they are going to take care of the farmers. With both Houses already on record in favor of taking care of the farmers of this country, to let this bill die here. Mr. President, would be a crime against the whole country.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. GLASS. I desire to ask upon whose motion it was that the Frazier farm mortgage bill got into conference. And may I intrude another question while I am on the floor? Why did not the Senator from Louisiana pursue the effort to pass that bill instead of sending it to conference? Had the Senator done so, we would have avoided all this delay and all this discussion.

Mr. LONG. I will state the reason to the Senator from Virginia. I canvassed the situation around here, and I was very much afraid we should not be able to put the bill over on a vote, so we sent it to conference. I am a pretty good judge of how Senators will vote, so I went around and found out what the sentiment was; and if the Senator wants me to speak frankly-the Senator from Virginia himself speaks frankly-

Mr. GLASS. I do with reference to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Yes; for which I thank the Senator from Virginia. The facts of the case are that the Senator well knows that there are a great many Senators who will vote for that bill who are not half as anxious to pass it as I am. I want the bill passed, because I am entirely in favor of the

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, why did not the Senator endeavor to have it passed when it was before the Senate, or have a vote taken on it, instead of sending it to conference?

Mr. LONG. I did not think I could pass it. That is the

Mr. GLASS. The fact is, the Senator must hold himself responsible for this delay.

Mr. LONG. I am responsible for the bill going to conference on the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, and other Senators who suggested that course. I considered it the best thing to do. Now, over on the other side of the Capitol, in the House, they want to make use of the gag rule; but I am going to keep the Members over there waiting long enough so that next time they will not want to gag the Senator from Louisiana.

I will pull off a gag of my own for the Members over there. They will do some sitting up over there tonight before they get out of there. They may gag 435 men of the

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. DIETERICH. The Senator from Louisiana, in casting reflections on the other House, is entirely out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken. Mr. LONG. Very well, Mr. President. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] and I understand one another, because I have already told him.

Mr. President, the measure to which I refer ought to be here. It ought to have come over from the House. I am not going to cast any reflections on the House. I am going to talk about them in good language. I am going to talk about them for just a moment.

It has just been suggested by one of the Senators that we vote on the question. I am willing to take a vote on the matter now before the Senate, and then proceed a little further.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I desire to say something in behalf of what the Senator from Washington [Mr. Dill] has said about the railroad labor bill. It does seem to me a strange thing that that bill remained on the calendar from the middle of May, whereas in the case of this banking bill, under the urge of the Federal Reserve banks, the Wall Street bankers who wanted first an extension from June 16, 1934, to June 16, 1935, before they had to elect as to whether they would remain in the securities business or in the banking business, come here and get all the amendments they ask for. The bill goes through the Committee on Banking and Currency with some 18 amendments to the Banking Act of 1933 and the Federal Reserve Act, the 1933 act requiring a segregation of the securities business and the banking business; but in the case of the railroad labor bill, which has been on the calendar since May 17, although several pleas have been made to bring up the bill, the railroads write the reports for Senators that are filed in this body and one single railroad in particular practically dominates the Senate when it comes to dealing with the railroad question.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. What objection is there to the railroad labor bill?

Mr. COUZENS. I know of no particular objection except from the Pennsylvania Railroad, which has its representatives here, and writes the report. It has objection to the railroad labor bill.

I protest against a committee reporting a bill under the domination of the Federal Reserve Board, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Wall Street bankers, having it reported out here 3 weeks after the railway labor bill is reported, and still we cannot get the railway labor bill up for consideration. There is a determined and fixed opposition, represented by one great powerful railroad, which continues to block and prevent the passage of this bill, which is wanted, not only by the railroad brotherhoods but by the President of the United States, who originally asked for this legis-

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am one of those who would like to see all three of the measures which seem to be under consideration brought before the Senate for a vote. I do not understand why one Senator or another should think it necessary to preclude consideration of other bills in order to consider the one in which he is primarily interested.

I happen to be so minded that I expect to vote for the railway labor bill. I expect to vote for the bank bill, and I shall probably vote for the Frazier bill. It seems to me that it might be possible for the Members of the Senate so to arrange their affairs that all these bills may be brought before the Senate, and not make it impossible to do so, so as to defeat some of them.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield. Mr. CLARK. I should like to suggest to the Senator that we would have had plenty of time in which to pass all these bills in the time we have been wasting in the discussion of what bills we should take up.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. What the Senator says is probably true, excepting for the announcement which has been made by the Senator from Delaware to the effect that he is going to prevent the passage of the railway labor bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator from Montana ascribe such great powers to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HAST-INGS]? Does the Senator think he can do that?

Mr. WHEELER. He would not have such great power, in my judgment, except for the fact of the lateness of the hour, because we are to adjourn at 12 o'clock, and he can filibuster until that time.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Montana knows that the Senate will not adjourn until a majority of the Senators vote to adjourn. If a majority of the Senators are in favor of any one of these bills they have the power to stay here until the bill is passed.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I object to paying the Senator from Delaware or anyone else any undeserved compliments. At this time of the evening anyone knows that any Senator who has legs and lungs can accomplish a great deal; and the Senator from Delaware can prevent the passage of a bill before adjournment if he sees fit to indulge in the parliamentary expedient which the Senator from Delaware frequently uses.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from West Virginia must know that we are not under compulsion to adjourn at midnight or any other particular time. The Senate is not involved in any urgent necessity for concluding its business at any particular time. It seems to me that if we have business to be finished, it is our duty to stay here until we have finished our business; and I am among those who propose to vote against adjournment until these proper measures shall be considered.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia has called attention to the fact that I frequently participate, as he stated, in delaying legislation. So far as I know, that statement is not correct.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Sentor yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HASTINGS. I vield.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator manifestly misunderstood me. I did not mean to say or intimate that the Senator has improperly delayed legislation. The Senator freely exercises his right to talk in the Senate. Of this right he cannot be and should not be deprived.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has expressed the hope that there may be passed by the Senate three measures, two of which he very much favors and about the third I understood he might be doubtful. I want to say to him that I am very much opposed to all three of them, and under the circumstances I ask him what he expects me to do?

I had nothing to do with fixing today as the time when the Senate might be expected to adjourn. I have been told by persons in authority that it is the President's desire that the Senate adjourn tonight. In order to do that the leader on this side of the Chamber undertook to map out a program, and, so far as I know, each of us on this side of the aisle has attempted to carry out that program. I want to say to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and to any other Senator who is listening that neither of the three bills was on that program. I cooperated, so far as it was possible for me to cooperate, to carry out the program, and I understood that when the three bills on the program were passed that would be satisfactory to the administration.

Mr. COUZENS. Neither was the banking bill on the

Mr. HASTINGS. All right; I am coming to that.

I do not know how much influence Wall Street is having with the Senate; but, so far as I am concerned, it is having no influence with it. It seems to me the suggestion that the banking bill is being urged upon the Senate at the suggestion of Wall Street is a reflection upon those who are urging the necessity for its passage. In addition to that, I think the suggestion that one railroad is in the control of the opposition to the railroad labor bill also is unfair.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] talks about the bill having been on the calendar since May 17. I have never opposed it being brought before the Senate. It is now 5 minutes past 11 o'clock on the night when it is proposed to adjourn the session, when it is suggested that it is unfair to labor and it is unfair to the other railroads not to permit this particular bill to come up for consideration because some great railroad is opposed to it. I am opposed to the bill. I am not opposed to it because the Pennsylvania Railroad is. I am opposed to it because the employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad are opposed to it.

I know it is said the Pennsylvania Railroad employees belong to a company union and it is desired to outlaw the company union. I know something about the Pennsylvania Railroad and the operation of the company union. I know for the period of a generation there has not been a strike nor the likelihood of a strike on the Pennsylvania Railroad under the company union.

The reason why I am particularly interested in the bill and why I am opposed to it is because the bill practically outlaws the company union and gives it no share in the board that is created to control labor difficulties,

The Senator from Washington [Mr. Dill] knows not only that I am opposed to it, but he knows that other members of the committee are opposed to it. He knows it is a controversial measure. I heard him say a moment ago that there is a great demand for it, that there is likely to be a strike on the railroads unless some such legislation as this is enacted.

I invite his attention to the fact that the man who is running the railroads of the country, the Coordinator, said this:

I do not now suggest legislation because of immediate need, but in order that the legislative situation may be clarified and stabilized, and proper provision made for the future.

Under circumstances like that, when the man who knows more about it than any other individual in the country comes before the country and says that, I ask whether it is fair to insist upon this matter being considered at 10 minutes past 11 o'clock at night, and when, in addition to the things I have stated, it has been before the House for nearly 6 months and action was taken on it only 2 or 3 days ago? I inquire whether or not we were not in a proper position to believe that under reasonable circumstances we would not be called upon to oppose the bill in this session of the Congress?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President-

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that the outlawing of company unions is not new in railroad legislation. The difficulty is that the present outlawing of company unions in the emergency railroad transportation act cannot be made effective because there is no penalty and therefore that part of the law is a dead letter. Congress has repeatedly approved legislation for outlawing company unions. The only new part in the bill in that regard is to make the law effective by providing a penalty.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, it is a long story; it is a long bill, and it will take a lot of time to consider. Regardless of what may be charged against me, I do not want to interfere with the Senate. I do not care whether it adjourns tonight or at some other time. I am not interested in that. I am only trying to cooperate. But I do not propose that the Senate shall pass these bills in which I am greatly interested without their being fairly discussed.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I wish at this late hour of the night I might impart some of my well-known precaution and conservatism and amiability to other Senators. [Laughter.]

I think I might say without giving offense that I rather think it scandalous of the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] to charge on the floor that honorable members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the United States Senate are dominated by anybody. I challenge him now to show a single provision of the bill that was even suggested by Wall Street or is of interest to a solitary Wall Street banker.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I shall do that in my own time when the Senator has concluded his speech. I will show plenty that went on in executive session concerning the domination of bankers in the bill.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator is at liberty to do it now. I invite him to do it in my time.

Mr. COUZENS. I shall take the floor in my own time.

Mr. GLASS. I want to say for myself that there is not a banker in Wall Street, individually or collectively, who has ever opened his lips to me on the subject of the provisions of the bill. I was chairman of the subcommittee to which all these matters were referred.

I do not know that it is a compliment to any Senator to say that he has been approached by Wall Street bankers or that he is of such a subservient nature that he may be dominated by Federal Reserve authorities. I resent it, as one member of the Banking and Currency Committee. I have never been approached, suggestively or otherwise, by letter or in person, by a New York banker or any other sort of a banker, except perhaps by distinguished members of this body who felt that their little banks in the small towns in the country districts were treated harshly in requiring them to separate immediately their investment and their deposit transactions.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I desire to tell the Senator from Virginia that he was not present when the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Connecticut reported to the full committee which drafted this bill and finally prepared it for consideration. I do not know what connection the Senator from Virginia had with this bill, and I refer him to a statement he made on the floor this very evening in which he said that he delegated the job of fixing this bill to the Senator from Ohio. So nothing I have said could possibly have had any reference to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator has in mind the declaration of the Senator from Ohio that I now have in mind, it disproves his assertion that there is anything in this bill that was propounded to us by Wall Street bankers. On the contrary, the thing that some Wall Street bankers did want in this bill is not in the bill.

Mr. COUZENS. And the reason why it is not in the bill is because there was a split among the Wall Street bankers. The Senator from Connecticut testified before the committee that after the subcommittee had expressly agreed to extend for 1 year the period for the segregation of the banking and the securities business, there was a split among the Wall Street crowd, and the Senator from Ohio had one viewpoint, and the Senator from Connecticut had another viewpoint; and as a result of that split they cut out the extension of 1 year for the segregation of affiliates and the banking business.

Mr. GLASS. So far as I know, the subcommittee never has agreed to the extension of the provisions requiring the separation of affiliates from parent banks. It never has agreed to do anything of the kind.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I do.

Mr. COUZENS. I should have said the prevention of taking deposits and doing a security business.

Mr. GLASS. Nor was the proposition to defer that for 1 year, so far as I can recall, before I was taken too ill to attend the meetings of the subcommittee, ever agreed to. The only thing that was agreed to tentatively was that investment bankers who received deposits must apply those deposits to the investment banking business and not to the commercial banking business, and that was not a postponement for a year or any other period of time. Tentatively, it was agreed to make it a permanent provision of the bill. In other words, if the great investment bankers of the country wanted to continue to receive deposits, they must not be received for commercial banking purposes, but the deposits so received must be applied to investment banking. That was the tentative agreement of the subcommittee; and, so far as I know, no other was agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I point out to the Senator from Virginia that he was not present and he cannot answer for what took place when this bill was drafted by the Senator from Ohio in collaboration with the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. GLASS. I am perfectly confident that the Senator from Virginia can answer the proposition of the Senator from Michigan that the Banking and Currency Committee of the United States Senate is dominated by Wall Street bankers. I think it is a charge that the Senator from Michigan should withdraw.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I said that the Wall Street bankers, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Comptroller of the Currency wrote this bill,

Mr. GLASS. I deny that all of them put together dominated the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. COUZENS. I assert it.

Mr. GLASS. I deny the assertion; and the Senator cannot present any proof to sustain his position, Mr. COUZENS. I can submit the proof that the Senator from Virginia was not there when this bill was drafted for submission to the Senate.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator did not need to be there to know that his colleagues on the Banking and Currency Committee are honest and upright men.

Mr. COUZENS. I did not charge that they were otherwise than honest and upright men.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; the Senator did. He charged that they were dominated by Wall Street, that they were dominated by the Federal Reserve Board, and I deny the assertion.

Mr. COUZENS. I assert that it was so, and it was clearly evidenced in the meeting when the Senator was not present.

Mr. GLASS. I do not know what was done at the meeting which I did not attend.

Mr. COUZENS. Of course the Senator does not.

Mr. GLASS. But I know what is in this bill; and the Senator cannot point to a provision of it that was advocated by Wall Street bankers.

Mr. COUZENS. No; that was taken out because there was a division among the committee.

Mr. GLASS. It was taken out, I venture to say, because it was the judgment of the committee that it should not be put in.

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, no.

Mr. GLASS. Had it been put in by either suggestion or dictation of Wall Street, the Senator might have had some justification for his accusation.

It is a serious matter for any honorable Senator to stand on this floor and bring such an accusation as that against his colleagues. If I could think that the Banking and Currency Committee of the United States Senate could be dominated by Wall Street, or by the Federal Reserve Board, or by the Comptroller of the Currency, or by all three of them combined, I should be ashamed to accept membership on it.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT, as in executive session, laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations (and withdrawing a nomination), which were referred to the appropriate committees

(For nominations this day received and nomination withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several officers in the Regular Army.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Navy.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Jesse E. Murry to be supervising inspector, Navigation and Steamboat Inspection

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

William H. McDonnell, of Illinois, to be United States marshal, northern district of Illinois, to succeed Henry C. W. Laubenheimer, resigned;

Sid A. Willis, of Montana, to be United States marshal, district of Montana, to succeed Rolla Duncan, whose resignation is effective June 30, 1934;

Samuel E. Swinney, of Oklahoma, to be United States marshal, eastern district of Oklahoma, to succeed Clark B. Wasson, term expired; and

William C. Lewis, of Oklahoma, to be United States attorney, western district of Oklahoma. (Mr. Lewis is now serving under an appointment by the court.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

SENATORS FROM LOUISIANA-ADDITIONAL PETITION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Hilda Phelps Hammond, chairman of the Women's Committee of Louisiana, relative to the action of the Senate in regard to discharging the Committee on Privileges and Elections from further consideration of the charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana against the Senators from that State, Mr. Long and Mr. Overton, and praying further investigation of said charges, which was ordered to lie on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on today, June 16, 1934, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

S.J.Res. 106. Joint resolution authorizing loans to fruit growers for rehabilitation of orchards during the year 1934;

S.J.Res. 130. Joint resolution to amend section 72 of the Printing Act, approved January 12, 1895, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, relative to the allotment of public documents, and section 85 of the same act | fixing the date of the expiration of the franking privilege to Members of Congress; and

S.J.Res. 138. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 169, 73d Cong.), approved April 21,

WORLD-WIDE DEPRESSION-ADDRESS BY SENATOR H. D. HATFIELD

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] at Pennsboro, W.Va., on Saturday, October 1, 1932.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, is there a man or woman here who ever can forget the high adventure of America's entry into the great war among the nations?

Then, under the profound spell of exalted idealism; imbued with zeal for a cause appraised as right and just; impelled by ardor for principles esteemed sacred and honorable, America unsheathed her mighty sword, and rushed—youthful, strong, and courageous—onto a battlefield that even then was red with the blood of a whole nation mobilized.

It was a holy war, we were told. A war against militarism and autocracy. A war against despotism and tyranny. A war against imperialism, a war for the freedom of democracy, and justice for small nations and oppressed peoples everywhere.

These were the noble aims to which the Nation dedicated its vast resources, its manhood and its womanhood, its blood and its treasure, without measure and without stint.

In the dead of night our transports, heavily freighted with our dear ones, stole warlly down the harbor, carrying many destined nevermore to return. Our legions of men in khaki and in blue sailed away across the seas. sailed away across the seas.

How proud we were when the first contingents reached the foreign shore. Our brave and knightly host hastened eagerly to confront the foe. Of the outcome we never entertained a doubt.

There were moments of agonizing suspense, of numbing appre-

The grey-green horde of the enemy had swept down the valley of the Danube and across those historic plains, crimsoned with the strife of the thousand years, carrying all before them; revulsion from the hunger and horror of war had dethroned the autocrat of all the Russians and brought the Slavic giant to his types, back across the crean came that memorable cry of despair. knees; back across the ocean came that memorable cry of despair, "We are fighting with our backs to the wall."

The battlements of Paris and the very citadel of the British Empire, we were told, were endangered. America responded with a mightier effort. We poured out upon the altar of our patriotism more money and more men.

The tide turned. There came the glorious victory at Chateau-Thierry and the Belleau Woods. The enemy's final lunge at the heart of France had been caught upon our sturdy buckler and hurled back.

hurled back.

More victories. More triumphs for our arms. Two million Americans are on the western front. Two million more are encamped and ready to embark. The weight and power of a resolute young republic have tipped the scales, quickened the drooping spirit of our beleaguered allies, and overwhelmed our war-wearled adversary. The subsea cables hum with the glad tidings. The enemy falters, he retreats, he recoils before the death stroke. He sues for peace.

From the bivouac of the dead, from the fields where poppies blow, and the ranks of crosses row on row, we travel to the mirblow, and the ranks of crosses row on row, we travel to the mir-rored halls of Versailles where are gathered the envoys and plenipotentiaries, the ministers and ambassadors, the sages and philosophers, the economists and experts, the military chiefs and statesmen of all nations, and their satellites.

Not since the dawn of civilization had there been such a con-

A man-made rainbow had been stretched across the firmament, and it hung there, suspended high in the heavens, a ribbon of many colors, beautiful to behold. The covenant to be effected under its magic spell was to usher in a millenium, a thousand years of peace.

It was, we were told, to be a "peace without victory.

This assurance, insistently expounded behind the battle lines; this catchword, so contrary to all the previous practices of mankind, had been polished and perfected and set up to form the very keystone of a magnificent arc de triomphe, through which we were to march—a vast multitude of peoples of all nations, races, and climes—to form a great concourse in the oft-dreamed temple of the parliament of man.

In fancy we could see the whole stupendous panorama of man's long, slow, upward climb from the ferocity of the jungle until at last, purged of his bestiality, he renounces and repudiates right that is made by might.

Such was the gorgeous spectacle offered at Versailles. the refuge to which we might repair while we bound up the wounds of the war. Weary mothers, poring over casualty lists for names they could never find, were comforted and ennobled by it. Society was to be transformed and human nature cleansed of its iniquity by the stroke of the pen.

Then, like a mirage, the vision vanished from before our bedazzled eyes. As the scene eluded our enraptured gaze, we saw it was a phantom conjured up by our own tortured imagination. The scenery was whisked away, and there standing upon the world stage in the gilded chambers of Versailles, we saw neither messiahs nor redeemers, but men and women like ourselves, who had striven mightily and failed.

I speak sorrowfully, my friends, not of the remote events of long ago, but of a recent occasion with which we are all too familiar—that delusive attempt to create a super-government, familiar—that delusive attempt to create a super-government, resting upon force of arms, to perpetuate a world status quo repugnant, in many respects, to the enlightened opinion of mankind. I can portray but feebly the disillusionment that then overtook the world. The American people sensed the sham, and in a great and solemn referndum rightfully refused to pledge the unborn generations of this Nation to a succession of wars that inevitably must ensue from what is essentially a league of allested distatus coolemns of Armagaddon. plighted dictators, spoilsmen of Armageddon.

It is not my purpose here to review the protracted debate, turning largely upon abstract principles of government, that eventually led the United States Senate to refuse to mortgage the sovereignty of this Nation. My conviction is that our people forever have disposed of the issue of entry by this country into the League disposed of the issue of entry by this country into the League of Nations, either by the front door or the back door.

Nor would I carry you back to the bitter memories of the compacts of Versailles, except for their collossal, their indefensible economic stupidity. The passions of war now have cooled, and in a calmer light, I trust, we shall be able to examine those economic phases of the treaties, to which this Nation resolutely declined to be a party. It is my belief that in the heat of conflict over the League of Nations we have been inclined to overlook these economic effects. economic effects

We have now become accustomed to think of the peace as a punitive peace, a peace imposed by the victors upon the vanished; and we are fully aware that it did not carry out the pre-armistice pledges made to a beaten and conquered foe.

I do not propose here to debate the moral rectitude or lack of it, of the pacts of Versailles, but to discuss their economic restrictions that right but were the proposed in the pacts of Versailles.

tions that, rightfully or wrongfully, have been imposed upon the world.

That it was the deliberate intention of the pact-makers to destroy the economic power of Germany is evident. Face to face with starvation of her 60,000,000 people, and confronted with the bayonets of an invading army, she was forced to cede to France the payonets of an invading army, she was forced to cede to France the enormously rich iron, coal, and potash mines of Alsace-Lorraine; to yield up, pending a plebescite in 1935, the rich coal mines of the Saar; to Poland were handed over her immensely valuable coal reserves in Upper Silesia. These seizures, though condoned at the time on the assumption that Germany was uniquely guilty of provoking the war, deprived the nation of 35 percent of her coal and 75 percent of her iron.

Furthermore, she was directed to deliver 140,000,000 tons of her remaining coal to France during a period of 10 years, with an additional 25,000,000 tons annually to others of the victorious nastions. To these exactions was added the further vexation that she was compelled to submit to the dumping of foreign goods upon her markets, while her own unrivaled industrial machine stood idle. Her railways were denuded of their best rolling stock, whilst her principal waterways were subjected to alien control.

To complete her economic humiliation, she was stripped of her to complete her economic humilation, she was stripped of her colonies, her navy, and her merchant marine, and saddled with the huge indemnity of $125,000,000,000, which was later reduced to $33,000,000,000 and then to $8,000,000,000 by the realization that the collection of this staggering figure in gold was not only impossible but the exaction of even a smaller sum would be detrimental to the victorious allies.

Germany's partner in the war, that fearful and wonderful ag-glomeration of races, over which the Hapsburg dynasty held sway, was designedly expunged from the economic map. In pre-war days haughty, cultured Vienna proudly sat at one of the great crossroads of the world.

At her feet converged four great routes, hewn by nature in remote geological times. Through these mountain clefts, over these rolling plains, and down these fertile valleys, swarmed the very progenitors of modern Europe. Ancient hunters, with stone axes, bows, and arrows, intimately knew her forested glades and dwelt contentedly on her pleasant grasslands. Their successors, down the long march of the centuries, savagely have fought over these desirable areas to this very day.

the long march of the centuries, savagely have fought over these desirable areas to this very day.

This marvelous handiwork of nature was scorned and disdained by the peacemakers of Versailles. They deliberately blockaded the four great highways spreading fanwise from Vienna to the seas. They sought to close for all time the great arterial waterway that wound along the Danube to Bavaria and thence by canal to the Main and the Rhine; they walled up the magnificent passage down the Danube to the Black and Aegean Seas; they cut off the thoroughfare that ran up the March to the Oder and via the Moravian Gate to the North German Plain and the Baltic; they closed up the avenue of trade that in other days naturally flowed over the Semmering Pass to Trieste.

Today, Vienna is but a shadow of her former self. In sackcloth and in ashes, she mourns the loss of 173,000 square miles of her land and 35,000,000 of her people. Is it any wonder that she is bankrupt, a beggar among the nations?

Formerly the Austro-Hungarian Empire, embracing 50,000,000 of people and 241,000 square miles of land, virtually was self-sufficing, from an economic point of view. She had coal in Bohemia, Silesia, and Moravia; iron ores in Styria; oil in Galicia; timber in the Tyrol, together with agricultural lands of incomparable fertility.

When the peacemakers of Versailles decided to rend her apart, her coal in Bohemia and Moravia was turned over to the new Republic of Czechoslovakia. Her Galician oil went to Poland; the timber in the Tyrol, together with 2,000,000 of her inhabitants, went to Italy and the tender mercies of the Facisti; Bosnia and Herzegovina were awarded to Serbia, allegedly chief instigator of the events immediately precedent to the war; while a section of the rich Hungarian borderland went to Rumania.

The Austro-Hungarian industrial machinery, likewise, was scattered among these new-born states. Formerly integrated and thrifty, the dismemberment precipitated stagnation and chaos. To cite but one example, her textiles: Austria, to employ her looms today, needs must export her yarn to Czechoslovakia for weaving, bring it back for printing and dyeing, and then reexport the finished product to markets in Galicia and Hungary. Under the free internal trade of the old empire this could be accomplished, but now punitive tariffs impede the process at every frontier. The Austrian metallurgical industries, so vital in this modern era, are prostrated. Because her coal is gone, she cannot use her iron.

Thus, we find the fragments of the Austro-Hungarian economic machine parceled out to seven nations, where one sufficed before. The business, commerce, and banking that formerly radiated along natural economic channels from Vienna, superbly stationed at the focal point, must now be done elsewhere or not at all.

The baneful economic effects of the pacts of Versailles long have The Austro-Hungarian industrial machinery, likewise, was scat

The baneful economic effects of the pacts of Versailles long have been disguised to the world under the deceptive names of "postwar readjustments." We are now in position to see that instead of readjustment reconstruction may be necessary. The map makers of Versailles, insofar as their economics are concerned, appear to be in the position of the small boy who took the clock apart. He scattered the fragments into seven heaps on the floor, and then was amazed because each individual pile did not come to life and begin to tick.

begin to tick.

Not war debts but the Treaties of Versailles are blocking the road to permanent prosperity in Europe. I mean to criticize these treaties on several grounds, not because I have any wish to interfere in any way whatever with the affairs of Europe, but because Europe has chosen to bring the issue to us by falsely asserting that the intergovernmental debts are a stumbling block to world prosperity. The time has come when these treaties again must be passed in review before the enlightened opinion of mankind, for these treaties truly are the cause of Europe's unhappiness and uneasiness for the future. In the references that I am about to make in regard to the Treaties of Versailles, I wish it in general to be understood that I refer to the Treaty of Versailles (Germany), the Treaty of Trianon (Hungary), the Treaty of St. Germain (Austria), the Treaty of Neuilly (Bulgaria), the Treaty of Lausanne (Ottoman Empire), and the Treaty of Sevres (Ottoman Empire), because all sprang from the Congress of Versailles, and for the sake of brevity can best be enumerated under that general heading. Not war debts but the Treaties of Versailles are blocking the that general heading.

In recent times we have heard more of the Treaty of Versailles than we have of the auxiliary treaties, because Germany is a more powerful nation and a more vociferous one than the others; but in their disruptive effects upon the prosperity of Europe I believe that the auxiliary treaties, and in particular those which dismembered the Austro-Hungarian Empire, were even more calami-that the auxiliary treaties, and in particular those which dismembered the Austro-Hungarian Empire, were even more calamitous than that which dismembered Germany, for the reason that the Treaties of Trianon and St. Germain disregarded geographical conditions such as are now recognized to be so intimately connected with the social well-being of the various peoples.

If the Treaties of Versailles were to be revised on a basis of reason and justice, the whole world would be grateful.

Nearly everyone agrees that the treaties were conceived and imposed in the mad hates and wild lusts of the war. Only now, after a lapse of nearly 15 years, are we beginning to discuss them publicly, and certainly no one in America has a right to discuss them unless it be with a spirit of friendliness toward all of the parties and in full recognition of the deep passions and violent hatreds that war always breeds and intensifies. In the calmermoods that are beginning to prevail we may hope, amongst all nations, it would seem that all nations are entitled to examine these treaties, because all nations are affected by them directly or indirectly. If the injustices of the treaties have destroyed the prosperity of Europe, then it follows that they have to a greater or a lesser degree impaired the prosperity of the whole world. If the injustices and mistakes of the treaties can be corrected by negotiation, then it also follows that one of the principal impediments to world preventing will have been removed. It was a supplementation of the principal impediments to world preventing will have been removed. It was a supplementation of the principal impediments to world preventing will have been removed. It was a supplementation of the principal impediments to world preventing will have been removed. It was a supplementation of the principal impediments to world preventing will have been removed. negotiation, then it also follows that one of the principal impedinegotiation, then it also follows that one of the principal impediments to world prosperity will have been removed. In view of these extremely important factors, therefore, I do not consider it indelicate to discuss these treaties, all the while bearing in mind the tremendous difficulties of a psychological character that are involved, and also keeping constantly in the foreground the fact that the unmaking or revision of these treaties is principally the concern of Europe and not of America.

If we are to comprehend why these treaties destroyed the peace and prosperity of Europe however we must not content ourselves.

and prosperity of Europe, however, we must not content ourselves with a merely superficial examination of them. We must get down to the fundamentals. We must go back, as need be, to the roots of the war itself.

It is contended that the treaties are immoral; that they rest upon untenable ethnic premises; and that they have wreaked economic havoc not merely in Europe but throughout the world. I shall discuss these under their separate headings.

The contention that the treaties are unmoral is based upon the challenges that have been hurled against the war-responsibility clause of the treaties. I take this up first, because there has been so much agitation about the war-guilt phase, and because even the most casual perusal of the history of modern times, together with the most ordinary exercise of common sense, ought, in my opinion, to convince any fair-minded person that the Central Empires and their allies, Bulgaria and the Ottoman Empire, were not uniquely guilty of provoking the war. Yet it is a question to be faced.

The very profound part that the war-guilt clause has played in the history of the world is strikingly revealed in the following quotations from a highly informative book, World Politics in Modern Civilization, by Prof. Harry Elmer Barnes, an American historian of considerable repute. He writes (p. 507):

"And it will not avail anything to assert that the treaties are not bound up in the war-guilt thesis of the Entente. As Lloyd George frankly admitted at the London Conference in 1921: For the Allies, German responsibility for the war is fundamental. If the Allies, German responsibility for the war is fundamental. If it is the basis upon which the structure of the treaty has been erected, and if that acknowledgment is repudiated or abandoned,

"On December 20, 1920, Poincare wrote in the Paris Temps: 'In fact, if it was not the Central Powers that brought on the war, why should they be condemned to pay for it? If there is divided responsibility, then, in justice, there should be a division of the costs

Lloyd George evidently has not changed his mind, for in a very remarkable treatise that has just come across the seas, he says:

"As to the justice of exacting reparation from Germany for the damage caused to other countries by the war, there can be no doubt once you assume that the German Nation was primarily responsible for the war." (Lloyd George, The Truth About Reparations and War Debts, p. 7.)

To indicate that a considerable shadow of doubt has now been cast of the war-guilt clause, I now quote the opinion of another eminent American historian, Prof. Charles Austin Beard, author of two highly fascinating volumes called "The Rise of American Civilization." His view may be accepted as fairly typical of a number of distinguished historians:

"Finally there are the defenders of grace, remission, absolution,

Finally there are the defenders of grace, remission, absolution, "Finally there are the defenders of grace, remission, absolution, and oblivion at home and abroad, who rest their case on the mythology of the red, green, orange, yellow, and other rainbow books issued by the Entente belligerents, containing, as we know now, falsified and garbled dispatches for the purpose of gulling gudgeons. According to this argument, " * * the Germans were solely responsible for starting the war and the Entente Allies were really defending the United States from the beginning. Mr. Wilson's government, instead of springing heroically to the defense of American rights in August 1914, delayed nearly 3 years, causing great damage, suffering, and distress to the defendants in the debt case; and therefore, Q.E.D., any part of the bill paid by the United States would fall far short of justice. In other words, runs this plea, the debts should be canceled in full and with a contrite heart. plea, heart heart.

"If the major premise of this contention be granted, the conclusion is inexorable; but the major premise is now shot so full of holes by horny-handed historical scholarship that it looks more like a scarecrow than a Greek statue. Can anyone read the writings of Gooch, Fay, Fabre-Luce, and a host of American, French, and English scholars, to say nothing of Mr. Barnes' powerful book (in spite of its argumentative tone) and then stand up in court and declare on oath that the Entente war mythology deserves the credence of intelligent men and women?

"The advocate of debt cancelation, foreign and domestic, might as well learn once and for all that the American people are not all boobs in matters of European history; that in magazines, newspapers, scholastic journals, classrooms, shops, railway trains, and fields the question of war responsibility is being debated with understanding and with zeal; that while some lean one way and some another, no one can revive the stinking corpse of war propaganda; that nobody who has read the new diplomatic materials believes that England, France, and Russia were innocent in the aganda; that nobody who has read the new diplomatic materials believes that England, France, and Russia were innocent in the long preparations that led up to this war or in the negotiations that precipitated it; that the names of the parties who grabbed the spoils at the council table at Versailles are well known; that to ask the United States to pay one penny more on the score of sacrificial obligation is nothing short of laughable." (Barnes, World Politics in Modern Civilization, pp. 561–562, quoting Professor Beard in the American Mercury of July 1927.)

The distinction that President Wilson drew between our actual motives in entering the war, and the idealistic picture that he later drew to inflame the ardor of our heroic soldiers, is an important one, and I have nowhere seen it set forth more lucidly than by the distinguished historian, Prof. Herbert Adams Gibbons, formerly of Princeton. To quote him:

formerly of Princeton. To quote him:

"The great majority of Americans regarded the European war as an interesting and dramatic spectacle in which their own country was not concerned. Hence they found no difficulty in following the President's advice that Americans remain neutral in thought as well as in action. Despite the tireless propaganda carried on by both groups of belligerents to win American support, public opinion in general accepted without question the declaration of President Wilson that he did not know the causes of the war and wished that someone would tell him. Those elements that took sides violently when war was first declared and that worked hard for 30 months to advance the cause of one or the other of the belligerent groups met with little succe

"But in time the Germans, who seemed to glory in violating the ordinary ethics of warfare on land and sea, aroused American indignation by the sinking of the Lusitania and other ships; and this bitterness was enhanced by the relation of German plots against American industries * * * planned and carried out on American soil. In addition to their monumental tactlessness, the Germans suffered, too, from three handicaps that gradually turned American public opinion against them.

"(1) Unlike Great Britain, Germany had not a single place on the American Continent where she exercised political sovereignty, and therefore her propaganda and espionage service was driven to violation of the neutrality of the United States and other nations.

"(2) Not controlling any cables or being able to use in communication with the New World means that were not under the surveillance of her enemies, Germany had to resort to discreditable practices to keep in touch with her agents.

"(3) Her inability either to contest the supremacy of the sea with the British or to import under neutral flags and through neutral countries made it impossible to purchase war supplies from the United States, and thus American finance and industry became more and more interested in the success of the Entente. Interests engender sympathies and customers are backed against noncustomers.

noncustomers. • • • "
"After 2 years of war, however, during which there was ample opportunity for the United States to become fully acquainted with the German methods of waging war on land and sea, and after we had suffered much at the hands of Germany, the sentiment for maintaining neutrality was still so strong that neither candidate at the Presidential election in the autumn of 1916 dared risk giving the impression that his program for the conduct of our foreign relations implied a departure from neutrality. President Wilson and Mr. Hughes were equally afraid to advocate preparedness, thinking that defeat at the polls was certain for any man whom the American people suspected of wanting to lead them into the war.

"In view of these facts, which tragically stand in the way "In view of these facts, which tragically stand in the way of the sentimentalists, it is difficult to accept at their face value the principal reasons set forth by President Wilson on April 2, 1917, and in his subsequent speeches, for the entry of the United States into the World War. The vindication of principles of peace and justice against selfish and autocratic power, the fight for democracy, rights of small nations, and universal domination of right by consent of free peoples were splendid ideals to set before a by consent of free peoples were spienfid ideas to set before a nation entering upon a costly struggle, and none questions the wisdom and propriety of voicing them. But the Entente powers had begun the war with the proclamation of those very principles almost 3 years earlier. Either these principles were not deemed by the American people sufficiently important to fight for, or the Nation and its leaders had as a whole been unaware that they were the issues at stake until the beginning of 1917. We can they were the issues at stake until the beginning of 1917. We cannot get away from this dilemma. It is important to admit it, and to state the bald fact of the case, that our intervention in the World War followed the great law of history, which is that peoples fight when they feel themselves menaced in their security and prosperity and not until then * * *.

If corroboration be needed, it may be found in the view of another authority:

"We did not actually get into the war to protect ourselves from imminent German invasion or to make the world safe for democracy but to protect our investment in allied bonds and to insure a longer period and more extensive development of the manufacturing of war materials." (Barnes, World Politics in Modern Civilization, p. 378.)

Of course, in connection with the foregoing it must be recollected that Mr. Gibbons was writing in 1922, when he did not have before him the multitude of new historical data that since have been made available to him, I assume, as they have been to Mr. Barnes and other eminent historians.

There is, indeed, a natural tendency to recoil from the whole restudy of war-time responsibility. The idea that we must "forget the war", therefore is a particularly dangerous one, because the war has not ended. The war is still being fought in an economic and political way in Europe. Nor can we blame the war upon the so-called "European system" of a balance of power. Professor Fay points out this fallacy:

points out this fallacy:

"Finally, with the growing realization that all the powers were more or less responsible, and with the increased attention which came to be given to the underlying causes of the war, more judiciously and historically minded persons were less inclined to accept the easy solution of explaining the war on the scapegoat or personal-devil thory—that is, the guilt of this or that individual. They fall back on the truer explanation that the war was caused by the system of international anarchy involved in alliances, armaments, and secret diplomacy. But, after all, the system was worked up by individuals; their personal acts built it up and caused it to explode in 1914. In the discussion of the future it will be the work of the historian to explain the political, economic, and psychological motives which caused these individuals to act as they did. He will also cease to talk about 'war guilt' since no person in authority was guilty of deliberately working to bring about a general European war. But he will still continue to discuss the 'responsibility' which each statesman must bear for acts which ultimately contributed to the catastrophe." (Fay, Origins of the World War, vol. I, pp. 2-3.) of the World War, vol. I, pp. 2-3.)

To quote further from this authority:

"Nevertheless a European war broke out. Why? Because in each country political and military leaders did certain things which led to mobilizations and declarations of war, or failed to do certain things which might have prevented them. In this sense all the Furncean countries in a greater and declarations. certain things which might have prevented them. In this sense all the European countries in a greater or less degree were responsible. One must abandon the dictum of the Versailles Treaty that Germany and her allies were solely responsible. It was a dictum exacted by victors from vanquished under the influence of blindness, ignorance, hatred, and the propagandist misconceptions to which war had given rise. It was based on evidence which was incomplete and not always sound. It is generally recognized by the best historical scholars to be no longer tenable or defensible. They are agreed that the responsibility for the war is a divided. They are agreed that the responsibility for the war is a divided responsibility. But they still disagree very much as to the relative part of this responsibility that falls on each country and on each individual political or military leader." (Fay, Origins of the World War, vol. II, pp. 548-549.)

To my mind this conclusion by the eminent historian would seem to comport with the composite of the best informed opinion in this country at this time. We are not convinced that the central empires were wholly innocent of responsibility for the war: now tral empires were wholly innocent of responsibility for the war; nor are we convinced that they were solely guilty. Enough has been shown to convince many of us that the Treaties of Versailles were immoral treaties, because they were based upon an altogether un-reasonable assessment or appraisal of the war responsibility. Hence it is heartening to have such statesmen as Mr. MacDonald suggest that a negotiated peace supplant the one imposed by force of arms at Versailles. This evidently is the path which Europe must take toward peace, if Europe is to have any peace. But it is a path which I hope the American Nation will not again venture. upon by assuming any commitments in the readjustments that must be made, either at the point of the bayonet or over the conference table; because America, if she makes the peace, would be morally bound to attempt to sustain it. Without seeking to dogmatize, to me it is obvious that if Europe is to have any peace it must be made in Europe. Europe made the war; she should make the peace should make the peace.

If the Treaties of Versailles were an unjustified infringement of international morality, undertaken in the passion of war, that would seem to justify a thorough revision of these pacts. Yet there are many other practical grounds which suggest revision. That the treaties are based on an exaggerated nationalism few will deny and many hold that their ethelic promises are whelly follows. deny, and many hold that their ethnic premises are wholly fal-

There is sometimes a tremendously deep gulf between race and nationality. If that be so, then the labored effort to free the so-called "suppressed nationalities of Europe" was a step backward in the evolutionary processes of government. The creation of the 30 nations of Europe to replace the 18 that existed prior to the war was a reversion to medieval tribalism, rather than a response to any natural craving, except when stimulated by erroneous conceptions of the differences between the races. To say that the succession states have a right to a separate existence on the succession states have a right to a separate existence on ethnic grounds is insupportable from any scientific standpoint. But here, I fear, as in the case of the historians, psuedo scientists were dragooned into the cause of nationalism and succeeded in imposing their artificial deductions upon the world. Since we cannot assume that the statesmen of Europe are ignorant of the true biological background, we must assume that the creation of the succession states sureng from motives other than those of the succession states sprang from motives other than those of a purely scientific character.

It is most doubtful whether on biological grounds there is any justification whatever for the reconstruction of Europe into numerous small states. The possibility of a limited practical autonomy within a larger governmental framework, more suited to the economic times—an autonomy that would seem to satisfy any but overstimulated national yearnings—appears never to have been considered. That this thesis of the supposedly irreconcilable racial groups in Europe was very carefully disseminated on this continent seems plain, because eventually its apostles found a convert in President Wilson, who based his plea for the self-determination of small groups, however, more largely on grounds of historical and political expediency.

No great flight of the imagination is required to understand why such a subterfuge was resorted to by those powers bent upon the partition of the Germanic, Austro-Hungarian, and Ottoman Emperations of the Germanic, Austro-Hungarian, and Ottoman Emperations of the Germanic Austro-Hungarian, and Ottoman Emperations of the Company of the partition of the Germanic, Austro-Idingarian, and Ottoman Empires. If these empires were to be partitioned and expunged from the economic map, something more than the ordinary excuse had to be offered. In the case of Alsace-Lorraine no such an ethnic philosophy could reasonably be made to apply; so the divorcement of that appanage of the Germanic Empire was conveniently made of that appanage of the Germanic Empire was conveniently made a matter of restitution. In the other cases, however, much was made of the rights of small nations, and the plea was advanced that these peoples were so different in their racial strains that naught would do but that each be given a definite area, a flag, an army, a tariff, and if possible a democratic form of government. Much was made of the agglomeration of races of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, with little thought for the fact that these peoples, insofar as they were within the empire, had dwelt together with a fair degree of amiability for nearly a century, and that from an economic standpoint their condition was infinitely superior to what it is today.

superior to what it is today.

While the war theoretically was against militarism in all its forms, no thought seems to have been given at the time to the fact that each of these new-born states would find the individual burden of armament far heavier than was the case prior to the

Having touched upon the moral obloquy and the ethnic follies of Versailles, and having seen that they rest on the most shadowy historical and scientific bases, one would expect that at least some economic justification existed. But here again we find blunders of a magnitude that transcends these considerations, for the economic miscalculations of Versailles have wreaked a world-wide catastrophe. The economic disintegration of middle Europe was effected in complete defiance of geographic considerations.

Let us examine the economic phases through the eyes of two distinguished authorities:

"The decade preceding the World War witnessed a marked in-dustrial trend in Austria-Hungary in response to the rapid growth of population whose increase neither emigration nor agriculture was able to accommodate. This expansion in manufacturing was or population whose increase neither emigration nor agriculture was able to accommodate. This expansion in manufacturing was greatly facilitated by the large variety of raw materials, fuel, and foodstuffs within the boundaries of the Empire. Thus in pre-war Austria alone there were large coal fields in Bohemia, Moravia, war Austria alone there were large coal fields in Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia; iron ores in Styria; timber in the Tyrol; oil in Galicia; and agricultural lands in Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia. Unhampered by tariff barriers these raw materials could be assembled according to the location of coal, labor, and markets. Under these conditions there had grown up two great industrial areas, one, by far the more important in the Bohemia-Moravia-Silesia region; a second in the vicinity of Vienna and the Styrian coal fields. It is estimated that of the national income of pre-war Austria two-thirds was from industry and trade and one-third from agriculture. Hungary, on the other hand, realized about 60 percent from agricultural activities. Vienna, through its advantages as the capital and the focus of great transportation routes, became the great financial and commercial center from which Austria's industries were directed.

the great financial and commercial center from which Austria's industries were directed.

"The break-up of the old empire left the Austrian Republic with only a remnant of the old industrial equipment and resources. Czechoslovakia possessed the main industrial region, the major part of the coal, and much of the better soil. Austria retained considerable timber and excellent iron ores, but very little fuel and no coking coal. With nine-tenths of her former markets gone, the industrial capacity of present Austria is far in excess of her domestic requirements unless she manufactures for export and can rely on imports of fuel, raw material, and foodstuffs.

"In some cases the various branches of large industrial enterprises were widely scattered, the various steps in manufacturing being completed in different regions. Thus the textile industry had much of its spinning done in Austria, the weaving in Bohemia, the finishing in Austria, and important markets in Poland and Hungary. Dismemberment places these various units in different countries whose intense nationalistic efforts and hostility toward the old domination of Vienna have made their integration and cooperation extremely difficult. Austria has facilities for producing a surplus of manufactures of wood, electricity, paper, and steel.

paper, and steel.

"Of the industries the metallurgical occupy first place, based largely upon the manufacture of excellent steel from the high-grade iron ore which though only moderately rich in iron—40 pergrade iron ore which though only moderately rich in Iron—40 percent—is practically free of sulphur and phosphorus. The chief handicap is * * * the lack of domestic coking coal so that most of the fuel must be imported. Of some 10,000,000 tons required, only 3,000,000 are produced at home, and of this latter amount five-sixths are lignite. Imports are mainly from the upper Silesia and Teschen regions, and the high cost of such fuel naturally retards progress in industry, especially iron and steel. A move full of significance for the reestablishment of integrated industries in the succession states is to be seen in the purchase by the chief

"Textiles ranked next to the metal industries in importance and,

"Textiles ranked next to the metal industries in importance and, like them, suffered much by the political changes resulting from the war. Much of the spinning required imported raw materials, hence the mills tended to locate along the great transportation routes found in lower Austria (40 percent) and Vorariberg (30 percent); the weaving, on the other hand, sought cheap labor and fuel and found both in present Czechoslovakia. Finishing plants centered again in the Vienna district close to the most important local market. Thus present-day Austria inherited 30 percent of the looms of the old monarchy, while similar conditions character-ized the worsted and silk industries. As a result there was twice as much spinning as the weavers could use. It would seem logical to export yarn to Czechoslovakia, return it for finishing, dyeing, printing, etc., then export it to Galicia and Hungary, but high

"Geography and politics combined to make Vienna one of Europe's leading centers of art and culture, of commerce and finance. Its position at the crossing of great trade routes is its chief asset; all the more important because it is situated in a part of the all the more important because it is situated in a part of the Continent where topography has rigidly restricted movement to well-defined paths. The city lies in a small plain, the smallest of the three Danube basins, at the place where that great waterway separated the Alps from the Bohmer Wald. Here converge routes leading (1) up the Danube to Bavaria, thence by canal to the Main and Rhine or by the Inn over the Brenner to the Place of path Italy. (2) down the Danube to the Place of the Place plains of north Italy; (2) down the Danube to the Black and Aegean Seas; (3) up the March to the Oder and via the Moravian Gate to the North German Plain and the Baltic; and (4) to the southwest over the Semmering Pass to Trieste. This superb focal position made it the natural center from which the commerce, banking, and industry of much of southeast and central Europe was directed. With the great iron-ore deposits nearby and fuel and raw materials available within the old monarchy, the Vienna district became an important industrial section, second only to Bohemia in the old empire.

"In addition to these natural advantages, Vienna was the capital of an empire of 30,000,000 people, embracing 116,000 square miles. As such it became the home of thousands of soldiers, government officials, and tradesmen, as well as the seat of a great array of institutions.

"The break-up of the old monarchy suddenly reduced the area of the nation from a population of 30,000,000 to 6,500,000. A mere remnant, mostly mountainous, was left with a great city having the administrative and business machinery designed for the direction of the political and economic life of a large empire, and the readjustments have brought tragic consequences

"Eastward from Austria the ranges of the Alpine system sepa-rate; the southern limestone belt branches southeastward along the Adriatic to join the Rhodope Massive and the Balkans, in a great arc to meet the Iron Gate, completing an almost closed mountainous rim. The great basin thus encircled has been a region of subsidence and, within recent geologic times, has been covered by an inland sea. * * * Across this wide, flat, featureless plain winds the great Danube and its major tributaries, the Tisza, Sava, and Drava. * * * Favorable conditions of climate, soil, and topography have combined to make this a great agricultural region, second only to Russia as the chief granary of Europe. * * * Hungary occupies the heart of the middle Danubian plain. Settled over 1,000 years ago by the Magyars, nomadic horsemen from the Asiatic steppes, the earliest use of the land was as pasture for great herds of cattle, horses, and sheep. In course of time the better sections were cultivated, and to the pastoral interests were left only those parts of the plain too dry Adriatic to join the Rhodope Massive and the Balkans, In course of time the better sections were cultivated, and to the pastoral interests were left only those parts of the plain too dry or too rough for cropping, conditions found particularly about the mountainous margins. Present Hungary is almost wholly agricultural, practically the entire land surface being productive. Three-fifths of the total area is arable, next to Denmark, the largest proportion of any country in Europe. Cereals occupy over one-half the cultivated land, wheat being considerably more important then corn. than corn

"After the World War Hungary faced a disrupted industrial organization which has not yet been readjusted. Of her former territory and population she lost somewhat over two-thirds. From the standpoint of industry she still produces three-fourths of her former output of coal, sufficient for her nonindustrial needs, but only one-fifth of her former output of iron ore, while five-sixths of her timber industries, including woodworking and papermaking, have been lost. making, have been lost. * making, have been lost. * *

"Present problems have their origin mainly in the country's history—particularly in the past relations of the races. Old Hungary contained non-Magyar peoples, subject races whose economic, social, and political conditions were made all but intolerable by Magyar oppression. With the defeat of the Central Powers, of which group Hungary was a member, that country's borderlands, largely inhabitated by non-Magyars, were detached and added to her neighbors on three sides. Considerable numbers of Magyars inhabited the lands to the east; in fact, in order to give strategic advantages to Czechoslovakia, Rumania, and Yugoslavia, there were included within those regions some border zones predominantly Magyar. Such boundaries, largely arbitrary, worked havoc with transportation lines and the cooperation of industrial, mining, and agricultural sections, so that economic disorganization approached a state of chaos. To the tragic consequences of the World War was added a brief but disastrous communistic regime, an invasion by Rumania, and a short civil war. Of all the defeated nations the Hungarians feel the most bitter, openly declaring that when an opportunity comes they will force a revision claring that when an opportunity comes they will force a revision of the peace terms. This hostile feeling, in view of the unbalanced condition of present resources and the necessity of foreign trade, makes commercial intercourse and economic recovery slow."

pp. 286, 287, 288. 289, 354, 355, 356, 358, 359.)
From the foregoing, Mr. President, it would seem that had the mapmakers of Versailles deliberately chosen to commit economic hari-kari they could not have chosen a better method than this arbitrary dismemberment of the old Austro-Hungarian dual monarchy. Its trade ways fixed by immutable geological factors, its commerce long integrated over an area in which the freest internal trade prevailed—the one partner predominantly industrial and the other predominantly agricultural—Austria-Hungary presented a other precommantly agricultural—Austria-Hungary presented a practical, if not an ideal, example of the economic advantages of free trade within a specific federalized zone.

But the havoc wrought within the diminished areas of post-war Austria and Hungary was not all the havov. The succession States that fringed the border suffered as much, if not more, from the arbitrary dislocation of the business, commerce, and banking that formerly radiated along natural economic channels from Vienna and Budapest, superbly stationed at focal points along the great Danubian waterway. Punitive tariffs impede the flow of trade at every frontier. The fragments of the Austro-Hungarian economic machine were parceled out to seven nation, where one sufficed before. All of Europe suffered in consequence.

Was it any wonder, then, that the storm signal of the total collapse of European economy came with the eruption at Vienna, when the great Credit-Anstalt Bank failed in 1931? Tremors from this eruption shook the whole world. The immediate clamor for a Pan European moratorium on governmental finance was proof enough that the structure of Versailles had given way at its weakest point. It was proof that the commercial excision of Austria and Hungary from the fraternity of nations had produced an appalling penalty. The hodge-podge map of Versailles recoiled upon its makers. They could make maps, but they could not move mountains.

Mr. President, there is abundant proof of the economic unwis-

dom of the treaties

dom of the treaties.

Mr. President, on June 28, 1914, if someone had asked what great holiday it was, I should have been compelled to answer that I did not know. In Serbia, however, it was a great holiday, for it was the five hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Kossovo. After being told that much, the average American still would have been compelled, in most cases, to ask, "Well, what was the Battle of Kossovo?" If he had been curious enough to look it up, he would have found that on this particular day, back in the year 1389, the Serbs, Albanians, and Croats fought a terrible battle with the Turks, were crushed and enslaved, and remained under the Turkish yoke for more than 400 years.

On the five hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of this battle occurred the assassination at Sarajevo, the pistol shot that signalized the World War, resulting in the slaughter of 8,538,315 human beings.

Most remote from the affairs of America seemed anything relating either to the Battle of Kossovo or the assassination at Sarajevo when the war broke out. Even President Wilson, a scholar, levo when the war broke out. Even President Wilson, a schoar, confessed that he did not know what caused it. But in Europe the meaning of Sarajevo was plain even to the man in the street; the black cloud of war loomed at once over the whole of Europe; no literate European could mistake the meaning of Sarajevo.

It was not until President Wilson had sounded the alarm 2 years and 6 months after the World War began that the average American was ready to fight, and even then his anger was directed at the Germans because they had affronted our honor, killed our citizens, and sunk our ships. I venture the opinion that the ensuing utilization of the American press for the war-time propa-ensuing utilization of the American press for the war-time propaganda has had a profound effect in prolonging the depression. Since the war ended the average American has sensed that something very closely akin to a deception was perpetrated on him. The whole case for the looting of the Germanic, Austro-Hungarian, and Ottoman Empires, as we have seen, rests on the socialed "war-guilt clause", article 231 of the Treaty of Versailles. Lloyd George admits it. Poincare admits it. Therefore, if it should be shown that the Germanic empires were not wholly responsible for the World War, the whole case of the Allies hoth should be shown that the Germanic empires were not wholly responsible for the World War, the whole case of the Allies, both for cancelation and for reparations, collapses.

After reading a number of the most recent treatises on these subjects I confess I find it impossible to draw any other conclusion but that America was urged into the war by our war profiteers and that the story that the Germanic empires deliberately premeditated and brought on the war is no longer credible.

I shall here not make any attempt to interpose my own personal view of the war responsibility, but content myself with sonal view of the war responsibility, but content myself with citing the final conclusions reached in 1928 by that distinguished American historian Prof. Sidney Bradshaw Fay, formerly of Smith College, now of Harvard University. Professor Fay, so far as I know, has no bias whatever in favor either of the Germanic empires or toward the Ottoman empires. When the war ended, he did not hastily plunge in to express an opinion or draw a conclusion. I know that he enjoys the respect and even admiration of distinguished historians on both sides of the water, and from of distinguished historians on both sides of the water, and from the tone of his masterful work that he writes dispassionately and in the detached manner of the scholar who is resolved to get at the truth, no matter whom it hurts. And it is apparent that he has had access to all, or nearly all, of the documentary evidence that came to light as a result of the revolutions in Russia, Austria, and Germany. So it may be said that his is a conclusion that is entitled to respect by all fair-minded persons everywhere. Before proceeding to some of the details, let me here quote from Professor Fay's outspoken verdict:

"But the fact that a formal revision (of the war-guilt clause of the Treaty of Versailles) probably cannot take place until public opinion has been further enlightened as to the actual facts now available does not lessen one whit my belief that it ought to be revised on historical, political, and moral grounds." (Barnes, World Politics in Modern Civilization, p. 500, quoting Professor Fay in the New York Times of Dec. 7, 1928.)

Again Professor Fay writes:
"While it is true that Germany, no less than all the other great powers, did some things which contributed to produce a situation which ultimately resulted in the World War, it is altogether false to say that she deliberately plotted to bring it about or was solely responsible for it. On the contrary, she worked more effectively than any other great power, except England, to avert it, not only in the last days of July 1914 but also in the years immediately preceding." (Barnes, World Politics in Modern Civilization, quoting Professor Fay, p. 315.)

I am conscious, of course, of the dangers and of the responsibility of detaching quotations such as these from their context; but I can assure my audience that the utterances just quoted are fully sustained and documented by the researches of Professor Fay, I can only wish that time would permit us to travel together step by step through the whole maze of intrigue which his remarkable book lays bare from the days when the development of steam power began to provoke bitter commercial rivalries until the transformation of society by this agency set the stage for the World

War

War.

Of course, it is not enough to rest the case for revision of the war-responsibility clause on the researches of a single historian, however eminent and impartial he may be. But, as Professor Barnes points out, Professor Fay is by no means alone in arriving at this conclusion; and enumerated with him as belonging to the prorevisionist school of thought are such distinguished American historians as Charles Austin Beard, whose opinion we have obhistorians as Charles Austin Beard, whose opinion we have observed; Ferdinand Schevill and Quincy Wright, of the University of Chicago; William E. Lingelbach, of the University of Pennsylvania; Carl Becker and Preserved Smith, of Cornell University; Joseph Ward Swain and A. H. Lybyer, of the University of Missouri; Robert J. Kerner, of the University of California; Joseph V. Fuller, formerly of the University of Wisconsin; and Prof. W. L. Langer, who is cited as the foremost American authority on pre-war Russian diplomacy.

The American are not alone however in suggesting a redispre-war Russian diplomacy.

The Americans are not alone, however, in suggesting a redistribution of the war responsibility. Among the historians enumerated by Professor Barnes as "believing the major guilt attaches to the Entente, but that the Central Powers must bear some responsibility" are, besides Professor Fay, R. J. Kerner, J. F. Scott, P. T. Moon, J. S. Ewart, Hermann Lutz, G. Lowes Dickinson, G. P. Gooch, Corrado Barbagallo, Augusto Torre, Victor Marweritta gueritte.

Enumerated in another group which Professor Barnes sees as Enumerated in another group which Professor Barnes sees as holding that the "primary responsibility for the war is to be found in the premature general mobilization of the Russian Army" are Max Montgelas, Friedrich Stieve, Gunther Frantz, Erich Brandenburg, Paul Herre, Alfred von Wegerer, Hermann All, N. Japikse, Georges Demartial, Mathias Morhardt, Gustav Dupin, Alfred Fabre-Luce, F. Gouttenoire de Toury, Alberto Lumbroso, M. N. Pokrovski, E. A. Adamov, E. D. Morel, Raymond Beazley, M. Edith Durham, Irene Cooper Willis, Ferdinand Schevill, W. E. Lingelbach, W. L. Langer, A. H. Lybyer, Joseph Ward Swain. Lingelbach, W. L. Langer, A. H. Lybyer, Joseph Ward Swain, Frederick Bausman.

Mr. President, I submit that here is a respectable body of opinion, which, differing with preconceived notions of the war responsibility, must now be reckoned with. I do not deny that there are a considerable number of historians who cling to the original thesis of a war-mad Germany running amuck. Yet we cannot fall to be impressed when Professor Barnes, toward the close of his extraordinary work, tells us:

"The progress of scholarly research into the causes of the

"The progress of scholarly research into the causes of the World War has now demonstrated for all time the fallacy of article 231 of the Treaty of Versailles to the effect that the Central Powers were solely responsible for the outbreak of the war. Therefore the United States should suggest revision of such parts of the Treaties of Versailles, St. Germain, Trianon, and Neuilly as were based upon the assumption of the unique guilt of the Central Powers. We must also request abandonment of all treaty settlements which conflict directly with those principles of democracy of the rights of small nations which were alleged by the Entente to be the very cornerstone of their aims in the late world struggle. Particularly is it necessary to recognize the complete absence of any justification whatever for any reparations from the Central Powers beyond their just mutual participation in restoring areas devastated by actual warfare. * * Particularly ridiculous is the assertion of cancelationist propagandists that we owe the Entente states a deep debt of gratitude for protecting us from German invasion and enslavement. It also needs to be pointed out that the Entente countries owe the United States large sums of money as damages due to Entente violations of our commercial of money as damages due to Entente violations of our commercial rights as neutrals before April 1917—a type of indebtedness which has not thus far been brought up for active consideration. From the standpoint of strict international morality and justice, then, not a single, sensible argument can be adduced for the cancelation not a single, sensible argument can be adduced for the cancelation of these debts (to America) (Barnes, World Politics in Modern Civilization, pp. 602-603).

We are told, however, that the dislocation and disintegration of the industry of the Austro-Hungarian and Germanic Empires was a necessary, if not a wise, concomitant of the peace pacts. The stubborn fact remains, however, that a great deal of the business formerly done with at least a fair degree of efficiency within the borders of these countries, must now be performed by new-born political entities, that are small in area, and totally unversed in and unused to the responsibilities of self-government.

There were two great domestic events in America which unmistakably apprised us that the pacts of Versailles had proved an economic blunder, dangerous to the peace and prosperity of the whole world. One warning came when our former allies and companions in arms presented us with a neat bill for $11,000,000,000 which we were asked to wipe off the slate by the process of cancelation. The second warning came, and the two are inseparately linked, with the shock of the stock-market debacle in 1929. There is little doubt that the international financiers of this and other nations probably knew, far in advance of the American public, of the approaching cataclysm, the successive reverberations of which have prostrated the world. Their flight from the one catastrophe provoked the other. A wave of fear swept the nations. It seemed that the very thing we call civilization was in danger of obliteration.

As Senator William E. Borah, in his remarkable address of May 5, 1932, said:

5, 1932, said:

5, 1932, said:

"Mr. President, it seems clear to me, when all the facts are considered, that the fright which still obtains was engendered by this maladjustment of the gold supply. But the world was in a condition to be easily frightened. Still crippled from the fearful losses incurred by the war; laboring under the peace treaties, which started an economic war; tormented by reparations; and bled white for additional armaments, it was natural that uneasiness should for additional armaments, it was natural that uneasiness should develop into a deep-seated fear the moment gold supplies began to fall in other parts of the world. The fall of prices in the economic world is like the glacier on the side of the mountain, once started, it sweeps all before it."

In the light of these events, it is inconceivable that the experts at Versailles, except in the madness of war, ever could have sanctioned the strait-jacket in which they fettered the brawn and eight of all Events.

sinew of all Europe.

sinew of all Europe.

These international financiers—and it is not my purpose here merely to criticize these powerful gentlemen—in their precipitate retreat from the inevitable consequences of the Versalles pacts have performed a valuable service. They have shown that the treatles are unworkable, and caused us to examine them anew, and for that we are grateful. Like any of the rest of us they undertook to protect themselves from the onrushing avalanche of financial disaster. The less informed followed suit, and those who possessed no information at all were hopelessly and helplessly left to deal with the financial wreck that ensued.

When high and mighty financiers such as these flee to cover.

when high and mighty financiers such as these flee to cover, inundating the marts with their choicest securities, rocking the stock markets as in an earthquake, and sending tremors along every hidden fault of the commercial world, we of a lesser status and importance in the affairs of mankind well may take heed and wisely entertain the premonition that something is radically

The extent to which our national economy had become enmeshed with that of Europe is strikingly revealed when we reflect that, under a Democratic administration, American governmental money under a Democratic administration, American governmental money and credit were poured out to foreign nations to the extent of $22,000,000,000.000. On top of this our international financiers negotiated and privately placed among American investors an additional debt estimated at $15,000,000,000. Thus, not even considering what we ourselves spent in prosecuting the war, our public and private stake in foreign lands amounted to $37,000,000,000. Although the intergovernmental debts have been scaled down an average of 50 percent through American generosity, the total amount still owing us can be conservatively placed at $26,000,000,000, a tremendous weight of public and private debt that had an important and distinct bearing on the crisis.

Overshadowing the whole and awaiting an inexorable reckoning at no distant day was the national debt to the 4,000,000 American veterans and their dependents, which, noted economists predict, eventually will bring the American cost in the war to the grand total of $100,000,000,000.

Need I picture the desolation that overspread this country like a plague—in the wake of that black Friday in 1929, when occurred the great stock-market crash that, overnight, wiped out billions of dollars in paper profits? You saw a legion of something like 10,000,000 persons thrown out of work, as the contagion of despair gripped thousands of our factories, causing them to bank their fires, and snuffing out the plumes of smoke that hitherto had billowed up into the skies of a prosperous and contented Nation. Nation.

You saw 26 foreign nations, one after the other, abandon the You saw 26 foreign nations, one after the other, abandon the gold standard as conditions of misery and deprivation were aggravated by drought and famine. You saw banks falling and depositors losing their life's savings. You read of farmers burning their crops because they could not sell them; you knew of men driven to crime for the sake of a crust of bread; you heard of women and children in rags begging for clothes and shelter from the wintry blizzard; you remember the epidemic of suicides of despairing men. The wrong, as we now clearly see, was the monstrous economic crime perpetrated in the halls of Versailles.

For the last 14 years learned historians, skilled expositors in the legends of the nations, have pored long and tirelessly over the archives of the chancellories of Europe. They have brought to light some startling facts, circumstances of a kind and character that in bygone wars sometimes have been kept hidden for half a century. I do not refer merely to the destruction of the war-time myths, to the propaganda and atrocity fabrications on which we were so liberally fed to bring us to the fighting edge, and which long since have been dismissed as full of guile and error.

I do not refer to the voluminous data which these learned scholars, seemingly without prejudice or bias, have accumulated and which, some of them say, completely disapproves the indictment upon which the Germanic powers were found guilty.

They demand revision of the Versailles treaties on the ground that the pacts effected a moral wrong. I have the conviction a revision is necessary on the ground that they perpetuated an economic tragedy that has brought us all, the victors and the vanquished, to disaster.

To these emingly without prejudice and historiess who now clemer for vanquished, to disaster.

To these eminent scholars and historians, who now clamor for a retrial of the convicted chief culprits and advise a redistribution of the war guilt, we are indebted, however, for the discovery of significant facts and matters of record that are beyond dispute.

When the autocratic government of the Romanoffs collapsed, the revolutionaries seized upon and made public for all the world to read the secret stipulations that bound their Czar and his vast empire to the All'es.

By a treaty of March 20, 1915, long before many of us ever dreamed that we should become enmeshed in the broils of Europe, was provided that Russia might annex Constantinople and thus achieve the warm water port for which she previously had fought three unsuccessful wars.

By a treaty of April 26 of that same year Italy was to receive the Trentino, the southern Tyrol, the area of Gorizia and Gradisca, Istria, northern Dalmatia, numerous islands off the Dalmatian coast, 12 islands off the coast of Asia Minor, a share in the then contemplated partition of Turkey, a slice of the war indemnity, and other compensations of territory in Africa.

By a treaty of March 11, 1917, a few weeks before we entered the war, France was to get Alsace-Lorraine.

In various other secret engagements and understandings it was agreed that Great Britain should gain a neutral sphere in Persia, a sphere of influence in Mesopotamian oil land, a free hand in Egypt, and that she would divide with France the colonies of Ger-Egypt, and that she would divide with France the colonies of Germany in Africa. Rumania was brought into the war with seizures of territories in Transylvania, Bukowina, and the Banat dangled before her eyes. To Japan went the promise of German interests in the Shantung Peninsula.

These secret treaties which were so carefully concealed from public view until the war was over—that this unsavory episode may be brought before the American people (in many cases for the first time), I give the following quotation from an authoritative historical summation:

the first time), I give the following quotation from an authoritative historical summation:

"While the British Liberals and President Wilson were expounding the noble and unselfish aims which they believed were being forwarded by the great sacrifices of blood and money from 1914 to 1918, the realistic statesmen who were actually guiding the destiny of Europe and the world took adequate precautions to insure that the fruits of victory would go beyond the realization of lofty ideals. In a series of secret treaties negotiated between 1915 and 1917 elaborate provisions were made for the readjustment of the map of Europe and the world. We have already briefly summarized the war plans of France and Russia between 1912 and 1914, envisaging the occupation of the Straits by Russia and the restoration of Alsace and Lorraine to France. These war aims were embodied in secret treaties to be put into effect in the event of an Entente triumph. England, who had opposed for a century the Russian domination over the Near East, naturally demanded compensations. Italy had to be bribed by extensive territorial awards to abandon her alliance with Austria and Germany and make war on her former allies. Likewise, the participation of Rumania and Japan in behalf of the Entente cause had to be purchased by extensive concessions of territory or special interests. As a result the following arrangements were embodied in the secret negotiations of the powers involved:

"Br. the treaty of Merch 20, 1915 it was provided that Pussion."

following arrangements were embodied in the secret negotiations of the powers involved:

"By the treaty of March 20, 1915, it was provided that Russia might annex Constantinople and the Straits, and that Isphan and Yezd were to be included in the sphere in which Russia was to have full liberty of action. By a treaty of March 11, 1917, the earlier understandings between Russia and France were brought together in the following summary of set provisions regarding the eastern frontier of France, while France recognized the complete freedom of Russia relative to the reconstitution of the western frontiers of Russia.

"1. Alsace-Lorraine to be restored to France.

"2. The frontiers (of this territory) to be extended so as to include at least the former Duchy of Lorraine and to be fixed according to the wishes of the French Government, the strategic requirements being taken into account, so that the whole iron ore district of Lorraine and the whole coal basin of the Saar shall be included in French territory.

"3. The remaining districts on the left bank of the Rhine which now form part of the German Beich are to be detached.

dependence upon Germany.

"4. The districts on the left bank of the Rhine which are not incorporated in the French territory, shall form an autono-mous and neutral state and shall remain occupied by French troops until the enemy countries shall have finally fulfilled all the conditions and guarantees to be enumerated in the treaty of peace.

"On April 26, 1915, there was concluded the notorious Treaty of London between the Entente and Italy. For this we can do no better than to quote Seymour Cocks' summary:

"'Italy to receive the Trentino, the Southern Tyrol, the county of Gorizia and Gradisca, Istria, northern Dalmatia, numerous islands off the Dalmatian coast, Valona (in Albania), 12 islands off the coast of Asia Minor, a prospective share in the partition of Asiatic Turkey, a prospective addition to her colonial territory in Africa, and a share in the war indemnity. The remainder of the Austro-Hungarian coast is to be divided between "Croatia", Ser-Austro-Hungarian coast is to be divided between "Croatia", Serbia, and Montenegro, thus cutting Austria-Hungary completely off from the sea. Certain stretches of the Adriatic coast are to be neutralized. There is also a suggestion to partition the greater part of Albania between Serbia, Montenegro, and Greece."

"The benevolence of Great Britain in permitting these understandings did not go unrewarded. It was agreed in the various secret treaties that the neutral sphere in Persia should be added to the British sphere of influence; that Great Britain might de-secret treaties that the neutral sphere in Persia should be added to the British sphere of influence; that Great Britain might develop a sphere of influence in Mesopotamia; that she should have a free hand in transforming Egypt into a protectorate; and that she should divide with France the German colonies in Africa; and that the German colonies in the Pacific Ocean south of the Equator should be added to the British Empire. Rumania was included to take her ill fated street with the France by the property of the property induced to take her ill-fated stand with the Entente by the promise of Transylvania up to the River Theiss, Bukowina up to the River Pruth, and the Banat. Japan was promised the German colonies in the Pacific north of the Equator and the German interests in the Shantung Peninsula.

"Had these arrangements been fully revealed to the Entente peoples there would have been great difficulty in maintaining a high morale among the Entente troops and their relatives at home. Fortunately for them, these treaties were kept a secret until the spring of 1918, while the German lust of territorial additions, as revealed by the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk, was immediately seized upon and played up by Entente propaganda. After the Bolshevik revolution in Russia in November 1917 the Bolsheviks discovered revolution in Russia in November 1917 the Bolsheviks discovered the secret treaties and gave them to the world with an introduction by Leon Trotsky condemning the secret diplomacy of capitalistic national states. They were published in the Manchester Guardian in England and by the New York Evening Post in the United States. So powerful and perfect, however, was Entente propaganda that the more influential papers of all the Entente States refused to publish or comment on the secret treaties, except in some cases to denounce them as palpable Communist forgeries. The peoples of the Entente countries, right up to November 1918. The peoples of the Entente countries, right up to November 1918, persisted in their belief that they were pouring out their resources in man power and finances for the promotion of international idealism and peace." (Barnes, World Politics in Modern tional idealism and peace." (Barnes, World Politics in Modern Civilization, pp. 408-409.) Mr. President, one might be tempted to pause here and indulge in recrimination, but, allowing these tremendous facts to speak for themselves, we can pass immediately to the narrative of the ultimate realization, almost in full, of these secret Entente war aims. Quoting further from the same authority:

"The principle of national self-determination and freedom of

The principle of national sent-determination and freedom to the oppressed nationalities was one of the leading slogans of the propaganda of the Entente during the World War, and it must be confessed that, almost alone of the Entente promises, this assur-ance was actually carried out with some thoroughness in the peace treaties. The treaties of Versailles, Trianon, and St. Ger-main gave free vent to the ambitions of nationalism and constituted a veritable orgy of nationalistic abandon. Never before in the history of Europe had so many new States been created as a result of the treaties following a European war. Indeed, the acquiescence in granting free rein to the nationalists was extreme and exaggerated and resulted in a complete overdoing of the whole matter. Europe in 1928 could boast of 30 national States instead of the 18 which existed in 1914, and the reallotment of nationals of the 18 which existed in 1914, and the realistment of nationals was so imperfectly done that quite as many areas of dissatisfaction and protest existed in 1928 as in 1914. Thirty national States of 1928 create almost twice as many potential causes of war as the 18 of 1914, and in some cases the national dissatisfaction is more pregnant with danger for European peace than such matters as Serbian ambitions in 1914.

Serbian ambitions in 1914.

"The post-war treaties restored Alsace-Lorraine to France, allowed Denmark to annex northern Schleswig and handed over Italia Irredenta to Italy. In the case of Italy the matter of restoration was overdone and Italy received the almost wholly German population of the South Tyrol. * *

"The Baltic states were granted independence from Russia and four independent national states were created: Finland, Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. Granting the difficulties which existed, the territorial and ethnic assignments in this Baltic settlement were reasonably just, with the exception that Lithuanian claims were sacrificed to the stronger and more aggressive Poland, a situwere sacrificed to the stronger and more aggressive Poland, a situ-were sacrificed to the stronger and more aggressive Poland, a situation rendered even more deplorable by the subsequent Polish seizure of the important Lithuanian city of Vilna.

"Poland was restored as a great national state, with an area about equal to that of the new German Republic. The Poles seemed to have learned little from the history of the past, and demanded a settlement designed to alienate their neighbors and constitute a standing impulse to destroy or reduce Poland as soon as diplomatic realinements permit. Not only did Poland encroach upon Russia and Lithuania, thus creating enmity on the north and east, but she also insisted upon German terrifory in Posen. upon Russia and Lithuania, thus creating enmity on the north and east, but she also insisted upon German territory in Posen, East Prussia, and Upper Silesia, which permanently prevent cordial relations with Germany. Beyond all else, with doubtful wisdom, she demanded the creation of a Polish corridor separating East Prussia from the remainder of Germany. This is an arrangement which Germany will never accept, and it will lead her to anticipate and accept alliances designed to weaken or defeat Poland. Only the present French military alliance gives any assurance of Polish safety and permanence.

"The Ruthenians were granted their independence and a separate Republic of the Ukraine was created. In 1922 the Ukraine rejoined Russia as one of the states federated in the United Soviet Socialist Republics. The Czechs and Slovaks were freed from Austro-Hungarian domination and a new national Republic of Czechoslovakia was established. This has been the most effi-ciently governed of the new states, but it contains many elements of serious internal weakness and potential discord. It is almost a miniature Austria-Hungary. The Slovaks are not unanimous in their enthusiasm for the union, and there is a great German minority in the west which may never cordially accept the Czech dominion. Finally many Magyars have been included within the boundaries of Slovakia.

boundaries of Slovakia * *.

"Rumania was enormously enlarged at the close of the war, even though her military record on the side of the Entente was inglorious, indeed, and her administrative record one of the worst in Europe, containing no justification for entrusting her with in Europe, containing no justification for entrusting her with even greater responsibilities. She was assigned Bessarabia, Transylvania, Bukowina, and part of the Banat, thus taking within her frontiers many Russians and even more Magyars. Neither the Russians nor the Magyars will permanently acquiesce in this settlement, and the gorged post-war Rumania constitutes one of the leading danger spots in Europe, though she is temporarily safe as one of the eastern outposts of the military hegemony of France.

"The Serbs realized their wildest dreams at the peace table. To the pre-war Serbia were added Bosnia, Herzegovina, Croatia, Montenegro, and smaller portions of other Balkan territory in the Banat and elsewhere. A great state, the Kingdom of Jugoslavia.

Montenegro, and smaller portons of other based of Jugoslavia, Banat and elsewhere. A great state, the Kingdom of Jugoslavia, was created. It faces little danger at the hands of Austria or Hungary, but it is confronted with a serious challenge from Italy Hungary, but it is confronted with a serious challenge from Italy in regard to Albania and the Dalmatian coast. Albania was granted independence and an Albanian Republic (since become a monarchy) was created in 1925, but anarchy has prevailed and Italy has a very definite ambition to control Albania as part of her program of making the Adriatic an Italian lake.

"Greece was also rewarded for her ultimate participation on the side of the Entente by territory taken chiefly from Bulgaria and Turkey. Greece developed great ambitions to become a strong imperialistic power in the Near East, but she overstepped herself and was driven from Asia Minor in disgrace, and the plan of creating a Magna Graecia collapsed.

creating a Magna Graecia collapsed.

"The Entente also planned to extinguish Turkey both in Europe and Asia if victorious in the World War, and had assigned Turkey in Europe to Russia and her Balkan allies. By the time the war had been won, however, Russia had dropped out of the conflict and the Tsarist regime had been terminated. The Entente powers were too jealous of each other to assign Turkey to any one of them, and they did not trust their Balkan allies to retain all the loot in this area. Greece attempted to take things into her hands, with the decisive defeat that we have just "Taking advantage of the lack of unity among the victors, the Turks, under the leadership of one of the ablest figures in the post-war world, Mustapha Kemal Pasha, tore up the Treaty of Sevres and established a modernized and highly nationalistic Turkish Republic in Asia Minor. They have retained a large part of their pre-war possessions, agreeing to demilitarize and de-nationalize the Straits. Near eastern nationalism has also been manifested in Arabia and Egypt, in both of which England has been compelled to make some formal concessions to nationalistic "Nationalism was also promoted in the Far East by the Japanese ambitions at the Peace Conference, by the Chinese resentment at the awards to Japan, by the independence aspirations of the peoples of India, and by the enthusiasm of Australasia over its part in winning the war and annexing parts of the German colonial empire * *. colonial empire *

"In conclusion, then, we may say that, while the principle of nationality was more respected than any other at the peace conference at the close of the World War, the territorial and ethnic readjustments were so ill-advised and unscientific that the new problems which have been created almost equal the older introduced them in intensity and justices in number, and often exceed them in intensity and potential danger to the peace of Europe. While the new readjustment of Europe actually reduced the subject nationalities from about 50,000,000 to less than 20,000,000, the present situation represents a more obviously flagrant violation of the principle of national self-determination than the pre-war situation, in which the Teutonic inhabitants of Alsace-Lorraine and the Slavic Poles were classed as repressed or subject nationalities.

"With respect to the overseas ambitions of the Entente, aspirations embodied in the secret treaties were substantially realized, though the details of the distribution of the German possessions were modified to no small degree. In Africa the German colonies were divided between France and the British Empire. The majority of Togoland and Kameroon were given to France and the remainder to Great Britain. German Southwest Africa was awarded to Great Britain with the exception of a small Africa was awarded to Great Britain with the exception of a small but rich portion, Ruanda-Urundi, which was given to Belgium. Great Britain temporarily reduced Egypt to a protectorate. Turkey in Asia was partitioned and most old German interests in the Near East were absorbed by France and Great Britain. The latter took over Mesopotamia, which is organized under the mandate of Iraq. France took over Syria as a mandate. Palestine became a British mandate. The British took over the virtual domination of Persia upon the withdrawal of Russia from her sphere of interest. The German interests in the Shantung Peninsula were awarded to Japan, although she agreed at the Washington Conference of 1921-22 to return them to China, which she later did. The German possessions in the Pacific Ocean were divided between Japan man possessions in the Pacific Ocean were divided between Japan and the British Empire. The German islands in the Pacific north of the Equator were handed over to Japan; those remaining were divided between Australia, New Zealand, and Great Britain. There were no German possessions in the New World, but the United States followed the European confiscation of German property and patents, a dangerous precedent for another war in which we may be the losers.

"In short the German Empire overseas disappeared as a result of the World War, and France and England gained elsewhere, notably at the expense of Turkey and Egypt. * * * One of the clauses of the secret treaties had provided for 'the destruction of the economic power of Germany. The Treaty of Versailles represented a robust effort to execute this ambition. The most serious blow to Germany in a long-time sense was her deprivation of sources of coal and iron ore. The rich coal mines Versailles represented a robust effort to execute this ambition. The most serious blow to Germany in a long-time sense was her deprivation of sources of coal and iron ore. The rich coal mines in the Saar Valley were given to France pending the results of a plebiscite in 1935. If the inhabitants at this time vote to return to Germany, then the latter must purchase the coal mines from France. Germany was further deprived of most of her coal supply in Upper Silesia, from which she derived a considerable portion of her hard coal. These losses meant about 35 percent of her entire coal reserves. This was not all; from this reduced reserve she was required to make enormous free deliveries of coal to her victorious enemies. She was ordered to deliver 20,000,000 tons annually to France for 5 years, and 8,000,000 tons annually for the next 5 years. Further, as part of the reparations system, she was directed to deliver 25,000,000 tons annually to other Entente states. Along with these great losses and depletions of her coal supply Germany lost three-fourths of her iron ore through the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France. Germany was also ordered, at a time when her own civilians were dying of starvation, to deliver to France great quantities of livestock and agricultural products. Germany was commanded to surrender her merchant marine to the Entente and to build 200,000 tons of shipping annually for the Entente. France took over the best rolling stock from the German railroads. German trade was further penalized by tariff and administrative arrangements. German products were excluded from Entente countries, while Germany was compelled to put the Entente nations in the status of 'most favored nations' under the German tariff regulations. Germany was thus denied access to Entente markets for 5 years and exposed to Entente 'dumping' during the same period. German many was thus denied access to Entente markets for 5 years and exposed to Entente 'dumping' during the same period. German commerce was further handicapped by the fact that her main commercial rivers were placed under administrative commissions manned chiefly by non-German members.

serious of all as an immediate burden were the repara most serious of the treaty. Germany was compelled to indemnify the Entente for all the so-called 'civilian damages' to the Entente during the World War. In this category of damages to civilians were placed the potential pensions to Entente soldiers and their relatives, an enormous increase in the total reparations bill. * * *

"No exact statement of reparations account was formulated at the time, though one prominent British member of the commission put the figure at $125,000,000,000. The final determination was not reached until May 1921 when the Entente set the amount at $33,000,000,000. In 1922 Germany was forced to default on reparations payments. The Dawes plan worked out in the spring of 1924 did not set any final sum for the total reparations payments but specified the nature and the amount of the annual payments to be made. * * payments to be made. * * *
"An international commission to fix the total amount of reparations payments drew up its plan in the spring of 1929. * * * * "The most striking single achievement of the Young plan was finally to settle the total amount which Germany will be required to pay. It stipulated that for 37 years Germany will pay annuities averaging 2,050,000,000 gold marks. For the next 21 years she will be required to pay annuities averaging 1,700,000,000 gold marks, and for the last and final year the payment will be 900,000,000 gold marks.

"An important administrative change in supervising reparations payments was also embodied in the Young plan. The administra-tion of reparations is to be removed from the reparations commis-sion and lodged in an international bank with a capital of $700,-000,000. * * * The Young plan also involved a full recognition of the fact that reparations and war debts are inseparably intertwined in European public finance." The foregoing in a summarized way depicts the looting of the

The foregoing in a summarized way depicts the looting of the German, Austro-Hungarian, and Ottoman empires. However, the mere enumeration of the geographical names of the various alienated lands by no means conveys the full picture of the colossal pillage distributed at Versailles.

Even a modest estimate of the systematized plundering of the German, Austro-Hungarian, and Ottoman Empires runs to the astounding total of $175,000,000,000. By comparison with such spoliation on the grand scale, the pickings of the marauding Vikings and buccaneers of the Spanish Main dwindle to the merest peccadillo. And, by contrast, the sum of $11,000,000,000 spread over a period of 62 years, shrinks almost to nothingness. So far as the American public were concerned, they were kept in complete ignorance of these agreements to divide up the world and doom the central empires to economic mutilation.

It is not enough to say that not all these aims ultimately were realized, for, in their major decrees, the Treaties of Versailles closely adhere to these secret compacts.

The outstanding and the impressive fact is that, before we were led into the conflict, before we were committed to enormous sacrifices of the lives of our youth on the field of battle, and while we believed we were fighting for international idealism and while we believed we were fighting for international idealism and permanent peace, and for the perpetuation of democracy in the interest of the common man in Europe, our prospective allies and associates already had divided up the spoils.

The highest and noblest sentiments of a great nation thus were played upon, despoiled, and betrayed. A peace "without victory" never was contemplated and never could be achieved.

I willingly grant that from the viewpoint of the Allies the case was desperate, and certainly only the direst necessity on their part could have provoked such shameful deception of the American people. My quarrel, however, is not with the war but with the

Having thus penetrated the illusion that we were fighting a holy war for the emancipation of mankind, we perceive that the peace of Versailles was a peace of selfishness, greed, and hate; a peace of aggrandizement and imperialism.

the peace of Versallies was a peace of seinsnness, greed, and nate, a peace of aggrandizement and imperialism.

With the rose-colored glasses of utopianism removed from our eyes, we may begin to view the picture in its harsh realities that, if we are not on our guard, threaten to devastate every city, county, village, hamlet, and neighborhood of our land.

These realities are that the war-mad ministers at Versailles pulled down two of the main supporting pillars of the European economic edifice, smashed to fragments the economic machines that formerly fed 100,000,000 persons, set in motion a train of events that undermined the gold standard, and now, astonished because the roof caved in, they ask us to extricate them from the because the roof caved in, they ask us to extricate them from the

Their avenues of approach follow the idealism which they have good reason to believe animates this unsophisticated Nation of ours. They ask us to "forgive the debts, as we forgive our debtors." Be your brother's keeper, they implore.

Under threat of a continuance of the world-wide depression they demand cancelation of their $11,000,000,000 debt to us. The alternative to that concession, they plead, is the lowering of our protective tariff that would permit them to invade our vast domestic market. They cannot pay they say except in goods and services.

market. They cannot pay, they say, except in goods and services.

And, as in the age of innocence of this Nation, we find the same leadership, in part, that led us into the war and helped to ruin the world with the settlement of the war, pleading for reciprocal tariffs and a return to pre-war idealism.

In the face of an immigration policy sanctioned by 90 percent, or practically all of America, reducing and warding off the competition of foreign labor in this country, this leadership would let that low-wage labor in through another door—the tariff door—by freely admitting low-wage foreign goods.

With consummate naïveté, the diplomacy of Europe again pipes up the masquerade; and again this leadership inclines a willing ear to the siren song from across the seas.

We have no choice they inform us. Caucht between the two

We have no choice, they inform us. Caught between the two contentious demands, we must play the role of Shylock or of Santa Claus. We must choose between Europe's hatred and Europe's contempt.

Well, I for one can entertain no pretensions to omniscience in this great drama. To my humble mind one horn of the dilemma seems as painful as the other.

Nor can I aspire to evolve some magic formula, which backed by the bayonets and cannon of the victors will quicken the fainting pulses of European trade, and bring them back to prosperous felicity and accord.

Yet, dare we not hope that the mighty chancellories of Europe themselves will redress the economic wrongs of Versailles that have devastated and prostrated the world, and doomed untold millions of men, women, and children to poverty and misery?

Cannot these exalted gentlemen across the seas take pity on those former guardians of the western front, who in many lands, are now but regred sentingles of the bread lines?

those former guardians of the western front, who in many lands, are now but ragged sentinels of the bread lines?

If, as some learned scholars affirm and depose, the Germanic powers were not guilty of sole responsibility for the war, then it would seem to be the victors' duty to strike off the shackles that enslave these nations; to remove these impediments that have brought the victors nothing but distress and bankruptcy.

If, as some scientists aver, the Treaties of Versailles are based upon untenable racial premises; and have placed the economy of Europe in the hands of infant nations that are unable to cope with the stern requirements of the modern industrial era, then it would seem to be the victors' duty to repair the damage.

The present leadership of this great Nation ignores the great fundamental blunder of Versailles, and offer reciprocal tariffs as a world solution.

as a world solution.

A reciprocal tariff is but a high-sounding word for free trade. If it means anything, a reciprocal tariff means the barter and exchange of goods with foreign nations on a basis of reciprocity. It means the surrender of our economic sovereignty. It means giving to other nations the right to say what we shall buy and sell.

A competitive tariff means the admission of foreign-made commodities into this country on a basis that will enable them to compete with American-made products. There is no disguising either a reciprocal or a competitive tariff, they both spell free

They mean that the great protective dike would be breached beyond repair, to permit a great mountain of European commodities to be dumped upon our shores.

Every dollar paid for these foreign commodities, according to this thesis, would remain here as quit-rent on the debt that Europe owes us. That may be true, but the significant fact remains that every dollar expended by Americans on the foreign goods admitted through a reciprocal tariff would be a dollar which otherwise would be expended on American commodities made by American workmen in American factories.

Every dollar expended on foreign food-stuffs admitted through a reciprocal tariff would be a dollar which otherwise would be expended on American produce raised by American farmers on American farms.

Thus, it becomes clear, a reciprocal tariff is but another road to cancelation. In either case, by cancelation or by reciprocal tariff, America pays for the World War.

Now, the tenderness of the remains of war-time leadership to-ward the Treaties of Versailles can well be understood. They helped to make them. The gentleman who now bravely carries aloft the banner of their party was one of that group of notables who, as knightly idealists, made the memorable pilgrimage to Paris. When the pacts eventually were signed and sealed he was Paris. When the pacts eventually were signed and sealed he was one of the consultants and advisers in the antechamber.

One of the fondest dreams of the great Napolean, who spoke softly and carried a big stick, was a single coin that would run the length and breadth of Europe. He sought to bring that about by force of arms. A few decades after this great military man and patriot passed from the stage another Napoleon sat upon a throne in France. He was Napoleon III. He is often referred to as "Napoleon the Lesser", or "the Little Napoleon", and seemingly with very good reasons.

with very good reasons.

Now, the great Napoleon, Napoleon I, was avowedly a tariff protectionist. With him, Frenchmen and the markets of France always came first. He once proclaimed to all nations:

"I swear that I do nothing except for France. I have nothing

"I swear that I do nothing except for France. I have nothing in view but her advantage."

Along came the little Napoleon, and although he bore a great name, he was not big enough to fill the great Napoleon's shoes. This little Napoleon began by entering into a reciprocal tariff with France's traditional enemy, that tight little isle and manufacturing center across the channel. Then the little Napoleon entered into reciprocal tariffs with many other nations on the Continent. Defying the warning and doctrine of his great predecessor, the little Napoleon, Napoleon III, broke the backbone of protection in France.

ecessor, the little Napoleon, Napoleon III, broke the backbone of protection in France.

What happened? His rash experiment with reciprocal tariffs in less than a decade had prostrated the farmers of France. And when the farmers of France take a positive position, something is bound to happen. The inevitable thing did happen. France returned to republican rule and went back to protectionism, and has been there ever since.

While we are reviewing the Napoleonic period of 1814—in which was the remote genesis of the war of 1914—let us not forget the aftermath, in which there may be a distinct parallel, and perhaps a lesson for our own future.

a lesson for our own future.

The high and haughty statesmen who gathered in the Congress of Vienna in 1815 bargained shamelessly with each other for the spoils of war, then agreed to combine their military power to enforce the peace. They failed, just as the high and haughty statesmen at the Congress of Versailles, 100 years later, have

The League of Holy Emperors sought to impose by force the divine right of kings, and failed; just as the League of Nations sought to impose by force the divine right of supergovernment, and has failed.

Republican doctrines prevailed over the divine right of kings, and republican doctrines will prevail again, if we but rightly guide them.

Now, I maintain that a solution of the world-trade crisis must be arrived at, that will reserve America's domestic trade to Americans; because the American people will tolerate no other solution. For 16 years the American domestic market has averaged a total of $64,000,000,000 a year.

At the same time I contend that the solution must provide a way wherein Europe can repay her $11,000,000,000 war debt to us, because the American people do not propose to have this huge sum saddled upon them.

sum saddled upon them.

In the world as constituted today there are now four great self-sufficing economic areas. One of these is the 3,000,000 square miles comprising the Republic of the United States of America, to us the fairest land on earth; the second is that vast domain stretching across the roof of the world from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the 8,000,000 square miles occupied by the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics; the third is the great British Empire, occupying 13,000,000 square miles, or one-fourth of the habitable area of the whole terrestrial globe; the fourth great trade area, and by far the greatest in civilized population, is continental Europe.

With the single exception of Europe, each one of these huge self-sufficing economic and political areas now is dedicated to the policy of free trade within and tariff protection from without.

What an object lesson was the recent imperial trade conference in Ottawa, when the duly designed delegates of the British Com-

what an object lesson was the recent imperial trade conference in Ottawa, when the duly designed delegates of the British Commonwealth of Nations scuttled their historic policy and embraced imperial preference, which is but another name for free trade within, and protection from without.

Upon what does the great empire of Soviet Russia, groping her ay to industrial freedom, stake her destiny? Free trade within ad protection from without.

and protection from without.

What single thing was it which enabled our own great Nation to rise in the short space of 150 years to a position of industrial supremacy that has amazed the world? That wise provision, placed by our forefathers in the very bedrock of the Constitution, namely, that there shall be no tariffs between the States.

One is naturally reluctant to advance or approve a step which essentially must spring from the initiative of governments other than his comments.

But the light of these illustrious and time-tried examples I make bold to suggest to the harried statesmen of continental Europe that they do now adopt and take up as their own the selfsame principle that has made us great; the selfsame principle to which the British Empire now turns in her hour of need; the selfsame principle to which Russia entrusts her future, namely, free trade within and protection, where needed, from without.

Within continental Europe, if anywhere, are reciprocal tariffs needed. There, if anywhere, is the opportunity to return to prewar idealism. But was there any idealism in Europe before the war?

The solution of a continental tariff union, such as here suggested, would be no castle of dreams such as the League of Nations, ready to topple over at the first breath of adversity. Instead it would be a towering citadel of protection, able to weather the severest storms, and an enduring monument to the peace and prosperity of Europe.

This house of papier maché, the League of Nations, fell because it was based upon might. This new house, this union of continental tariffs, will stand because it is based upon right. The one is based upon fear of punishment; the other on the hope and expectancy of reward. One sways on the shifting sands; the other is founded upon the rock.

is founded upon the rock.

Furthermore, the resultant renaissance and Continent-wide revival of internal trade unquestionably would enable them to pay their honest debt to America.

Ah! you say, it cannot be done—festering feuds of two milleniums cannot be composed in a single generation.

Then I reply to the diplomacy of Europe, you may continue to dwell in a house of hate, but as long as you do, you will dwell alone, and the vision of a happy Europe will still remain in the far and distant future. far and distant future.

far and distant future.

Before the map makers sat at Versailles there were 17 tariff barriers on continental Europe. When they had finished they had added 7 new ones, making 24 in all. Cannot the same powers that put these tariffs up meet and tear them down again?

Let us see the picture whole. The organization and the establishment of a continental tariff union in no wise need impair the sovereignty of a single member. When the Thirteen Original Colonies of this Nation, under the pressure of dire necessity, sought to federate, they were a group of thoroughly independent little sovereigns—with a background of conflicting social, political, religious, and economic ambitions, that they had brought over here from Europe.

United by the bonds of untrammeled commerce within and protection from without, they have prospered and expanded until today within that selfsame Union are to be found 48 States, each with a measure of sovereignty, but bound together by the principle that they will trade among themselves without artificial let or hindrance.

Is not the analogy clear? Which one of those seven new-born states of Europe, for example, could lay claim to the economic dignity of the great Empire State of New York? Could Latvia do it? Could Finland, Czechoslovakia, Lithuania, or Poland independently claim any such distinction? In economic resources could Estonia, or even bleeding Hungary, compare? To ask these questions is to answer them.

Consider West Virginia. Of all her vast volume of mineral and industrial products, she consumes less than 10 percent. How would West Virginia fare if she found herself encircled by a barrier of hostile tariff walls like those in Europe? Would Ohio, or Pennsylvania, having mines of their own, admit her coal? If she were sylvania, having mines of their own, admit her coal? If she were not free to enter the whole wide and rich market of this Nation, her pottery, her chemicals, her textiles, her glass and iron products, and her coal would remain, for the most part, unused within her borders. But given a free interchange of goods and services with the entire Nation, her commerce, in ordinary times, can flourish.

Unger the aegis of a Continental Tariff Union, with free trade within and protection from without, the tiniest and the poorest of these new European states could well aspire to a new and higher standard of living. All things are possible to this age of science. Delaware, one of the smallest States in the Union on this side of the water, possesses matchless chemical and other industries, and because of her freedom of trade with other States, is one of the brightest gems in the American economic diadem.

Similarly, in the American Southwest, desert lands of no fewer than seven States are being reclaimed through the great cooperative hydroelectrical development of Hoover Dam. Our States are not so favored as continental Europe in their access to the ocean. Over there, because of indentations of the coast line, the average not so favored as continental Europe in their access to the ocean. Over there, because of indentations of the coast line, the average distance from great manufactories to tidewater is but 71 miles. Over here Chicago is nearly 1,000 miles from the sea. But with the cooperation of our great friend and neighbor, the Dominion of Canada, we may be able by means of the St. Lawrence waterway to bring the sea to Chicago.

Our economic unity in the United States of America was not achieved without a heavy cost in blood and sorrow. We had to learn amid the roar of cannon and slaughter of brother by brother that we could not exist half slave and half free. The Europe which has just fastened economic chains on her own people some day will also learn that she cannot prosper half slave and half free; but I trust that without further bloodshed, she will learn the bitter lesson that we learned by the carnage of Gettysburg.

To say that the diverse nationalities of Europe cannot live together in amity is refuted by our own experience. To our ports for 150 years have come countless fugitives from the economic hardships of Europe. Yet, under the beneficent principle of free trade within and tariff protection from without, they have dwelt here in amity and contentment up to that disastrous moment—here in amity and contentment up to that disastrous moment—when the pacts of Versailles began to create an economic debacle in which neither victors nor vanquished could pay their debts. On a continent not nearly so favored as Europe we have been able to develop a domestic trade, by the free exchange of commodities among ourselves, that in prosperous times amounts to the staggering figure of $90,000,000,000 a year, and has averaged sixty-four billions during the last 16 years.

What, then, might not be expected of continental Europe, with 2,000,000 square miles of land; free access to the sea; a salubrious and quickening climate; enormous deposits of coal and tron; unique deposits of potash; inexhaustible fountains of hydroelectric power; a vast domain of grass, forest, and plow land; and 350,000,000 of population?

Under a continental tariff union the standard of living of the great masses of toilers would be enormously elevated. They could hope quickly to attain for all, instead of the few, the comforts and luxuries that the masses of Americans ordinarily enjoy.

The resulting trade transformation would so enrich the coffers of European governments that, if desired, they could support and of European governments that, if desired, they could support and sustain armaments even larger than those now deemed essential to their security. But, of course, the free interchange of trade under a continental tariff union would have an ever-increasing tendency to promote mutual understanding and friendship, rather than jealousy and hate.

than jealousy and hate.

Then they could shake off the dreadful burden of armament, which in Great Britain, France, and Italy alone amounts annually to the enormous total of $1,500,000,000. Besides paying their honest debts to us, Europe then would be able to buy in our markets with real money instead of sweatshop goods, or money borrowed from us, or depreciated currency.

Depreciated these statements and injurities to the forces within

Remove these 24 irritating and iniquitous tariff fences within Europe and the picture of continental Europe's domestic future bewilders the imagination. It would not be too much to expect bewilders the imagination. It would not be too much to expect that in a single decade she would far surpass the significantly large domestic trade that we customarily enjoy here in America.

So, let Europe tear down these petty man-made walls and let the beautiful blue Danube again roll on unfettered to the sea. Build the railway from Bagdad to Berlin, not for one single, selfish power, but for all the nations. Throw wide open the gates of the Golden Horn for all to enter. Like Alexander of old, cut through the economic Gordian knot of Versailles.

When we think of the matchless hydroelectric power of Sweden.

When we think of the matchless hydroelectric power of Sweden, Norway, and Switzerland; the busy workshops of Belgium and Holland; the rich ores that lie unexplored in Spain; the fair plains that nurtured old Rome; how can Europe explain to posterity that all the world fought a great war over the coal bins of the Ruhr?

But, you inquire, what of the British Commonwealth of Na-tions, that vast confederation which exercises dominion over more than one-half of Africa, a vast area in Asia, and innumerable islands?

I have the faith to believe that old England, like ourselves content with what she has. Could she be assured of the extinction of European envy and malice, could she be certain of the peace and prosperity of her neighbors, I doubt it not that she would consider the cession of all her continental trade as a price not too heavy to pay.

So the road lies open and beckoning. Will Europe take it or will she march on over the cliffs and drag down civilization to self-extermination?

Statesmen strut upon the world's stage but a little while and then, like all the rest, must needs bow to time and circumstance. Was it Bismarck's policy of blood and iron or the increasing pressure of the mechanical age that unified the Germanic people and brought them to the forefront of the dreadful armament race? Was it Cavour's foresight or economic forces that unified the States of Italy after a millennium of disunity?

What is it that has wrought the glory, the brilliance, and the genius of France? Is it not the very commingling of all the great subraces of Europe? Each one of them—the tall, blue-eyed Nordic, the worthy Alpine, and the sturdy Mediterranean man—under the beneficence of her republican government, has helped to make her great to make her great.

to make her great.

So, I say again, the road to unity, harmony, and prosperity lies open and beckoning. Will Europe take it? Why should not all the world travel together on and up this open road that stretches so invitingly toward the Olympian heights of perpetual peace?

Along that road, marching hand in hand, I can see those two great revolution-born republics who first proclaimed the everlasting tenets of liberty, equality, and fraternity, with their identical tricolors, those hard-won banners of red, white, and blue, in the van. Hovering beside them and helping them on I can see the spirits of those two great warriors for freedom, Washington and Lafayette; and those two great men of peace, Lincoln and Briand. And following in their train I can see a multitude of men, women, and children being led out of the valleys of the shadow of death, where in every land and clime they perish in the midst of plenty.

Why not an open covenant, openly arrived at—a covenant that will undo the wrong of Versailles; that will wipe away the shame and degredation from these great nations? Why not a peace with victory—victory not measured by booty and military hegemony but a victory of intelligence and reason, a triumph of man over his own inhumanity, and a step forward to the better tomorrow for the welfare of civilization?

Let us wisely use the billions of mechanical slaves that answer our every beck and call, and leave behind forever this dark epoch our every beck and call, and leave behind forever this dark epoch of economic barbarity.

In the humblest ranks of those 4,000,000 khaki-clad Americans

In the humblest ranks of those 4,000,000 khaki-clad Americans many were just unknown soldiers, and but for the grace of God many more would be there with him moldering in the grave.

Shall we prove a traitor to him now, when he is gone and we are here? Could he but speak from that hallowed sanctuary there beneath the earth, he would tell us that he fought a war to end all war. Shall his convictions be betrayed, or shall we, so far as is within our power, support them?

If we are to comprehend the depression, we must not rivet our gaze alone on that black Friday in 1929 when the American stock market was swept by a tornado of liquidation. We must compel our mind's eye to sweep unflinchingly back to another memorable Friday, April 6, 1917, when an administration in which were many of our present leaders brought America into the World War.

At that moment our national debt was at the comparatively

At that moment our national debt was at the comparatively insignificant level of $1,200,000,000. We were free—independent of the broils of Europe. When the war closed, less than 2 years later, our national debt had increased twentyfold. On June 30, 1919, it had mounted to the enormous level of $25,500,000,000.

This sum, large though it be, was only a part of the gigantic wastage of human life and property. The actual and ultimate cost to all belligerents now has been calculated by competent actuaries of unquestioned repute. They bring in the stupendous bill of $500,000,000,000—a sum so large that it confuses and appalls imagination.

the imagination.

When we contrast this incalculably oppressive burden with the fact that the total of monetary gold in the world was only $11,000,000,000 and realize the billions and billions of debts that were required to be paid in gold, we begin to see that the abandonment of the gold standard by 26 foreign nations was more than a passing phenomenon—it was a barometer of disaster.

Of that $500,000,000,000, the total cost of the World War, the huge share allotted to America, as we have seen, is one-fifth, or $100,000,000,000, when we consider the eventual tax for benefits to veterans and their dependents.

Our share we can liquidate, heavy though the burden will press down upon us in succeeding decades. But what of Europe? Her gross share in that tremendous wastage and consumption of human life and property is $400,000,000,000.

Is it not easy to see that at the height of the crisis in 1932 a moratorium on European obligations was a choice of necessity—the alternative between extension and repudiation?

A grave question has been raised by President Roosevelt's extension and repudiation?

A grave question has been raised by President Roosevelt's obtaining a grant of power in advance of his forthcoming negotiations with the governments of Europe on such matters as tariffs, war debts, reparations, and armaments. It matters not that the authority he has at the moment relates only to tariffs, for in the eyes of these foreigners with whom he proposes to negotiate, tariffs, war debts, reparations, and armaments are so closely related as to be inseparable.

The basic question then is, Having got ourselves officially out of the maelstrom of European politics, are we going in for another plunge?

I have nowhere seen the issue better stated than by the Foreign Policy Association, and which seems to be an organization financed by and dedicated to the propaganda of cancelation. I really admire the association's frankness when they boldly serve really admire the association's frankness when they boldly serve notice on us that—

"* * * The United States as a creditor must choose between the loss of $11,000,000,000 of foreign investment and $17,000,000,000 of private investments, and the temporary inconvenience of tariff revision."

Here, indeed, succinctly is stated the whole issue with which the

Here, indeed, succinctly is stated the whole issue with which the President has confronted us. This seventeen billions was invested abroad by the international financiers of Wall Street and their customers. The eleven billions was invested in Europe by the American people as a whole, through their war-time Government. The two investments, in the view of the Foreign Policy Association, are seemingly indistinguishable. But that is not so. The proposition really is:

You (the American people) take over this $28,000,000,000 of debt. Let European goods come into your markets to wipe out the $17,000,000,000 of private loans to Europe. Let the American taxpayer pay off the $11,000,000,000 of public loan to Europe."

The very fact that these proposed tariff treaties would permit the industrial partition of America, arraying State against State in the granting of tariff favors, and contrary to the Constitution, which expressly forbids such barriers, ought to make us especially cautious. Tariff by treaty, in my opinion, would sanction a species of brigandage on the part of foreign nations, with the fatal corollary that one part of the United States would not know when disaster had befallen another part, until the whole fell from economic attrition.

Propaganda in favor of the cancelation of the eleven billions owed America now rests chiefly upon the argument that failure to cancel is blocking the road to recovery from the world-wide depression. A number of eminent men, among them Lloyd George, the former Prime Minister of England, one of the architects of Versailles, has even gone so far as to intimate that failure to cancel will force some of our European debtors into default and bankruptcy.

Those who advocate cancelation or excuse the defaulting nations forget that the nonpayment of the $11,000,000,000 means an additional burden of $90 for every man, woman, and child in America.

As Senator Borah has pointed out, the war debts figure in a most insignificant way, an almost infinitesimal way, in the budgets of Europe. The pressure of the war debts upon the treasuries of Europe really is of the very smallest consequence. Some of the war-debt charges on foreign governments are smaller than one-half of 1 percent. Following are the exact percentages of the latest budgets available. They disclose the whole panorama in a startling way: startling way:

When these extremely low annuities are contrasted with the when these extremely low annuities are contrasted with the enormous annual expenditures of these same governments in support of armaments, it becomes clear that the American war debt scarcely figures at all in the budgetary processes of European government. Our debtors have been spending more than $2,000,000,000 a year on armament, and then complain about paying the ridiculously small sums of these annuities.

They show the amazing total of $15,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000 spent on armament since the armistice was signed, or far more than enough to liquidate the intergovernmental debts.

far more than enough to liquidate the intergovernmental debts, insofar as America is concerned. Had Europe disarmed, as was solemnly pledged in the pacts of Versailles, the war debts to us long since could have been liquidated and the whole slate wiped clean.

To trade our war debts for tariff favors, is, to my mind, a fantasy. When we lower our tariff barrier to let in European goods we are merely taking bread out of the poor man's basket fantasy. When we lower our tariff barrier to let in European goods we are merely taking bread out of the poor man's basket to give it to the international banker, who has more bread than he needs, and who alone stands to profit by American cancelation. In theory, it is a very fine proposition from the cancelationist point of view. The theory is that Europe will ship enough machine-made goods into America and make a sufficient profit on these goods to pay off the $260,000,000 debt annuity, if we lower our tariff. On a basis of 10-percent profit, Europe would then have to sell us $2,600,000,000 worth of goods a year, for 62 years, in order to discharge the debt, and this over and above the normal exchange. In other words we would be compelled to sustain a $2,600,000,000 adverse balance of trade for more than half a century. Supposing, however, that our tariffs were lowered so as to permit this kind of a transaction. What, in the meanwhile, would happen to the American workingman? The factories which formerly employed him and produced goods worth $2,600,000,000 a year would be closed down entirely. They would be driven from the American market. The workingman himself would be jobless. To be sure, the $260,000,000 annuity from Europe then would be coming in regularly, provided another war did not break out in Europe. In theory the Treasury would be enriched to that extent each year. But where is the money coming from to support the workingman out of work? Is it to come from further doles from the Treasury? If so, then the process merely means that the United States Treasury has canceled the war debt owed by these European nations.

It is a very pretty scheme, but it is a scheme which scarcely can by these European nations.

It is a very pretty scheme, but it is a scheme which scarcely can be disguised from the American workingman, or the American factory owner, who is as anxious to be at work as the man he employs. There is a further implication, however, which gives the whole plan the aspect of a gigantic fraud upon the American the whole plan the aspect of a gigantic fraud upon the American people. Our international bankers, with a prodigality unrivaled in the history of the world, have lent to foreign nations the sum of $17,000,000,000. If the $11,000,000,000 of public debt owed by Europe to our Government can be wished on the American taxpayers and workingmen, then the international bankers rightly calculate they will have a much better chance to collect the $17,000,000,000 which they so imprudently risked in the way of private loans to foreign countries. I repeat this fact, at the risk of seeming tedious, as I want to make it perfectly clear how the debt cancelation.

American workingman may be robbed of his bread to enrich the international banker if we attempt to trade tariff favors for debt cancelation.

I do not profess to surmise what is now in Governor Roosevelt's mind, but apparently in the past he has dallied with some such an idea, for in August 1932 he stated:

"The (war) debts will not be a problem; we shall not have to cancel them; * * * our policy declared for payment but at the same time for lowered tariffs and a resumption of trade that opens the way for payment." (The Associated Press, Aug. 12, 1932.)

A little later the President also stated:

"I have advocated a lowering of tariffs by negotiations with foreign countries. But I have not advocated, and I never will advocate, a tariff policy which will withdraw protection from American workers against those countries which employ cheap labor or who operate under a standard of living which is lower than that of our own great laboring groups." (The Associated Press, Oct. 19, 1932.)

On this seemingly irreconcilable position the New York Times,

On this seemingly irreconcilable position the New York Times, in summing up his campaign, thus commented:

"Mr. Roosevelt has, in fact, taken both sides of the question of the protective tariff. Perhaps he felt that he could do nothing else in view of the divided state of his own party, and of the confusion at present in the public mind about the whole subject. On it his speeches have not indicated clear and strong and business. On it his speeches have not indicated clear and strong and burning convictions. It may be said, however, that they have been nicely adjusted to the political situation and that he has exhibited the sagacity of a seasoned politician." (New York Times editorial, Nov. 6, 1932.)

I have grave misgivings over this plan to enter into reciprocal trade treaties with our foreign debtors. Although the enabling act officially disclaims any intent to cancel the debts, the procedure nevertheless seems ominously in line with the fundamental tenet of Mr. Roosevelt, the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, that I previously quoted.

To cancel the war debts by means of tariff favors to our debtors is, to my mind, even worse than outright cancelation, because it would be done at the expense of American toilers, and inevitably means the displacement of many hundreds of thousands of them, possibly millions of them, from their jobs over a long period of years. I cannot conceive how they can fairly be asked to make such a sacrifice.

asked to make such a sacrifice.

The contemporaneous scene within the remnant of the German Empire is scarcely to be wondered at. Parts of that nation, reduced to despair by long years of waiting for justice, and tormented by economic suffering, at length have given way to the madness of religious intolerance. The resulting agitations cannot fail to give point to the urgent need not merely for compliance with the Treaty of Versailles but for actual revision. Can it be doubted that the war-guilt stigma was a burden on Germany heavier and more cruel by far than the $9,200,000,000 indemnity wrested from her, or the loss of her colonies and ore-bearing lands? The world, tardy in recognizing the fundamental errors of this and other Treaties of Versailles must now make some show of reparation. of reparation.

Lloyd George warns us:

"Look at disarmament. We have been at it 10 or 12 years. We were getting a little nearer until this Government came in. They adopted a policy that has driven Germany to despair. I speak as one who largely organized the defeat of Germany and who helped to draft the very stern Treaty of Versailles.

"Germany did its best to carry the treaty through. It carried out the disarmament clauses honorably. But armaments were increased yearly while Germany was kept down. What has been the result? A proud, great people will stand that for a short time, but not forever.

"The result has been to drive Germany to an aggressive military dictatorship, a menace to the peace of the world and fatal to disarmament. The powers that signed the treaty were responsible by their action last year when they refused equal status to Germany." (From an address by Mr. Lloyd George at Ashford, Kent, England, Mar. 11, as reported in the New York Times, Mar. 12, 1933.)

Similar attention to the background of the present-day hysteria in Germany is also suggested by the world's most eminent Jewish scientist, who himself is a refugee from persecutions in his native

"It should not be forgotten that the tragic psychological situation in Germany was to a great extent brought about as a result of the post-war policy adopted by the former allied nations at a time when the liberal regime was in power in Germany." (From a statement by Prof. Albert Einstein, at Coq-sur-Mer, Belgium, Apr. 5, as reported in the New York Times, Apr. 6, 1933.)

To sum up: While the cauldron of unrest and despair seethes in Europe because of the economic enslavement of approximately 100,000,000 persons, little can be accomplished toward the restoration of permanent prosperity on that Continent.

Questions of European armament, tariffs, reparations, and war debts are indissolubly linked to the evils of the Treaties of Versailles. No lasting result can be obtained unless and until these evils are exorcised. When and if revision is accomplished, such matters as armament, tariffs, war debts, and reparations settle themselves.

In any case it is wholly a European problem. The crisis was made in Europe by Europeans. Our interference in the past, either by force of arms or through agencies of financial pressure, has brought us nothing but grief. Our whole Nation is prostrate as a result of unwisely associating our destiny with that of Europe.

Does not ordinary prudence suggest that we now withdraw? Does not common sense suggest that we bind up our own wounds before recklessly venturing into the foreign entanglements again? To my way of reasoning there can be but one choice. America can stay at home, nearly all Americans want to stay at home, and, in my opinion, America ought to stay at home.

Therefore to encourage Mr. Roosevelt to voyage across these treacherous seas in an attempt to settle such matters as European armament, tariffs, war debts, and reparations, without getting at the fundamentals, is but to invite further disaster.

We find that several European countries, including our principal debtors—England and France—are recovering more rapidly from the depression than we ourselves are. In the light of the historical facts that I have just reviewed, is it unfair to assert that they have been tremendously aided by the enormous booty obtained by reason of their victory, achieved in part through our aid? In that booty I include not only seized lands and indemnities but leave to the privileges.

also trade privileges.

Nevertheless, over that returning prosperity in Europe looms the shadow of Versailles, and for that reason we cannot envy the position of the victors. If high protective tariffs have proved a handicap to recovery, where employed by a self-sufficing entity, why is it that England leads the way in recovery with the highest protective tariff in the Empire's history?

There is no doubt that the existence of the war debts owed America is an oppressive factor. For that reason I should be the last to insist that annuities be met in full at the present time. For example, I am very much inclined to accept at full value the honorable and courteous statement of Great Britain that she does honorable and courteous statement of Great Britain that she does not wish to repudiate, was prepared to continue token payments, and finds it difficult to make larger payments at the present time. This need not mean further cancelation. It can mean a temporary extension of the time for payment based on an avowal of inability to pay conveniently at the present moment. There is no need for a Shylockian attitude. We have every moral right to collect the debt in full, but we have no moral right to question the assertion of a friend of long standing that financial difficulties exist, and that more time is needed in which to pay. I think this especially is true in the case of the British Commonwealth of Nations. Nations.

If our debtors cannot pay in gold, and if we dare not accept payment in goods for fear of adding more millions to the ranks of the unemployed, and if new-born nationalisms in Europe are so inflamed with pride as to insist upon self-destroying, punitive intracontinental tariffs, there is still another solution of the war-intracontinental tariffs, there is still another solution of the wardebt problem that might appeal to the American people.

That is the cession to us of certain lands on this hemisphere. It is nothing new to settle wars by cessions of lands. Nearly all wars of the past have been settled that way. In fact, the Congress of Versailles not only ceded lands to various of the victors but also transferred peoples from one sovereignty to another, with very little compunction.

Therefore, it is my modest view that the policy of self-symmetry.

Therefore, it is my modest view that the policy of self-sufficing, self-sustaining, self-respecting nationalism, with the interests of our millions of suffering people coming first, is a better policy for the United States than a policy of internationalism which brought us nothing but sorrow when exercised in the past, and which will bring us nothing but sorrow so long as we mingle our affairs with those of Europe in the matters of tariffs, reparations, armament, and war debts.

Let American recover first herself before she again ventures

THE NEW DEAL-ARTICLE BY JOHN SNURE, PR.

Certain elders, it is said, have grave doubts about the remedies prescribed by the President's advisers for the national ills.

Reports have been circulated that liberal Associate Justice Louis D. Brandeis is in accord with the many changes being made in the structure of Government under the classification of emergency action. It has been said that the progressive justice has played a part in the formulation of the recovery program.

His associates deny this and say that not only has Brandeis not been influential in formulating recovery remedies but he is apprehensive of the many experiments.

It is not the features of the multiplicity of recovery measures to which Justice Brandeis objects, his associates declare. It is the policy of experimentation which causes him to be disturbed. He objects to the fluttering from bush to bush in the hope that

They voted on the question:
"Do you favor Paul M. Pearson's remaining Governor?"

Editorially, publicly, at mass meetings and churches the people have asked that Pearson be supplanted. When Mrs. Roosevelt visted the islands, she was asked to exert her influence to have the Governor recalled.

The administration, thus far, has turned a deaf ear to the appeals of the people of the Virgin Islands.

The secret police, however, have stepped on important toes. In one of the States was a P.W.A. official who made a business trip to Washington which was paid for by P.W.A. funds.

A member of Ickes' secret agency approached him at his office at home and demanded to know if his wife knew that he had come to Washington in company with his secretary. The man referred the agent to his wife, to the secretary's mother, and to the girl's finance. The agent was satisfied, but said:

"We also have information that on another trip you registered at a Washington hotel as man and wife when, we are told, you were not with your wife. What about that?"

The official, angered, replied:

"That trip was personal. I paid for it myself. It is none of your business whether my wife was with me or not. If the organization I'm working for is spying on its workers, I don't care to be associated with it. You can tell the man that sent you that I am resigning."

ADDRESS BY WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE, OF EMPORIA, KANS.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the able address delivered June 11 by William Allen White, of Emporia, Kans., at the commencement exercises of the University of Kansas, at Lawrence, Kans.

It is a masterful, clear-cut, philosophical discussion of the economic and political trends of these times, and their implications, and as such, is well worth the careful attention of every Senator and every thoughtful American citizen.

The speech is an analysis and a warning, as well as a hope and our civilization. I send the address to the desk for printing in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The only educational course I ever completed was that of the El Dorado High School where I was graduated in 1884, 50 years ago. Today, 50 years after, we graduate from our Kansas colleges more students than were graduated from all the Kansas high schools 50 years ago. And in that far day it was a rather more unique distinction to be a high-school graduate than it is to be college graduate today. So times have changed Today was a college graduate today. So times have changed. Today we have about the same number of citizens in Kansas that were here 50 years ago. We have distributed our wealth so equitably that we stand in a class by ourselves in the number of college graduates we turn out. We have used taxation as an agency of distributive justice to provide not a mere common school education indeed. justice to provide not a mere common school education indeed, not only a high-school education but a college and professional education available to all the youth in the State. Fifty years ago to have envisioned what we are doing today in Kansas in the matter of education, public health, highways, social work, the regulation of various agencies of commerce for the public welfare would have made our fathers in 1884, and your grandfathers, most uneasy. To have told them what Kansas is doing, what the various municipalities of Kansas are doing, what the Nation is doing to help common men to enjoy the fruits of the civilization in the Commonwealth which their common work has built, would have made the founding fathers of Kansas cry out with angry amazement at the paternalism of a socialistic order. For the founding ment at the paternalism of a socialistic order. For the founding fathers were trudging through hard ways to the stars. My generation, the high-school class of 1884 in Kansas 50 years ago, the sons and daughters of the young men who crossed the prairie as of old their fathers crossed the seas, were told by implication as we walked out of the high school in that day, that the job of State building was done and well done; that our task was to preserve what we had. Edward Bellamy had written a book called "Looking Backward", filled with what his generation regarded as prophetic folderol. Yet out of his vision for the young men of yesterday we elders today dream our dreams. Fifty years from now, some of you, dearly beloved, may stand where I am standing here and you may tell the class of 1984 that at your commencement an ancient of days from the class of 1884 stood up and told you of the visions of the young men which were realized in his dreams. The span will be 100 years. It is something to think about. But how far—how far will be your dreams as old men in 1984 from the visions we saw as young men in 1884!

about. But how far—how far will be your dreams as old men in 1984 from the visions we saw as young men in 1884!

Yet we come with no pride of achievement in what our generation has done. Looking over the work of our hands which we lay at your feet today, I should say, speaking broadly, that we have dumped at the portals of your life one of the most elaborate, metallic scrapheaps that the history of civilization has recorded. A gaudy bauble it is. It shimmers with the simulation of bright reality, this modern civilization that we leave on your doorsten. It roars it clatters it shrieks and hums like lation of bright reality, this modern civilization that we leave on your doorstep. It roars, it clatters, it shrieks and hums like a going concern. It will do almost anything but work. It is jammed—may I say in these classic haunts, "jimmled", "gypped", and some of it is ready to be junked.

Five years ago we thought it was hitting on all 12 cylinders, a gorgeous mechanism headed straight for the millennium. We hired a competent engineer to put a few gadgets on it; two chickens in every pot, two garages on every lot. He was a good engineer. He carried in his kit all the accouterment needed, and under his hat all the experience required to fill the order. But scarrely had he touched it before the machine blew up. and under his hat all the experience required to fill the order. But scarcely had he touched it before the machine blew up under his hands and here it is. No one knows why it was or what it is. But it is yours. And when you put it together again, maybe you will have a lot of pieces left over and perhaps you won't have enough to go around. It will be a sweet job for your generation. Take it from the class of 1884 with our felicitous condolences. And may we cheer you on with the cynical hope that you will have the old bus going by 1924 so that you can brag to our great-great-grandchildren how you saved the world from chaos. the world from chaos.

Let us for a moment consider the chaos that is facing you. You, of all the classes who have come out of our colleges with eager eyes and shining countenances, must face the fact that you are confronting a new thing in the world, the first a definite challenge to democracy. Liberty, for a thousand years, has been assumed as the goal of humanity. Now men say—not merely by the millions, nor in limited hundreds of millions, not in minorities but in vast majorities, half a billion east of the Rhine—say democracy is dead, liberty is a mocker. Rub your eyes, class of 1934, and face this challenge. What are you going to do about it? The western fringe of Europe, France, the Netherlands, the Scandinavian countries and the English speaking Commonwealths still champion democracy, still hold that freedom is a worthy aim for humanity. But from the Rhine to the Pacific under the dictatorships of Italy, of Central Europe, of Russia, humanity is rallying around tyrants who deny the value of our ancient rights. Why bother with free speech, they cry, when the drums and guns brook no reply? Why fiddle around with the delays of parliamentary government when the ukase and the army can push the wisdom of the few to its quick achievement. Why waste time with a trial by jury, with a writ of habeas corpus, when the police and the private armies of the dictators can establish order with no nonsense about it? Why waste money on the ballot box, pro-claim the tyrants, Mussolini, Stalin, Hitler and their kind, when claim the tyrants, Mussolini, Stalin, Hitler and their kind, when authoritative government goes to its purpose as an arrow from the bow. So speak the new despots of the modern world at the bier of democracy. So do they brush aside a thousand years of human aspiration as though the noble vision of free men in a free government as a legend of some intrigue in Nineveh or Tyre. Is democracy dying? Don't think, young men and women of 1934 that you can evade the searching question that is shaking the America is facing a crossroad crisis in which she may have to choose between two tyrannies or to fight again the old fight, the ancient battle of our race, the fight for freedom. Down one fork of the road we see looming before us a potential plutocracy embattled as an army with banners. Here stand those who control the machinery of the machine age. They are not necessarily trol the machinery of the machine age. They are not necessarily owners. They represent on the whole merely a dominant minority, small groups of stockholders. But they are entrenched. They have possession of the machines, the superlooms, the giant forges, the rails, the pipes, the wires, the flickering airways through the night that span the continent. They control the mines and the production of all the basic commodities. They are amiable despots for the most part, benevolent in their mellower moments, greedy only by virtue of their appointed task, flendishly acquisitive, without real need or wisdom, for their voracious appetites. They are merged where they are not actually physically amalgamated by a growing class consciousness and the arrogance that comes with power. They would rule us under the altruistic despotism of a financial fascism. To maintain its reign sooner or later that fascism will have to cramp our liberty, shut off free later that fascism will have to cramp our liberty, shut off free utterance in the forum, on the air, from the press. Moreover, in the guise of suppressing demagogues and agitators, this despotism of unchecked capital will have to curtail the rights of trial by jury, the writ of habeas corpus and naturally they will control the courts. If they are left to their own devices under their cherished doctrine of laissez faire in government, some time in the decade of the forties these amiable plutocrats will demand the attention of the class of 1934. What are you going to do about it? Are you going to forget Runnymede, Cromwell, Bunker Hill, Jefferson, Lincoln, and go to Mussolini, or Hitler, or just as bad, to Stalin? Do you propose to fight for the middle course, or perhaps lie supine and let the juggernaut roll over you?

And down the other fork of the road, what is the prospect? Behold the politician. So long as he is what he is and what he must be under the democracy as it is—an average man—keen to please an average electorate, government will be what it is. Let us consider for a moment this politician. Does he hold his place in representative government because he embodies the high-

Let us consider for a moment this politician. Does he hold his place in representative government because he embodies the highest wisdom of his electorate? He does not. He is in power because his intelligence quotient is the greatest common divisor of a not too quick-witted constituency. These constituents demand a certain amount of back-slapping, hand-shaking, babykissing, time-serving, job-getting to deceive them into voting for him. So, because he is really of the people and rather dumbly for the people, he gets by with the people. He is not a bad lot. He will go as far in his patriotism as the tether of politics will let him go. He is honest enough, money honest. But remember this, when we award the highest prizes of our American civilization to the keenest, most acquisitive men, politics, whose rewards are comparatively slight, gets on the whole our second-rate and third-rate citizens. So we find too often after the ballots are counted we have picked a dub. Yet as an escape from the menacing plutocracy, down the right-hand fork of the road, we Americans are seriously considering handing over, either for drastic regulation, stringent control, or actual ownership, the vastly complicated, delicately intricate machinery of finance and commerce—to whom? Well, to our American politicians who in their better moments are statesmen, but in times of crisis too often better moments are statesmen, but in times of crisis too often turn demagogues. The prospect is appalling. With all the power that must come to men in government when these place-hunting politicians assume the added function of industry and banking, what then will become of liberty?

What then will become of liberty?

Will they not have the same arrogant sense of their importance that will inevitably make tyrants out of the plutocrats? Will not our politicians taking under the aegis of government, the business of production and distribution of basic commodities, either by too drastic regulation, by stringent control, or ownership, resent criticism, curb debate, and degenerate this Government into some sort of proletarian dictatorship or heirarchy of political power?

This is what I mean when I say to the class of 1934 that sooner or later as you walk into the middle decades of this century you may meet the challenge to democracy. We have left you this amazing industrial, financial, political set-up and you must fight for your liberties if you hold them. You must line up in the next decade for or against the forces of freedom. You must choose or abandon the ideals that have been motivating men in the western world for a thousand years. It is a new challenge but an old struggle. but an old struggle.

Let us restate the question: Can freedom live in the machine age? A machine age presumes the mass production of things, goods, material service, things which formerly were produced by individuals for other individuals, chiefly neighbors. Mass production requires mass distribution. The individual worker and the individual consumer are thousands of miles apart. To make ends meet between the consumer and the producer requires channeling, stern, and inflexible. If those who control the machine make the channels, they are ruthless. If society under government attempts the channeling, the channeling becomes regimentation. Even now, even in America, over large areas where capital invested in coal, in textiles, in steel, in sugar, in citrous fruits, dominates a region, the democratic liberties always are threatened. Fire speech a fire press the right of assemblance threatened. Free speech, a free press, the right of assemblage, the writ of habeas corpus, these liberties wilt and wither as the the writ of habeas corpus, these liberties wilt and wither as the owners of machinery control the courts and the police. Democracy languishes. Freedom disappears before the machines. Would freedom thrive more sturdily when politicianss control the machine than it thrives now in those regions where the machine controls the politicians? I don't know. I check the question up to you. This challenge of the age: Can liberty survive in the machine age? Today it is true we still have liberty. But the machine is not functioning. The machinery of production and distribution of which we were so vain 10 years ago is having trouble with its transmission.

having trouble with its transmission.

So, therefore, young ladies and gentlemen, as you walk around this tinseled, splendid omnibus of stalled vanity which we are leaving to you, while you are making it refunction as your civilization, let me ask you what you propose to do about it? cams, cogs, levers, wheels, pulleys, and contraptions of renovation, invention, or repair do you propose to use in putting the old bus on the road? I can imagine your saying to us who wrecked it, "Where is your tool chest? What real heritage have you left us?" A fair question that; one that deserves a frank answer. In spite of all the progress we have made in five decades, since 1884; in spite of the surface sheen that we have given to our external civilization, it seems to me the heritage which my generation brings to you is precious little, in the net of it.

Is it a rich and prosperous nation?

No; our riches and prosperity will confuse you more than if we had brought you a leaner land.

Is it this interminable labyrinth of machines stretched on wires and through pipes and over rails and around lighted airways across the rich green earth of spring?

No; it is not industry. That powerful engine is a Trojan horse out of which will stalk troubles to threaten your progress in the next decade.

Is it all these schools and colleges? No.
Is your heritage in the long hours of leisure which your fathers never knew?

I think it is none of these. All of them must be socialized. All of them must be made over into something real and true. It seems to me that we have brought you only the pure gold of our ancient liberties.

"All we have of freedom, all we use or know,
This our fathers bought for us, long and long ago.
Ancient right unnoted, as the breath we draw,
Leave to live by no man's leave, underneath the law."

Now, let me list those simple golden nuggets which are your Now, let me list those simple golden nuggets which are your heritage; they are the democratic liberties that have been established on this continent after 300 years of struggle. Here they are: The ballot box; the right of free utterance in every form, through the press, through free speech, through the right of assemblage and petition; the right of trial by jury, and of the writ of habeas corpus. That is the galaxy of liberties which insures to a definite legally ascertained majority of the American people "the consent of the governed"—simple, primitive things. Yet as you keep them or lose them will you win or fail in the battle of your generation for American freedom.

You may ask, How shall we use this democratic process, these your generation for American freedom.

You may ask, How shall we use this democratic process, these rights and liberties which are our heritage out of the America of yesterday? I don't know. I distrust anyone who claims that he does know. The most dangerous enemy of democracy today is a man with a rigid plan, either for recovery or for reconstruction. For a man with a rigid plan is liable to feel that the adoption of his plan is more important than the retention of liberties which may endanger it. Therefore give honest consideration to any plan that in its adoption does not require the suspension of American liberties. Do not be too sure what plan will work and what will not. Try it. America has established herself by keeping an open mind and never fearing failure. Indeed, we have mapped our course in the long plebiscite of many failures. We groped an open mind and never fearing failure. Indeed, we have mapped our course in the long plebiscite of many failures. We groped our way, almost leaderless after Yorktown, then wrote our Constitution. After Appomattox we were two, possibly three, decades stumbling in a morass of calamity and misrule, but we did not turn to a dictator. Democracy saved us whole, the slow, sure wisdom of the people, the American spirit—whatever it is—rising triumphant out of disaster. Let that be your guiding star. In the struggle of the next decade they may tell you force is more potent than reason to establish the new order which they propose, and if, therefore, they insist upon suspending, or for the moment modifying, any liberty required for the full free function of orderly parliamentary government under democracy, there, with all my heart, I beg of you to say "no". To compromise there is treason. For, however fair and fine a compromise the passing tyrant may hold out, when he would abrogate the reasonable process of democracy, still he is establishing tyranny. No man has a right to play providence with his neighbor's liberty, able process of democracy, still he is establishing tyranny. No man has a right to play providence with his neighbor's liberty, no matter how noble and apparent the benevolence may seem under which the amiable tyrant would establish his despotism. No tyranny can be erected for the common good. The power that comes with tyranny breeds the arrogance of tyranny; and tyrants are always tyrants. Also, remember this, in taking the meager heritage that we bring you, don't be fooled by the tyrant when he prates too glibly about this common good which he would establish by a rule of force. The common good is not entirely a thing of bread and butter, of warmth and shelter. It is something more. Our Republic was not erected to give men entirely a thing of bread and butter, of warmth and shelter. It is something more. Our Republic was not erected to give men a full stomach and a warm back. Our Nation was set up here in the wilderness for no mere material end or aim. Whatever material gain we have made is an incident of the quest for justice, an incident of the self-respect that comes with freedom. Material welfare is an inevitable incident of the triumph of justice, but still an incident. Let me read the preamble to our Constitution, which, more than any other document, sets forth the American aspiration; listen:

"We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare and "here is the climax—" secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this the Constitution of the United States."

A kingdom not made with hands. No material end and aim

A kingdom not made with hands. No material end and aim inspired our fathers when-

"They brought us freedom at no little cost.

Wherefore we must watch the gain, lest our gain be lost."

Tyrant kings will come disguised as prosperity, as economic security, as regimented supernationalism. But beware this: The king is he, whoever he may be—Fascist or Communist—who tries to tear down our liberties and offers us material security in their place. If you heed him, this tyrant king, sooner or later shall you awaken to stark reality—to despotism and its inevitable injustice and misrule.

I wish it distinctly understood that nothing in these remarks

I wish it distinctly understood that nothing in these remarks is intended as criticism of the new deal. As a matter of fact, on the whole I am for the new deal. Much of it is necessary. All of it is an honest experiment. And most of it is long overdue. So, tonight we bring you out of our generation, 50 years ago, our inheritance. In America it is still undefiled, the inheritance of liberty under a democratic republic. No man will minimize the gross injustices of our modern world. They cry to Heaven for redress. And you must redress those gross economic maladjustments. Don't be fooled by smoke screens behind which men, clamoring for the bill of rights, are digging entrenchments for wicked economic wrongs. Be sure that under the democratic process you can and will make the drastic social, economic, and industrial adjustments needed. industrial adjustments needed.

Force will only bring new evils in its train. Force will only bring new evils in its train. Even now the doctrinaires of a strong, stern government are beginning to tempt you as you step forth from the serenity of this sheltered life. Sirens will lure you to take their panaceas, the soft, soothing sirup of economic security. The Fascists will hail you, the Communists will begulie you—both tyrants! But hold fast to this your heritage, the self-respect of an American citizen free born, unshackled by the old oppressors in their new name.

"How so great their clamor, what so e're they claim Suffer not the old king under any name. Here is naught unproven—here to naught to learn, It is written what shall fall, if the king return."

THE GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH

By John Snure, Jr.

One of the most monopolistic organizations in the world is ready to function. It is the Virgin Islands Co., which will be financed with $1,000,000 capital from P.W.A. funds.

Controlling the great rum industry and all other industries of the islands, the company will be headed by three stockholders. They are Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes, whose Department controls the islands and who is Public Works Administrator; Oscar L. Chapman, and Paul M. Pearson, Governor of the islands.

The ordinance which created the company was adopted by the Colonial Council of the Islands of St. Thomas and St. John. It had been rejected by the Council of the Island of St. Croix. Both islands are municipalities in the Virgin Islands; and because of the adoption of the ordinance by the St. Thomas council, it will be foisted upon the people of St. Croix despite their expression. opposition.

Under the terms of the ordinance the company may acquire, construct, build, equip, administer, and supervise buildings, plants, factories, farms, market agencies, or any other activities it desires.

It may buy, lease, sell, mortgage, assign, or transfer, without restriction, real property of any description.

It may make any contracts it wishes, borrow or lend money, issue bonds, manufacture any and all merchandise, and carry on any business it believes convenient and advisable.

The creating ordinance sets up a Government company, financed originally by Government funds, to have an absolute monopoly over all industries of the island regardless of the wishes of the

The check on the purchases, expenditures, and profits of the company will be made by the directors who have access to the books. But the directors are to be elected by the shareholders. A yearly financial statement will be issued.

The ordinance says that profits are to be used for the economic rehabilitation of the islands. As for economic rehabilitation, there appeared in an island newspaper, the Emancipator, when the ordinance was under consideration, the following statement:

In the closing days of the session of Congress the Democratic donkey gives political fodder to the Republican elephant as the House passes legislation providing for a census.

At a cost of $8,000,000 the census will be taken by 100,000 workers appointed by Democrats. The workers may be influential in securing votes back home for those Democratic Congressmen who need assistance in their primaries and elections.

When the House considered the bill, one of the most active opponents of the legislation was Representative Thomas O'Mal-LEY, a Democrat, from Wisconsin.

One of his queries was:

One of his queries was:

"Who are going to get these jobs? I see from the hearings that the bill is endorsed by college professors. I wonder if the teachers' pets are going to be employed during the months of October and November on the pay roll of the Government.

"We are told that they could not use C.W.A. workers, because they were not highly enough educated; they have got to use specially selected college boys to do this work; that is supposed to relieve unemployment among laboring people."

The expenditure of the $8,000,000 was deplored by O'Malley, who said he knew what the views of farmers would be when they had not enough food and yet the Government was spending money that would have fed them.

Said he:

Said he:

Imagine what one of them would say when an enumerator comes up to him and says that the Government is spending $8,000,000 to relieve distress by counting the distressed!"

There is one portrait that is conspicuous by its absence.

There is one portrait that is conspicuous by its absence.

No painting of that wizard of finance, Andrew W. Mellon, when the secretary is to pay for their own when It is the custom for Treasury Secretaries to pay for their own portraits so that posterity may gaze at their resemblance when they visit the Treasury officials.

Denials are emphatic that they would not hang Mellon's portrait. They say there is none of him.

Perhaps Andy couldn't pay for a sitting.

MINNESOTA'S MENACE

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to print a speech, which carries a special message to the people of my State. It was made by former Congressman Franklin F. Ellsworth, from Minnesota, who served with me in the House for three terms, where he was a dominant figure of the Progressive Republican group. Had he desired, he would have still been in Congress, and it was a great loss to the country that he did not so choose to remain.

In the vital crisis through which my State is passing, he has again come to the fore as a candidate for Lieutenant Governor. He is a man of integrity and ability, means what he says and says what he means. I feel that his message should be of interest, under all the circumstances, not only to the people of the State of Minnesota but also to the United States; and I am therefore asking to print it in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

Minnesota is confronted with the adoption of a program of extreme radicalism which threatens to destroy the basic fabric of extreme radicalism which threatens to destroy the basic labric of representative government itself.

The Farmer-Labor platform is clearly the device of opportunists to launch a course which will eventually bring about a complete change in our form of government.

Whatever may be the immediate campaign declarations of its candidates or leaders, or their explanations for political expediency's sake, every thinking man and woman must be driven to the inescapable conclusion that the ultimate goal of that party's managers is the form of government of the Russian Soviet.

The time of its accomplishment is incidental; the direction of

The time of its accomplishment is incidental; the direction of the next step is vital, and that that step should be toward the Russian system is unthinkable.

As a Member of Congress and candidate for office, I have always advocated and supported progressive or liberal measures, but I regard this new proposed deal as thoroughly subversive of any

Is Minnesota to become a political poison spot?

Governor Olson told the Farmer-Labor convention that the whole Nation is watching Minnesota. He said he was what he wanted to be-a radical.

Then he went to Washington. The platform committee framed

Then he went to water a platform a platform.

That platform declared for "a complete reorganization of our social structure into a cooperative commonwealth", not a commonwealth of cooperatives, but a commonwealth itself to be the cooperative entity.

If there was any question about the meaning of those words, the next paragraph explains:

"We declare that capitalism has failed and immediate steps must be taken by the people to abolish capitalism."

If there were still doubt as to what was intended, the platform

"A system where all the natural resources, machinery of production, transportation, and communication shall be owned by the Government

Lest there should still be doubt, the platform provides:

"We demand public ownership of all mines, water power, transportation and communication, banks, packing plants, factories,

"We demand particle of the state.

This language is the greatest departure from political platforms since the organization of American political parties.

It is the most astounding proposal for complete governmental overturn ever made to the people of a free sovereign state.

It runs the complete gamut from soap-box philosophy to Russian sovietism in a single ultimatum by an organized majority party in virtual control of the state.

The shock is made the more terrible by proclamation that this abolition is to be by immediate steps. The reassuring thing, abolition is to be by immediate steps. The reassuring thing however, is that it is to be accomplished in a peaceful manner There will be no rifles, no machine guns, no shrapnel for deposed bank cashiers, ousted mine owners, and factory operators to face as they sally forth into the streets to yield to their successors of the new proletariat.

The arrogance and cupidity of this new regime are a challenge to representative government. It makes of our fair State of Minnerepresentative government. soft the local proving ground for conversion into a political poison spot in which the virus is to be incubated to inoculate the Nation.

They are to take over the factories, mills, and mines, to write the textbooks for the schools, to establish the propaganda system as a permanent governmental institution by immediate steps, but in a peaceful manner. Just how peaceful, we do not know. Whether they will be purchased or confiscated, we do not know. If purchased, we assume by bond. How the bonds will be paid or chased, we assume by bond. How the bonds will be paid or refunded, we do not know.

They throw the gantlet to the voters of Minnesota with full confidence that the power that has thrilled them has robbed the men and women of our State of their deliberate choice and judgment and that we dare not oppose a bold and open proclamation for revolution with a secret ballot.

The daring of the proposition can only be predicated upon a notion that the temporary emergency measures of the Federal Government to which the people have submitted has weakened our character and broken our resistance power.

The most charitable view as to Governor Olson is that his original course was that of a true progressive or liberal; that he was captain of his ship of state; but we are not concerned with the captain, but with the course of the ship itself.

captain, but with the course of the ship itself.

The ship's pilots are steering her into the reefs and shoals. She lists from starboard. Her mizzenmast trembles in the hurricane.

She rocks astern

The problem for the ship's owners is to change the ship's cap tain when she reaches port at the end of the voyage. If it's mutiny, we must change both captain and crew.

Let there be no mistake; we are facing an issue in Minnesota.

It is not enough to condemn; it is not an answer to cry "Socialism and communism or sovietism." Most men and women do not appreciate the danger of a step in the wrong direction. We feel secure in our American ideals and standards and believe they will always endure. We think a departing step can be retraced and we fall to discern the purposes until it is too late and we are on our

There are thousands of men and women in Minnesota who are for a complete change in Government, for out and out socialism and communism. There are other thousands who are half-way convinced. Many others do not distinguish between liberalism and radicalism. They are not radical but liberal, but leaning toward desperate measures and prone to become convinced that ultraradical measures are necessary.

We must convince them in this campaign that such measures lead to a leveling process that no true American would care to endure; that this leveling process within the Nation leads to the same process between nations, to internationalism. Communism is international. It recognizes no national standards

The worker in America who claims his right to collective bar-gaining, to maintain his standard as an American workingman, gaining, to maintain his standard as an American workingman, under this new communistic form would lose his right. He would have no employer to bargain with, but would take his place as a Soviet worker, ruled by the proletariat committee. In the open market of the world the product of his work would be sold in competition with the worker of Russia, of Czechoslovakia, of Japan. His wage would be adjusted to the wage that would make his product competable with the products of Europe and Asia.

The Russian peasant, under the rule of the Czars, had everything to gain by sovietism.

thing to gain by sovietism.

The American workingmen, who in normal times—and normal times will come again—live on a higher standard than that of any nation in the world, in these United States with the richest natural resources of any nation, have everything to lose if they lose their rights as free citizens of a representative republic.

There have been abuses of our present system and grave ones. There have been concentration of capital and control of utility companies and transportation companies that have imposed an unjust burden upon the people. There has been corruption in government and in political parties, and these things have helped to impose additional hardships and burdens upon the people.

That there should be agitation in these times to change our form of government is but natural, but let us not be carried away with new ideals which in the end will level Americans to the standard of Europe and the Orient.

That we should have this agitation is good. It will bring us to

That we should have this agitation is good. It will bring us to think and take active part in our public affairs. Nearly one-half of our voting population neglects to take part. There is not a single abuse of government or business that will not be corrected if every American will study public questions and exercise the right of franchise given to him by the Constitution.

Hitlerism and the dictatorship of Mussolini in Germany and Italy in the armed camp of Europe may be good; sovietism for the pauperized peasants of the Czars in Russia may prove a boon; but a representative government wherein every voter exercises his right to participate, is the ideal government if we in America want to continue to maintain the superior standards of living for which we are the envy of the world.

Mr. Upton Sinclair in his book the Way Out, written last year we are the envy of the world.

Mr. Upton Sinclair in his book the Way Out, written last year (p. 71), said:

"Some day before long in one of our States a radical governor will lay down the law that the factories have to open, and will start commanding those which do not open. When that happens, President Roosevelt will decide whether or not to send in Federal troops. It is by decisions such as this that our future is to be determined."

This statement is prophetic.

determined."

This statement is prophetic.

Whether Sinclair was writing the Way Out, or it may be construed by the opposite view of "the way in", it is apparent that that day has come in our own fair State of Minnesota.

Our Governor, in a party convention of his own political party, has publicly proclaimed himself a radical—filling the exact specifications of Mr. Upton Sinclair.

The convention before which such declaration was made promulgated a platform for ownership of private properties by the Government, and again enumerated in such specifications was the word "factories"—again following Sinclair's exact specifications.

We have then the radical Governor and the factory to be commandeered.

We have then the radical Governor and the factory to be commandeered.

That word "factory" in the platform, following upon the declaration of radicalism, created a furor. A theretofore dormant political party, pronounced by the new radical as a corpse, became galvanized overnight into a fighting demon.

The people of Minnesota and of the country stood aghast. What did it mean? The answer was anxiously awaited.

Finally it came—and to an astounded public it was, "Yes; to feed the needy, he, the Governor, would take over an idle factory."

In Upton Sinclair's words: "It is by decisions such as these that our future is to be determined", Sinclair referred to the future of our National Government.

Thus, let there be no mistake. Minnesota has been made the clinic for a new order in the form of government in this country.

Minnesota has been pointed out as a poison spot of crime—an Minnesota has been pointed out as a poison spot of crime—an accusation not susceptible of definite refutation.

Now, we Minnesotans must ask ourselves: "Are we to become, in the eyes of the people of this country, the poison spot of politics?" That question can be answered at the ballot box definitely, finally, and decisively.

May God forbid that Minnesota shall become the breeding ground for a peaceful revolution.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WHEELER obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President-

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senate has been in session continuously since 9 o'clock this morning. A state of mind has arisen here, demonstrated in the last few speeches that have been made, which raises a doubt in my mind whether it is possible to conclude the labors of the session tonight.

It had been expected, as every one here understood, that we would be able to adjourn tonight. There are still at least two conference reports undisposed of. One of them has not been agreed upon by the conferees, and, indeed, they met only a very short time ago. I do not know what is the view of the House of Representatives as to the propriety or desirability of attempting to continue our labors until we are in a position to adjourn.

Let me say, while I have the floor with the indulgence of the Senator from Montana, that there are a number of very important bills which the administration would like to see passed, which the President and others connected with the administration, including myself, are willing to defer until the next session.

A great deal of work has been done by the present session. Our proceedings have been amicable and harmonious. There has been a measure of cooperation here which appears to me to be truly commendable, and it was regrettable that personal feelings should have been vented in the debate tonight, to the discredit of those who yielded to such impulses, and to the impairment of the dignity and the reputation of the body of which we are proud to be Members.

It is my intention to communicate at once with the majority leader of the House of Representatives, and then I think it is quite probable that I shall move a recess of the Senate until 11 o'clock Monday. It is impracticable, it is almost impossible, to conduct the public business under the conditions which have arisen here tonight. In the days to come those who were responsible for the manifestation of personal malice which we have witnessed will feel a regret, a very sincere regret.

I realize that it is not my business to lecture anyone. With respect to the program during this session, I have borne and attempted honorably to discharge a very grave responsibility, and I am proud of the accomplishments which are to be credited to this great body, and I hope that the good sense, splendid character, and kindly disposition which ought to animate anyone worthy of membership in this body will be demonstrated throughout our future proceedings. I thank the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I agree entirely with what the Senator from Arkansas has said, that we should take a recess until 11 o'clock Monday. I think it is quite apparent that it is impossible for us to legislate in the state of mind in which we find the Members of the Senate at the present time. Every Member of the Senate has been working almost night and day for several weeks, and I appreciate the fact that everyone's nerves are becoming rather frazzled. There are some bills which, in my judgment, ought to be considered before we adjourn, and some of us intend to insist that we at least be given an opportunity to be heard, and that those bills be discussed before an adjournment shall be taken.

I appreciate the fact that there are men who are opposed to this railroad labor bill, but the sponsors of the bill feel, as it has passed the House of Representatives and has been reported by two committees of the Congress of the United States, and as it has, as I am reliably informed, the approval of the President of the United States, who has agreed that it should be passed at this session of the Congress. that there can be no reason whatsoever why the bill should not be considered, and at least an opportunity be offered to take a vote to decide whether or not it should be taken up.

Mr. President, notwithstanding what the Senator from Delaware says, all of us who are familiar with this legislation know that what the Senator from Michigan said with reference to one great railroad being opposed to this proposed legislation is true. There cannot be a question in the mind of any man who is familiar with this measure, who has followed it through the committee, that the Pennsylvania Railroad is the one outstanding railroad in the United States of America which has violently opposed this legislation, and it is opposed to it because they have a company union. A company union, as was pointed out by the Senator from New York tonight, is a union dominated and controlled by the company itself. They write the constitution, they tell the men what they have to do, and unless the men do what they are told to do they lose their jobs.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a motion for a recess?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, June 18, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

THE WORK OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for | an article on the work of the House Committee on Education, written by its secretary.

> The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following work of the House Committee on Education:

THE WORK OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION—WILLIAM J. WALLACE, SECRETARY TO THE COMMITTEE, REPORTS EVENTS OF A BUSY YEAR FOR THE 21 MEMBERS OF CONGRESS ENDEAVORING TO SOLVE NATIONAL SCHOOL PROBLEMS

The second session of the Seventy-third Congress has been for the Education Committee of the House of Representatives an un-usually busy one, the product of the times in which we find

It is wise, before one reveals the actions of the committee, to dissect it into its component parts. Of the 21 members, 13 are serving their first term in Congress, and 14 are members of the Education Committee for the first time. There are 15 Democrats and 6 Republicans, which is about the ratio of both parties in the House

Most significant is the fact that many of the members were not merely assigned to the committee, but because of their great interest in education, asked to be placed on the Education Committee. As a whole, it is as interested a committee as can be found in the Capitol. No meeting is conducted without a large turnout, and this is unusual when one considers the fact that many of the members have conflicting committee assignments.

MEN OF EXPERIENCE

As the Representatives on the committee are gathered from many and varied walks in life, the reasoning processes and the final decisions are bound to be interesting. The chairman is a lawyer, playwright, and dramatist. In addition to the chairman there are eight other lawyers on the committee, all of them prominent in their States; one an author of law treatises; another who before being admitted to the bar, had taught school; another who had been a principal of a high school and lecturer upon economics, literary, and historical subjects; another, one of the leading constitutional lawyers in the United States, former Assistant Attorney General of the United States, former Assistant Attorney General of the United States, former solicitor general, author of numerous well-known law books, honored by three foreign coun-tries, fellow of Royal Historical Society, London, honorary bencher of Gray's Inn, England. The lady member of the committee is also an attorney.

Leaving the law, we have a member who has been a practicing physician for 30 years. In addition to the two attorneys above mentioned who have had school experience, we find five other members with an educational background, one member a former chairman of a school board in New York State; another a teacher for 18 years and later a county superintendent of schools; another an outstanding educator in America, having been a professor at some of the leading educational institutions in the United States and since 1905 to date, professor of philosophy at Yale University; another who taught school, later a county superintendent, president of a junior college, editor and proprietor of a newspaper, and president of a bank; and another a former member of a local board of education. In business fields we have one member an editor and publisher with a keen interest for years in education; another a successful business man and founder of a bank; another a prominent banker and farmer; another a chairman and member tioned who have had school experience, we find five other members a prominent banker and farmer; another a chairman and member of a State commerce commission; and two others successful business men.

From this committee the educational policy of the country must be shaped, and the committee is well qualified to do it.

TWO SCHOOLS OF THOUGHT

In the beginning, it must be remembered that there will be two well-defined schools of thought in greater or less degree present in most bodies which will have before the membership education as a subject matter—that which believes that education is essenas a subject matter—that which believes that education is essentially the duty of the State to care for without the Federal Government participating in any way, and that which believes that the Federal Government should assist the States in education more as a national matter. Especially today, in these hard times, is the argument heard advanced by many educators, "If agriculture, business, railroads, and banks are to be assisted by the Federal Government, why not the schools?" And there will be those who will retort, "If the Federal Government is to go on helping all these activities, the Federal Government is going to need assistance soon, and who will give it?"

The subject of education being a controversial matter as regards policies in Congress, it is to be expected that there would be some difference of views amongst the members of the committee and that compromise must be resorted to if there is to be any action. It can positively be stated that the members of the com-action. It can positively be stated that the members of the committee have the greatest respect for the views of each and every member, and they have endeavored to work out harmoniously plans to which the great majority can in a large measure agree.

Having in mind the make-up of the committee and the controversial subjects before it, let us look at the agenda.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Vocational education was the first question to come before the committee. As the George-Reed Act was to expire on June 30, 1934, if the program under the act was to continue, new legislation had to be approved by the committee and passed by the Congress. Vocational education had its birth with the passage of the Smith-Hughes Act in 1917, which provided for aid by the Federal Government under a match-fund agreement, to the several States, in the field of vocational education, for the benefit of agricultural education and home economics and trade and industrial education. This was permeant legislation. Starting industrial education. This was permanent legislation. Starting with the year 1918, $500,000 was appropriated for agricultural education and $500,000 for home economics and trade and industrial education—home economics not to receive more than 20 percent of the latter appropriation. This appropriation of $1,000,percent of the latter appropriation. This appropriation of $1,000,000, which was to be divided as mentioned, was to increase each year by $500,000 until in 1926 the sum of $6,000,000 was reached; one-half for agriculture and one-half for home economics and trade and industrial education, and from 1926 thereon it was to remain at $6,000,000. In 1933 the appropriations were reduced 10 percent by an act approved June 30, 1932, the Economy Act. This reduction amounted to $600,000 per year from the total amount. In 1934, the appropriations were further reduced by an act approved March 20, 1933, entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government." This reduction amounted to approximately $400,000.

Thus in 1934 agricultural education, under the Smith-Hughes Act, received $2,270,250; trade and industrial subjects, $1,830,000, and home economics, $457,500.

In addition, under the Smith-Hughes Act, $1,000,000 is allotted each year for maintenance of teacher-training. In 1934, $910,000 was appropriated.

was appropriated.

In 1929 Congress passed the George-Reed Act, the purpose of which was to add funds to the original Smith-Hughes Act, in the which was to add funds to the original Smith-Hughes Act, in the field of agricultural education and home economics, excluding trade and industrial subjects. The appropriation was to be divided equally between agriculture and home economics. This act provided for $500,000 for the first year, 1930, to be increased $500,000 each year for 4 years. Thus on June 30, 1934, this act expires. In 1933, instead of receiving the $2,000,000 authorized under the act, only $1,500,000 was received under the provisions of the Economy Act. Instead of receiving the $2,500,000 for 1934, $1,275,000 was appropriated under the Independent Offices Act of June 16, 1933.

ELLZEY AND BLACK

This was the situation when Mr. ELLZEY of Mississippi introduced bill H.R. 7059, "To provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories." The Ellzey bill asked for $3,750,000 annually and was intended to be permanent legislation. Under the George-Reed Act, now expiring, $1,250,000 of the $2,500,000 authorized in 1934, goes to agricultural education and $1,250,000 to home economics. It was proposed in the bill (H.R. 7059) that a further $1,250,000 be added to be allotted to trade and industrial subjects, making a total of $3,750,000. Mr. Ellzey of Mississippi was granted a hearing on H.R. 7059 on February 8, 1934, at which hearing there appeared the Commissioner of Education, Dr. George F. Zook; the Assistant Commissioner for Vocational Education, Dr. J. C. Wright; and the Chief, Home Economics Education Service, Federal Board for Vocational Education, Miss Adelaide S. Baylor. There were no witnesses Education, Miss Adelaide S. Baylor. There were no witnesses from the States at this hearing.

Later Mr. Black of New York introduced bill H.R. 7802, which was substantially the same as the Ellzey bill with the exception that a proviso was included in the Black bill that the allotment of funds to any State or Territory for each of the three purposes, mentioned previously, shall be not less than a minimum of $5,000 for any fiscal year and $64,600 annually was sought for the purpose of providing the minimum allotments to the States and Territories. Under the present law some of the States receive less than $5,000 and the purpose of this proviso was to enable them. than $5,000, and the purpose of this proviso was to enable them all to receive at least $5,000. With this exception, the bills were

Under the leadership of Mr. L. H. Dennis, executive secretary of the American Vocational Association, Washington, D.C., a hearing was sought on this bill, and the Black bill, H.R. 7802, was heard on February 20, 21, 1934. A comprehensive report of the work of vocational education in this country was presented to the committee, and among those appearing, in addition to Mr. Dennis, who had charge of witnesses, were: T. E. Browne, State director of vocational education for the State of North Carolina; Bobby Jones, Radnor, Ohio, president of the Future Farmers of America; Mr. Frederic Brenckman, secretary of the National Grange: Mr. of vocational education for the State of North Carolina; Bobby Jones, Radnor, Ohio, president of the Future Farmers of America; Mr. Frederic Brenckman, secretary of the National Grange; Mr. Chester H. Gray, representing the American Farm Bureau Federation, Washington, D.C.; Mrs. Hugh Bradford, Sacramento, Calif., president National Congress of Parents and Teachers; Mrs. Rose Coppage, president Maryland Parent-Teachers Association; Mrs. S. Blair Luckie, chairman of legislation of the National Federation of Women's Clubs; Miss Alice L. Edwards, executive secretary American Home Economics Association; Miss Margaret Edwards, head of the home economics department of the University of North Carolina; Mr. Charles A. Prosser, representing William Hood Dunwoodie Institute, Minneapolis, Minn.; Sidney B. Hall, State superintendent of public instruction, Virginia; Mrs. Betty Hawley, vice president New York State Federation of Labor, and executive secretary New York State Vocational Board; and Mr. Thomas H. Quigley, representing the Georgia School of Technology. In addition, Representatives Robertson, Virginia; Woodrum, Virginia; Carter of Wyoming; and Bankhead, Alabama, appeared in behalf of the bill. Shortly thereafter the committee met in executive session and considered both bills. Since the Ellzey bill, H.R. 7059, was first received, the committee decided to consider that and to add to it the proviso of the Black bill, H.R. 7802, which in fact was the only difference between the two bills.

COMMITTEE REPORTS

Instead of allowing the bill to be permanent as requested, the committee cut it down to 3 years; and instead of granting the $3,750,000 as requested, $3,000,000 was reported. In fact, however, it will be noted that this is an increase of $500,000 over the authorization of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934. The committee of the state of th mittee said:

authorization of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934. The committee said:

"The committee is reporting this bill not as a permanent measuse but to cover a period of 3 years as an emergency measure during the present depression, in the sum of $3,000,000 annually, commencing with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935; one-third to be allotted to agricultural education, one-third to home economics, and one-third to trade and industrial education. It is believed that trade and industrial education should be included in order to assist those young people who, because of lack of employment, are going back to school to learn trades. It is thought that this is not the proper year and time to withdraw Federal aid, as this action would mean probably the immediate loss of employment to many people engaged in this work, and there is no desire on the part of the committee to bring about this situation. But it is recommended strongly that the States put their houses in order and prepare themselves just as soon as possible to take over this whole program of vocational education, and rid the Federal Government of a task which is properly the duty of the State." (Italicized by the writer.) The committee also mentioned "that there is no question of the great value of vocational education has made a splendid social contribution, as evidenced by the testimony and reports of those appearing before the committee in favor of this bill. But it is believed that this problem of vocational education is essentially a problem for the individual State while it is able to carry it on."

One can readily understand that in order for there to be any action at all on a bill of this nature, compromise was in order,

One can readily understand that in order for there to be any action at all on a bill of this nature, compromise was in order, and some Members with varying views had to relent somewhat. In order that the bill might pass this session and there be no break in the vocational program, the chairman, John J. Douglass, appeared before the Rules Committee on April 5, 1934, and argued for a special rule, which rule was granted diving legislative price.

appeared before the Rules Committee on April 3, 1934, and argued for a special rule, which rule was granted giving legislative priority to H.R. 7059.

On April 25 the bill came up on the floor of the House, and debate was continued over on April 26. Attempts were made to put a labor amendment on the bill and also an amendment changing the plan of distribution so that the bill would read, "That put a labor amendment on the bill and also an amendment changing the plan of distribution so that the bill would read, "That in States and Territories where there are separate schools between white and colored pupils that the funds herein mentioned shall be divided according to the population based on the last United States census." Chairman Douglass vigorously opposed both amendments on the ground that it would mean the Federal Government interfering with education in the States and starting a precedent for Federal control of education. Both amendments were defeated, and the vocational education bill was passed by the House in exactly the form that the Education Committee reported House in exactly the form that the Education Committee reported House in exactly the form that the Education Committee reported it. The bill then went to the Senate, where it was referred to the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. This committee received the bill, instead of Education and Labor, where it would ordinarily go, due to the volume and pressure of labor measures before the Committee on Education and Labor. The Agriculture and Forestry Committee promptly reported the bill favorably in the same form as passed by the House, and it is now on the Senate Calendar where it is expected to be passed any day.

FEDERAL RELIEF

One of the most important questions ever to come before the House Education Committee was that of Federal emergency relief House Education Committee was that of Federal emergency relief to education. Schools in various sections of the country were either closed or terms were curtailed. The school situation was alarming. Under the leadership of United States Commissioner of Education Dr. George F. Zook, representatives of 32 national organizations met as the Federal Advisory Committee on Emergency Aid in Education. After much study a 6-point relief program was drawn up and presented to Commissioner Zook. The committee then dissolved. Thereafter many of the organizations represented formed the National Committee for Federal Emergency Aid for Education, under the chairmanship of Dr. James H. Richmond, superintendent of public instruction for the State of Kentucky. Headquarters were established in Washington by Dr. Richmond and his secretary, James W. Cammack, Jr., and they went about their task of securing relief legislation for 1934-35.

Dr. Richmond planned to prove to the committee by facts that there was a great need for relief to education. He did not attempt to have the committee deluged with letters and telegrams from all over the country; the only thing he attempted was to from all over the committee deluged with letters and telegrams from all over the country; the only thing he attempted was to deluge the committee with convincing facts presented at the hearing. I believe that Dr. Richmond's handling of the cause and its presentation were very pleasing to the members of the committee.

Hearing

Hearings commenced Monday, February 26, and continued through Thursday, March 1, with morning and afternoon sessions, and everyone who desired to appear was heard. There were 11 bills before the committee dealing with relief to education in some form or other: H.R. 7477, H.R. 7479, H.R. 7520, H.R. 7525, H.R. 6968, H.R. 6533, H.R. 7873, H.R. 6621, H.R. 8219, H.R. 8289, and H.R. 8137. The hearings were not confined to these bills, however, but were on the general subject of Federal Emergency Aid to Education, and most of the witnesses tackled the problem along this general line.

HOPKINS TESTIFIES

Some bills provided for the money to be taken from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; others from the Federal Emergency Relief Administration; and others from the Treasury. Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, appeared against the proposition that $50,000,000 be taken from his funds for 1934. He maintained as his personal opinion that relief funds should not be used for educational purposes; that the Relief Administration should not have anything to do with education in any way, shape, or form; that the whole question whether the Federal Government should give aid to schools was something which was entirely outside his province and that he did not wish to express any judgment as to whether the Federal Government should give aid to school systems.

Mr. Stanley Reed, general counsel for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, testified that under existing law there were no provisions whereby his organization could give the relief asked for in the bills—that Congress would have to legislate upon it; and as to its desirability, the Corporation would not care to give an opinion. The proposition that money should be taken from the R.F.C. as a gift to States and Territories appeared to be clearly inapplicable as the R.F.C. is a loan organization.

Dr. Richmond made a long and comprehensive statement setting forth the needs of many of the States as based on figures he had received from the various heads of education in the States. Among the speakers were:

Among the speakers were Commissioner of Education George F. Zook; A. T. Allen, super-intendent of public instruction, North Carolina; H. F. Alves, diintendent of public instruction, North Carolina; H. F. Alves, director of research, State department of education, Texas; W. F. Bond, State superintendent of education, Mississippi; Robert L. Bynum, State department of education, Tennessee; L. V. Cavins, director of research, State department of education, West Virginia; M. D. Collins, superintendent of schools, Georgia; Howard A. Dawson, director of research, department of education, Arkansas; Floyd I. McMurray, superintendent of public instruction, Indiana; J. N. Rule, superintendent of public instruction, Pennsylvania; Charles R. Mann, National Advisory Committee on Education; Paul Mort, professor at Columbia University; Robert C. Keenan, representing the American Federation of Teachers, Chicago, Ill.; representatives of many women's organizations; and Congressmen Allgood, Dondero, Dunn, Glover, Hoeppel, and Swank. Amongst statements submitted were those by Sidney B. Hall, chairman legislative commission, National Education Association and State superintendent of public instruction, Virginia; B. O. Skinner, director of education, Ohio; and John K. Norton, professor of education. rector of education, Ohio; and John K. Norton, professor of education, Columbia University, and chairman of the joint commission of the emergency in education of the department of super-intendence of the National Education Association.

No opposition appeared at the hearings.

The entire committee held executive sessions, discussing the whitest fully and called in witnesses for more information at the subject fully and called in witnesses for more information at the private sessions. Finally a subcommittee was appointed to draw up a rough copy of a bill, confer with the President of the United States, and report back to the main committee. The subcommittee is composed of John J. Douglass, Democrat, Massachusetts, chairman; Russell Ellzey, Democrat, Mississippi; Brooks Fletcher, Democrat, Ohio; Albert E. Carter, Republican, California; and Charles M. Bakewell, Republican, Connecticut.

The subcommittee went over this problem exhaustively, procuring information from every available source and also receiving the benefit of the testimony of witnesses who were called. On April 26, Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Emergency Relief Administrator, was directed by the President to confer with the subcommittee on this matter. The Administrator, the Commissioner committee on this matter. The Administrator, the Commissioner of Education, and the subcommittee had a very satisfactory conference on this date. On May 8, the subcommittee approved a bill by Mr. Douglass, the chairman, who introduced this bill the same day. This bill calls for $75,000,000 as an emergency measure for 1 year, i.e., the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, to be distributed to the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia on the basis of need and to be administered by the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator with the advice and cooperation of the Commissioner of Education. The funds are to be taken from the Federal Emergency Relief which have been heretofore appropriated or hereinafter appropriated. The bill will come before the main committee on May 9, and it is expected to be reported favorably to the House. favorably to the House.

favorably to the House.

In passing, I might say that there are many difficulties attendant upon a program of this nature, especially in determining the actual needs of the States and Territories for 1934-35; many complicated matters, such as the financial structure of the States and taxing systems, would have to be considered. This article is intended to be factual and not opinionative, but this writer, present every minute of the time at the hearings and following the subject closely, cannot help giving one or two personal observations. It would appear to me, from testimony I heard at the hearings, that if some of the States had used more foresight, had reorganized inadequate and ancient taxing systems, had properly set aside sufficient funds for education realized from an efficient taxing system, and had consolidated rural schools as much as set aside sufficient funds for education realized from an efficient taxing system, and had consolidated rural schools as much as possible, the need today for financial assistance would be nowhere near as much as it is. A wholesale reorganization of education and finances for education at once by the States would appear to be the only way the States can take care of themselves and not be coming back to the Federal Government for assistance after 1934-35.

If the evils are not uprooted now by the States, then they will be in the same situation the next year and the year after as they are today. It means great sacrifice on the part of the people and the leaders of the State government, but from the testimony at the hearing, Indiana appears to have taken care of its own situation courageously through revising its tax system and allocating the proper funds to education. Of course, it means hardship, for no tax falls easily on anyone. From figures available, Massachusetts, Maryland, Connecticut, Delaware, New Hampshire, Indiana, Rhode Island, and Virginia are seeking no Federal aid for 1934-35, but it must be evident to all that these States are forced to retrench and sacrifice in order to continue without Federal assistance. assistance.

assistance.

Perhaps one of the most startling conditions brought to light during the hearing was the almost complete lack of consolidation of rural schools. There were situations in many States where a tremendous saving could be made if these small one-room country schools were consolidated wherever possible. Local pride often tends to prevent consolidation, and it also appears that the only worth-while consolidation, and it also appears that the only a State-wide survey and not independent country surveys.

It seems that we are always going to run into the two schools

It seems that we are always going to run into the two schools of thought; that which believes the Federal Government should assist the schools of America as a permanent policy and that which believes the States should look after their own affairs without any

The present proposition is an emergency one, however, and we are able to avoid this argument for the time being, but it seems we are almost certain to run into it in some form in the future.

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, it was not surprising to me that there should emanate last night from the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] a complaint because I used franked post-card announcements to notify citizens of Washington of a recent address on public questions and national problems before the Washington Institute, Church of Christ,

Now, it happens that my concept of government—which is the truly Democratic one-differs fundamentally from that of reactionaries like my friend, the gentleman from New York, who believes that it is highly improper to use Government facilities to acquaint the people with the facts about civic affairs and about their own business. I believe in open, candid, honest discussion of these things. I believe that in a country which rests upon the foundation of free and universal education, it is right to use Government facilities to provide discussion about matters that relate to public policies.

Just the other day the newly appointed Commissioner of Education stated that he felt that a modern, broad, and progressive educational policy should include the use of schools and publicly owned halls for open forums, debates, lyceums, and other educational organizations for the whole people. His statement revealed him as a man who possesses the real American ideals of education, knowledge, and intelligence.

The gentleman from New York, who has barked and whined at every effort of the present administration to relieve human misery and save people from starvation, is naturally opposed to the extension of knowledge at public expense.

I make no apologies for mailing out announcements of a civic address on franked congressional post cards. If other Members of this House who are so wedded to reaction and so hostile to open discussion would use Government facilities to reach the people and talk over the Nation's problems and needs, they would be using their time and energies to far better advantage than by indulging in cheap carping criticism of everything that tends in the direction of humanitarianism and enlightenment. I should like to see other Congressmen do exactly as I did. And I care not whether they are Democrats or Republicans or members of any other party, for I believe in free speech, and I ask no privilege for myself that I am not willing to extend to others. If our Government is to stand, it must assure free speech for all, and that means assuring it to my opponent as much as to myself.

These disciples of reaction love darkness rather than light; prefer to keep the people in ignorance to allowing them access to information; and are devoted to the doctrine that the best government is that which operates in star chamber proceedings with no ray of illumination ever allowed to enter. Men of that attitude would have been at home in the catacombs of Rome. They are out of place in the modern America of the new deal of Franklin D. Roosevelt and Dr. Rexford G. Tugwell.

Mr. Speaker, on page 11808 of the Congressional Record, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] made a serious attack upon me last evening for the use of the frank, in which he used the following language:

I never supposed that this was a proper use of the frank. I supposed that we were only to use it in responding to letters and in writing letters about official business or sending official documents or in sending out parts of the Congressional Record.

I have in my hand copy of the card to which he refers. May I state that this card was submitted to the Post Office Department before it was sent out.

The gentleman from New York appears to object to these meetings being held in churches and he also appears to object to the wording of the card. For the information of the gentleman may I state that the wording is absolutely correct and has been passed on by the Post Office Department.

The gentleman from New York who has barked and whined at every effort of the present administration to relieve human misery and save people from starvation—

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. FOULKES. Is naturally opposed to the extension of knowledge at public expense. Considering the source, what other expression of opinion could be expected from him? I am reminded of the Chinese blybird, which is a bird that flies backward, and the reason it flies backward—

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's words be taken down. We are not going to have that sort of thing here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks that the words be taken down. The gentleman from Michigan will suspend.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from New York insist that the words be taken down?

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman is willing to take them out of the Record, I do not care, but I do not propose to have such things as that in the Record.

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, the reference to the Chinese blybird that flies backward, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOULKES. The trouble with the gentleman from New York—

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I am not ready to withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER. The objectionable words have been withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. TABER. All of the words?

The SPEAKER. The objectionable words have been withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, the trouble with the gentleman from New York, and a few of the same cast of mind who unfortunately remain in public office, is that they are thinking in terms of the Middle Ages and of the days of King George III. They believe in the Tory doctrine that we repudiated in the American Revolution; in the suppression of intelligence that is practiced by the insane despot, Hitler, when he burns the greatest literary works of the ages because he does not agree with some of them; and in the dogma of the British colonial governor who, before the American Colonies revolted and founded the United States, "thanked God that the Colony he governed had no free schools that might arouse discontent among the masses."

I want to tell the gentleman something else. I have remained day after day on the floor of this House, and I have taken particular notice of the gentleman. I have listened to his yapping—

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand that the gentleman's words be taken down.

Mr. FOULKES. At every opportunity that presents itself.
Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand that all of his words be taken down, and I specify particularly the word "yapping."

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman specify the words he wants taken down?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will specify the particular words he wants taken down.

Mr. TABER. I demand that all of his words be taken down, and especially such words as "yapping."

Mr. BYRNS. That is not unparliamentary. I do not think it is subject to criticism. The gentleman has the right to use any word he wants to use which expresses his sentiments.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Tennessee does not think that is a word that should be used in parliamentary debate?

Mr. TABER. The present Speaker has ruled that that is not in order.

Mr. BYRNS. I would not use the word myself, but I do not think it is particularly objectionable. I will not say anything further, because the gentleman might want my words taken down. You know in some assemblies there is always a lot of yapping.

Mr. FOULKES. May I ask the Speaker if the word 'yapping" is unparliamentary?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule when the words are taken down.

The Clerk will report the words.

The Clerk will report the words objected to.

The Clerk read as follows:

And I have listened to his yapping at every opportunity that presents itself.

Mr. TABER. There was a lot more to it than that. There were personalities all the way through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will indicate the further words he wishes taken down.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Foulkes] stated, in addition to the words the Clerk has reported, that I went back to the Middle Ages, and he said a lot of other things that altogether were highly improper and unparliamentary.

The SPEAKER. With reference to the words so far taken down, the Chair finds, by consulting Webster's Dictionary, that the word "yap" means "to talk loudly; chatter; scold."

The Chair holds that is not objectionable language. Are there any further words the gentleman desires taken down?

Mr. TABER. It was meant in a way that is entirely contrary to the ruling of the Chair which was made with reference to the remarks made by the gentleman from Texas, with reference to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot rule in the matter until he gets the words. The Chair has ruled on the word "yap."

Mr. SABATH. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it cannot be denied-

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman's time expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's request comes too late.

THE NEW DEAL IN CONNECTICUT

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, as the history-making Seventy-third Congress nears its close, it is appropriate to pause, take inventory, and ask: "What has the new deal meant to Connecticut?"

What does the future under this awakened, revitalized, understanding plan of government mean to Connecticut?

The first of these questions requires but a review of the record of Congress since the inauguration of Franklin Delano Roosevelt as President of the United States, March 4, 1933.

The second, while at first glance it might appear to be one inviting nothing more than mere conjecture, will, upon further inquiry, be found to be predictable with an uncommon degree of assurance.

Connecticut is an industrial, commercial, and agricultural State, with a great variety of interests, not conflicting interests, but ones which, nevertheless, require specialized thought and treatment. No political or economic panacea suffices to meet its problems; no old-deal theory of special privilege is acceptable to its institutions. It requires, and I am happy to say that it has, under the leadership of President Roosevelt and the cooperation of this Congress, received for the first time the especial consideration which points the avenue to complete and lasting recovery.

Connecticut has observed with great satisfaction the orderly development of the well-rounded program of legislation which it has been our privilege to write on the statute books. Led by a great man in the White House we have gone well along the road not only to recovery from a temporary depression but also to insurance against recurrence of conditions such as were visited upon our Nation during the preceding administration. This Congress has ripped by their very roots the principal sources of the depression and has charted a course for further exploration where experience dictates its wisdom, and for retrogression where that policy is found to be wise.

Government, like the universe itself, is an animate, constantly moving thing. It must, and under this enlightened administration does, adjust itself to new conditions. Congress cannot write laws; then dismiss them from mind. There is need for constant attention and study, for close observation. It has been my policy, and that of many others in this body, to follow every public act of Congress, to study its effects, its advantages and disadvantages, and the benefits that accrue. Only by such study can we be equipped properly to fit into the legislative structure those other laws now in process of formulation, which are necessary to create a lasting prosperity.

To know what the new deal has meant to Connecticut, as I have before commented, it is necessary to know her problems. In Connecticut is manufactured just about everything that is fabricated from raw materials. (I am frequently reminded by my good friends from the Southern States that we once carried that truth to the point of manufacturing and marketing wooden nutmegs and, with Yankee ingenuity, created a market for them in the South.)

The diversified industries which gave employment to so many thousands of my people felt the blow severely when the business slump came. Factories which had never before known a business pinch in a century of operations, others which in the post-depression period sprang up—monuments to the industry, ambition, and faith of Connecticut investors and artisans—found themselves unable to obtain working capital through the usual channel of credit, the banks. Perfectly solvent, with orders on file, but needing a small but unobtainable amount of cash, they faced destruction while within the immediate grasp of prosperity.

This situation gave me no end of concern, but I am proud to say that I sponsored a bill setting up a program for direct loans to small industries and mercantile establishments, the principles of which have been enacted into statute law. To-day relief to small industry is available, yet the passage of that law need not necessarily cost the United States Government one cent over and above administrative costs.

The success of this bill leads me to the belief—and I propose to continue my study of the subject—that a permanent program for industrial and mercantile relief against business "rainy days" is feasible. Meanwhile, Connecticut industries and business establishments are reaping a muchneeded and deserving benefit.

Connecticut agriculture, especially in my own district, is made up principally of leaf-tobacco growing and milk production. The Seventy-third Congress has been mindful of their needs. With the permission of my distinguished friend and coworker, Congressman Kerr, I had the honor of writing portions of the bill which is graced by his name—the Kerr tobacco bill. This bill, in my opinion, places in the hands of the Connecticut River Valley tobacco growers the instrumentality by which they can, for the first time, work out their production and marketing problems.

It is based upon a new theory and naturally must be considered in a degree an experiment, but it is one of great promise. After it has been in operation for 1 year we shall be in a better position to determine in what respects it needs expansion and where modification is suggested. I am particularly interested in this problem, and look forward to the acquisition of much valuable information on the subject in the months to come.

The great spread between the prices which milk producers of my district have been receiving for the product and the prices which consumers have been paying for milk has long had my attention. Disclosure that there is unquestionably a Milk Trust operating in the United States, creating monopoly which has crushed the producer and wrung heavy profit at the expense of the consumers, prompted me to introduce a resolution which, with your cooperation, passed both Houses of Congress, calling for a Nation-wide inquiry by the Federal Trade Commission. My office has received scores of letters from milk producers the country over subscribing to this inquiry and citing the benefits certain to accrue to Connecticut producers and consumers through this, another action of the new-deal Congress.

Common to agricultural, industrial, and mercantile workers has been the problem of maintaining the homes which represent, in most instances, a lifetime of saving and of planning. The backwash of old-deal principles and theories of government was, as you can readily imagine, disastrous to States such as Connecticut. From the home owners of the once thriving communities of my district came plaintive calls for aid to keep the family roof overhead, and this Congress answered that call with the Home Owners' Loan Act. More recently, and in line with the policy of rounding out our social program, we have enacted the housing bill, with its multiple benefits to home owners, building trades, the durable-goods industries, and so forth.

The unbridled speculation and the securities-market manipulation made possible by the baseless encouragement of the Hoover administration, "Prosperity is just around the corner" were, as we all know, the chief contributors to the legacy of disaster that was handed down by the last administration. I have seen scores of my townspeople financially destroyed by conditions which, I am happy to say, we have legislated out of all possibility for the future. This Congress has enacted the Federal securities bill, which relegates the destructive principle, "Let the buyer beware", and institutes a new one, "Let the seller beware." No longer must an investor buy a poke in a bag. That law requires the full and frank disclosure of facts that every purchaser is entitled to have. Again rounding out a task well begun, but not left half done, Congress has passed the stock-exchange control bill, a measure that rips up by the roots the basic vices of stock-market machinations and insures legitimate trading under the watchful eye of the Government. This subject is, we must all concede, a very large one. As a member of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, I have been charged with a responsibility, which I gladly accept, of inquiring deeply into this and other financial matters that affect so many of our people. I feel that the broad groundwork of information that we have acquired, as members of that committee, will serve us in good stead in our future considerations of these subjects.

It was not only those whose financial inclination led them into the field of speculation who suffered from the financial upheaval of the modern "dark age." The conservative and frugal depositors in many banks thought to be sound were dealt a crushing blow, as great a blow as those who had turned to the stock market for quick profits. We have made some progress in the direction of relieving those depositors through the so-called "bank pay-off" bill, which permits Federal purchase of assets of closed banks, but the most important step taken, in my opinion, in the history of banking is the bill adopted by this Congress for insuring bank deposits. The Federal Deposit Insurance Act opens new vistas for study on the part of those who recognize the importance of a sound banking structure.

No words of mine are necessary to tell of the benefits that have accrued to the people of my district through the many direct relief agencies. Hundreds of boys, the sons of the finest parents in the land, were saved from a condition too close to vagrancy through the Civilian Conservation Corps, which has built strong and healthy bodies and minds for many of our youths; the C.W.A. and the F.E.R.A. have given jobs to hundreds who walk the streets of my district with heads uplifted, enabled to earn an honest week's pay by the toil they have been eager to expend; the National Recovery Act has placed industry and business on a sound footing, has wiped out competitive abuses, has scotched child labor for all time and has insured a decent wage.

What has the new deal meant to Connecticut?

The answer is simple: It has instituted a forward march on the part of Connecticut business and industry back on the road to prosperity; it has fed the hungry; given work to the jobless; constructed parks, highways, bridges, and public buildings in my State; it has guaranteed the investor and the depositor against the onslaught of special interests; it has been beneficent to the tobacco grower and the milk producer; it has bolstered the greatest bulwark of our national life by saving the homes of thousands; it has restored the American Government to the American people where it rightfully belongs and from whose custody it should never again be wrested.

PROPOSED DRAINAGE LEGISLATION

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, there are on the Consent Calendar and also on the Union Calendar several bills reported from the Committee on Agriculture by myself, which I have discussed with you—one in particular with regard to proposed drainage legislation, H.R. 8389.

Mr. Speaker, you will remember in our conference a few days ago you very kindly expressed the thought we could probably bring this bill up soon under suspension of the rules because Congress would be in session about 1 week longer. For this consideration, I am thankful to the Speaker. It is now evident, however, that this session will close very shortly, and I wish to thank the Speaker and to say that under the prevailing conditions I realize the Senate would hardly have time to pass the bill even though we should be successful in passing it at this time in the House, and I shall not ask the Speaker to recognize me to suspend the rules, because I think it would be a vain thing to do as we all know the legislative complications that confront us this near adjournment. I thank the Speaker, however, for this privilege and assure him that I appreciate it very much.

Indeed, I am grateful for this opportunity to say a few parting words to my colleagues as we approach the end of the second session of the Seventy-third Congress.

This has been a busy and memorable session. We have made history. Constructive and far-reaching legislation has been enacted. The Members of this House have their different views and they are entitled to them. Nature and necessity so decree. However, generally speaking, Congress has followed the leadership of our great and beloved President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and cooperated with the administration in the heroic efforts of administering relief to the distressed, helping those who are deserving, attacking depression from many sides, and gradually, yet surely, restoring prosperity throughout the land we love.

It is not my purpose to describe conditions as they existed prior and up to March 4, 1933, when this administration came into power. Those critical times are deeply impressed upon us all. We all agree that we were faced then and have since been faced with some of the most complex and perplexing economic problems that ever confronted this confidence is putting it mildly.

unprecedented depression and on the verge of an economic collapse. Drastic and quick action was imperative. Our President met the situation with dauntless courage and matchless leadership. Congress supported him with devotion and wisdom. Emergency legislation was fashioned and speedily passed.

During the special session of the Seventy-third Congress we passed, and there was enacted into law, some 12 major constructive administration measures.

The second session of this Seventy-third Congress, which will soon close, has enacted some 25 major administration measures.

Naturally, many of these measures are classed as "emergency legislation." More permanent and far-reaching legislation is in the making. Necessarily, it will require time, talent, constructive thought, and united efforts to effectuate this program. To illustrate what I mean: At the beginning of this administration agriculture was the first industry to be considered by Congress. No one doubts that the millions of dollars that have gone directly to the struggling farmer throughout the country saved our country from complete economic chaos. The relief granted the taxpayers and debt-burdened home and land owners is one of the brightest spots in the achievements of this administration. However, there is yet much more work to be done and many adjustments to be made in the operation of the governmental machinery used in bringing about the desired results set forth in the legislation already enacted.

If we are to have a planned industry, we must have a well-rounded and planned agriculture, not only as to production but also as to marketing and distribution, for agriculture to survive.

These complete plans have not as yet definitely taken shape, but I know some of the greatest minds and the best friends of agriculture are working day and night to perfect these plans.

The same thing applies to our monetary system, banking reforms, Government guaranty of bank deposits, recovery plans, loans to small industries, labor problems, unemployment insurance and old-age pensions, civil employment and public-works construction, reforestation, flood control, fertilizer and power at Muscle Shoals, regulation of stock and commodity exchanges, including cotton, social reforms, foreign trade and international relationships, cancelation of foreign debts, tariff, veterans' legislation, military and naval defense, Federal funds for schools and roads, readjustment and economy in government, and like matters of great concern to us all. The Seventy-fourth Congress will be a momentous one; and I hope that if not all at least a large majority of the present Democratic Members will be returned here to give the benefit of their experience and knowledge to the tasks ahead of us.

The American people throughout this Nation appreciate the grave responsibilities resting upon Congress and full well realize that it will take wise, patriotic, unselfish, and united efforts to restore this country to normalcy.

When and how, the future will reveal. Yet we all are confident that we are on the road and will go forward and approach or reach the goal by carrying on and following through with the general policies of the Roosevelt administration.

Sincerely and deeply I feel that our efforts will be rewarded and appreciated by our people whom we have tried to serve.

It would be a trespass upon your time for me to review the accomplishments of this Congress and this administration. Permit me in passing, however, to say to our Speaker, our leader, our committee chairmen, and other leaders, the members of my committee, and the Membership generally that we have fought a good fight and kept the faith.

My colleagues, always will I cherish our associations and value most highly the friendships here freighted and laden with so many pleasant memories.

You have in many, many ways testified to your friend-ship and confidence in me. To say that I am appreciative is putting it mildly.

With your permission, may I briefly give a synopsis of my record during this present administration and some facts and figures incident thereto.

The measures I have sponsored, the bills I have introduced, the efforts I have made, the positions I have taken, and the votes I have cast are matters of record to which I invite your attention.

Today I am the second ranking member on the great Agriculture Committee of the House of Representatives, which has done as much for the country as any other committee in Congress. This exclusive and powerful committee is composed of 25 Members of Congress. Because the work of the Committee on Agriculture is of such magnitude and the duties are so exacting, no Democratic member of it is permitted to serve on any other committee.

Since March 4, 1933, when President Roosevelt announced his general recovery program, there is no committee that has had more work or played a more important part in the passage of legislation than the Committee on Agriculture.

After the various bills and relief measures were steered through the House by the Committee on Agriculture and passed by the Senate and it was necessary for the House and the Senate to iron out their differences before sending the legislation to the President for his signature, I was in every instance selected by the Speaker of the House, Mr. Rainey, as one of the House conferees.

Some of the more important measures, where a conference by either branch of Congress was demanded before the measures were signed by the Speaker of the House, the President of the Senate, and the President of the United States, on which I served as a conferee were Agricultural Adjustment Act; crop production and marketing; refinancing of farm debts; 1934 crop production loans; amendments to Agricultural Adjustment Act to include cattle and other commodities as basic commodities, Bankhead Cotton Control Act, and amendments to Agricultural Adjustment Act to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic commodities.

In September 1933 I was selected by the Southern Cotton Conference, held in the city of Washington, as one of the nine men to present the facts to Mr. Roosevelt and the Secretary of Agriculture in an effort to have the Government pay to the cotton farmers of the South at least 10 cents per pound for their cotton. This committee worked for days on this and finally their efforts were crowned with success, and last fall the Government guaranteed and paid at least 10 cents per pound for cotton and gave cotton farmers the privilege of the cotton-option plan. The cotton plow-up checks and the rental benefits, whereby all of us, either directly or indirectly, have been benefited, were the direct results of the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

I have worked in season and out of season to raise the level of agricultural commodity prices for the benefit of the producers and to furnish ready money for the relief of agriculture in general, for the crop producers, for the taxpayers of the various levee and drainage districts throughout the country, and for long-time loans at a low rate of interest for those whose homes and farms were mortgaged.

As chairman of a subcommittee I handled and reported some of the most important pieces of legislation considered by the full Committee on Agriculture during this administration, as shown by the printed hearings.

Never in the history of this Nation has any administration tried to do for agriculture what this Roosevelt administration has done for the benefit of the farmers. By virtue of the program Mississippi alone has received cash benefits amounting to over $10,000,000, paid the farmers as of March 31, 1934, for the cotton plow-up under the cotton-reduction program of 1933.

The 10 counties comprising the Second Congressional District of Mississippi, which I have the honor to represent in Congress, has up to April 1, 1934, received more than a million and a quarter dollars in plow-up checks under the reduction program of 1933, as follows:

Benton $44, 432, 13 De Soto 158, 647, 15

Lafayette	$79, 273, 41
Marshall	140, 476, 26
Panola	157, 440. 99
Tallahatchie	273, 457, 86
Tate	105, 111, 87
Tippah	112, 911. 15
Union	105, 939, 69
Yalobusha	52, 018. 81

In addition to this amount, Mississippi, under the reduction program of 1934, wherein rental benefits are to be paid, will receive more than $13,000,000. The payment of these rental checks to the individual farmers began in May 1934 and will continue throughout the year, and each county will receive its proportionate share in this program, just as was done under the plow-up program.

These benefits, of course, do not include the benefits derived from the Government paying at least 10 cents per pound to the producer for his cotton and giving the farmer the benefit of the cotton-option plan.

There has also been recently established in the Second Congressional District of Mississippi a national forest reservation with a potential acreage of at least 200,000 acres, known as the "Holly Springs National Forest." There is already under contract for purchase for this particular unit about 50,000 acres, amounting to approximately $250,000.

The Government is developing this particular forest unit as rapidly as possible.

Mississippi today has six national forest units resulting in the expenditure of several million dollars in Mississippi. The establishment and purchase of these national forests throughout the United States is within the jurisdiction of the National Forest Reservation Commission; the development of the forest units is the work of the Federal Forest Service. The Commission's membership is officially selected and consists of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, two United States Senators, and two Congressmen. I am the Democratic Congressman on this National Forest Reservation Commission.

Since I have been a member of this Commission, no State in the Union has received more direct benefits under this farreaching program than has Mississippi.

According to the present plans of this Commission, the purchase of worn-out and submarginal lands, the development and reforestation of the forest units, the erosion and conservation work, and the efforts to control the flood waters in the upper watersheds of our section of Mississippi, have just begun. I spent most of the summer and fall last year working on this program. Far-reaching and permanent results have already been obtained.

The Second District of Mississippi today has more C.C.C. camps located within it than any congressional district in the State of Mississippi. It is the only district in Mississippi that has camps located on privately owned land, the policy being to locate these C.C.C. camps on Government- and State-owned lands throughout the United States.

The beneficial results to the boys themselves, their dependents, and the communities in which the camps are located are self-evident.

Results in Congress are obtained by virtue of the Member occupying key positions. Senority as well as ability, coupled with a Congressman's standing with his colleagues and associates, place him in these key positions. Length of service is as necessary as the kind of service rendered in order to really register in Congress. I have served my apprenticeship here and with modesty yet with pride, I say I have grown in this field of endeavor.

The record shows I have had some key positions in helping to shape the policies of this administration.

Whether Congress is in session or not most of us devote our entire time to the duties incident to the office. The various types of legislation demanding our thought, our committee work and activities on the floor of the House, our contacts with the many different departments of government ever increasing, our office work and personal attention to the many, many inquiries and requests of our constituents, continuously keep us busy. I have always been on the job and tried to do the best I could.

My record is-results, not promises. [Applause.]

THE MILITARY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 439

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby authorized to expend not exceeding the sum of $20,000 in addition to the amount authorized to be expended by House Resolution 284, Seventy-third Congress, second session, to continue the investigation authorized and directed by House Resolution 275, Seventy-third Congress, second session, such additional amount to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by the committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much is this appropriation?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The Committee on Military Affairs was authorized by the Rules Committee to conduct an investigation, and in the original resolution there was a limitation of $10,000 for expenses. The Committee on Military Affairs appointed a subcommittee and this subcommittee has been carrying on an investigation behind closed doors for more than 4 months. They have disclosures sufficient to warrant them to go before the Rules Committee again and ask for an additional appropriation of $20,000. The House passed that resolution. Yesterday, the subcommittee, which is composed of 4 Democrats, 3 Republicans, and 1 member of the Farmer-Labor Party, appeared before the Committee on Accounts.

A scandal that will arouse the people of the country and, in all probability, open the doors of penitentiaries to Government officials will undoubtedly be the result of this investigation.

If the Members of this House could have heard those who constitute the investigating committee disclose their findings to date they would realize the necessity of this appropriation.

I have been a member of the Committee on Accounts for 8 years, and never before have I heard members of an investigating committee submit such a statement. Of course, the House is entitled to an explanation, but I am, in my opinion, limited in disclosing the findings of the committee in its work up to the present time. I do, however, feel justified in saying that this committee has been in executive session for over 4 months. Its organization followed the investigation by the War Department and by the Federal grand jury in Washington, which failed to result in the indictment of anyone or the court-martialing of any officers of the Army. At the outset the members of the investigating committee felt there was little to the investigation, but gradually they secured leads which developed sensational facts. There are four expert accountants of the Comptroller General's staff, as well as a representative of the Attorney General, now assigned to the committee.

I might go further and say that Government agents are accused of receiving retainers from firms and corporations that have been selling supplies to the Government.

This investigating committee has disclosed that by requiring the War Department to change specifications for the purchase of supplies in the last 4 months it has already saved the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars. It has been examining specifications before contracts for supplies are let and has changed specifications which resulted in competition, whereas if the original specifications had been permitted to stand some particular individual or firm would have had practically a monopoly on the business, which, of course, would have meant an exorbitant price to the Government for the supplies needed.

It so happens that there was called to my attention a few weeks ago the specifications for the purchase of fire extinguishers. The manner in which these specifications were originally drawn was such that they favored a New York firm. I demanded at the time that the specifications ba changed so as to permit all firms engaged in the industry an equal opportunity to bid, threatening to take the matter to the President if the specifications were not changed. The specifications were changed to the satisfaction of the firms complaining. That ended my connection with the case, and I have never taken the trouble to learn who was the low bidder. This is simply cited to show how business was being conducted by the War Department.

When you take into consideration that hundreds of millions of dollars are spent annually for the purchase of supplies by the War Department you will readily understand what this committee is confronted with in its investigation.

The results so far disclosed by this committee warrant this House in passing this resolution without delay. When men like Mr. McSwain, chairman of the committee, Mr. James, Mr. Goss, Mr. Rogers of New Hampshire, Mr. Kvale, Mr. Montet, and others, who have long served on the committee handling the affairs of the Military Establishment, say that they are utterly amazed at the revelations, you can realize its importance.

The investigating committee is nonpartisan, consisting of 4 Democrats, 3 Republicans, and 1 member of the Farmer-Labor Party. The investigations not only apply to the present but years past. It is the duty of the Congress to give our colleagues all the support necessary in order that the guilty might be punished.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes. I am sure my friend, who always fights corruption, will be for this resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. I am in hearty accord with everything that this committee is doing. It is doing splendid work. If it can accomplish what it started out to accomplish, this sum will be a mere bagatelle. I think this is one committee whose investigation is well worth while, and every dollar it needs we ought to give to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much will it cost? Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The investigation will cost $30,000 in all. We have already given them $10,000 and this provides for $20,000 additional.

Mr. Speaker, President Roosevelt has created the Procurement Division in the Treasury Department. Its purpose is to concentrate under one head the purchase of supplies for the Government. As yet its powers do not extend to the War and Navy Departments. The President, in my opinion, should not hesitate a day to issue the proper Executive order and place the purchasing division of every Government agency in the Procurement Division. It would save the Government millions. I would not only give this power to the Procurement Division but I would go further and give the Director of Procurement the last word in all contracts and specifications, including ships for the Navy and ordnance for the Army. The sooner all such activities are concentrated under one head the better it will be for the taxpayer.

Mr. BLANTON. It is delving into a subject that involves hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. They have already saved the Government several hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolu-

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RESIGNATION FROM A CONFERENCE COMMITTEE

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I am on the conference committee on the archives bill, H.R. 8910. That conference committee will meet in a few minutes. I have another meeting to attend at that time, and I ask unanimous consent that I may resign as one of the conferees on the archives bill.

be accepted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Secrest] in the place of Mr. WARREN; and the Clerk will notify the Senate of the resignation and the
